Mr. Hutton: Following a stroke patients are entitled to expect that an appropriate service will be provided, but that service will not necessarily be within a specialist stroke unit. The organisation of health authorities services, including those for people who have had a stroke, and the manner in which they are delivered are matters for the health authority, taking account of the needs of the local population and the priorities set for the use of the available resources.

In the recent guidance which we issued on "Commissioning in the New NHS" in October 1998 the importance of care pathways was stressed. Our proposals for "Pathways" of care will link primary care, secondary care and social care where appropriate. We emphasised in this guidance that care pathways would be developed to cover a range of preventative diagnostic, palliative, rehabilitative and supporting caring components of an integrated programme of care. The care and treatments of patients with stroke provides an example of how care pathways can work in practice.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (1) is his estimate of (a) the amount of money and (b) the percentage of the NHS budget spent annually over the last five years on stroke treatment and rehabilitation; [66838]

(2) how many stroke patients were treated in the NHS outside specialist stroke units in the last year for which figures are available; [66840]

(3) how many specialist stroke units there are and how many patients were treated in them in the last year for which figures are available; [66841]

(4) what is his estimate of the effectiveness of specialist stroke units. [66842]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available. The organisation of health services, including services for people who have had a stroke, and the manner in which they are delivered are matters for the health authority, taking account of the needs of the local population and the priorities set for the use of the available resources.

Cardiac Disease (Hospital Waiting Times)

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what targets he has set for the maximum possible waiting time for operations to deal with life-threatening cardiac conditions. [67015]

Mr. Denham: We have set no new targets for maximum waiting times for operations to deal with life-threatening cardiac conditions. However, an external reference group is currently working with the Department of Health to develop a national service framework covering all aspects of National Health Service care for people with coronary heart disease.

Bone Marrow Transplants

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many registered bone marrow donors there are; [67134]

(2) what is the average cost of a bone marrow transplant; [67133]

(3) how many people are currently waiting for bone marrow transplants. [67135]

Mr. Hutton: According to the recently published "New NHS 1998 Reference Costs" the average unit cost of a bone marrow graft is £10,600.

There are approximately 381,000 potential bone marrow donors registered currently on the two bone marrow registers operating in England. The British bone marrow register holds around 91,000 names and the Anthony Nolan Bone Marrow Trust has approaching 290,000.

Figures for the number of people currently waiting for a bone marrow transplant are not kept centrally.

Shopmobility Schemes

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support his Department is providing to shopmobility schemes in the current financial year. [67144]

Mr. Hutton: The National Federation of Shopmobility, which is the umbrella body for local shopmobility schemes, is not receiving any financial support under Section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 during the current financial year from the Department. The National Federation of Shopmobility has submitted two applications under the Section 64 grant scheme for the financial year commencing 1 April 1999 and these are currently under consideration.

SCOTLAND

Glasgow City Council

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what form of financial support has been made by the Scottish Office to Glasgow City Council to pay for a feasibility study into its proposed mass stock transfer initiative. [63324]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 10 December 1998]: Glasgow City Council has been granted consent to borrow £1.065 million in order to undertake feasibility work under the new housing partnerships initiative. Loan charges support for this borrowing will be available from The Scottish Office.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66206]

Mr. Dewar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4.

Hunterston B Nuclear Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the emergency declared at the Hunterston B nuclear plant on 27 December. [66426]

Mr. Dewar: In order to operate their cooling systems all nuclear power stations need access to either the Grid or to their own power sources. As a result of the severe weather that affected the West of Scotland on 26–27 December 1998 connection to all 4 power Grid lines to Hunterston B was lost shortly after midnight. Staff safely shut down both the reactors at Hunterston B. Back-up generators were activated automatically to prevent overheating.

The generators were shut down when the Grid connection was restored. However, they did not restart automatically when the Grid connection was lost for a second time. An on-site emergency was declared early on the morning of 27 December. Management at the station took that decision to ensure that additional technical staffing resources were available to deal with the on-site consequences of the power loss as rapidly as possible. By this time the reactors had been safely shut down for nearly 11 hours. There was no damage to, or release of radioactivity from the plant.

Health and Safety Executive (HSE) inspectors are investigating the incident and will report on it in their Quarterly Statement of Nuclear Incidents at Nuclear Installations; and their report to the Local Community Liaison Committee.

I have asked HSE to send copies of these documents to my hon. Friend when they are published.

Drugs

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each project of over £10,000 the programmes funded by (i) Scotland Against Drugs and (ii) the Drugs Challenge Fund in 1997–98 indicating the programmes of over £10,000 which have been commissioned under these headings in financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; what is the total proposed budget for (a) SAD and (b) the Drugs Challenge Fund for each of the next three financial years; what are the running costs; and what percentage of total funds will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65939]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Funding of £1 million per annum has been made available to Scotland Against Drugs, including £0.5 million for the Drugs Challenge Fund for the years 1998–99 to 2000–01. Running costs for this financial year are estimated at £0.250 million. These funds will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Information on programmes over £10,000 is set out in the tables.

Rough Sleepers Initiative

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of all allocations of money over £10,000 made under the rough sleepers initiative in the financial year 1997–98 indicating allocations over £10,000 already made under the initiative for financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; what is the total available under the initiative for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65953]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The breakdown of allocations of over £10,000 made under the Rough Sleepers Initiative on 1997–98 and 1998–99, including allocations for the year 1999–2000, was as follows:

A further £14 million has been identified for the Rough Sleepers Initiative over the 2 years, 2000–01 and 2001–02. All of these funds will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Mental Health Development Fund

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each project of over £10,000 the programmes (a) funded from the Mental Health Development Fund in 1997–98 and (b) commissioned by his Department to be funded from the Mental Health Development Fund in (i) 1998–99 and (ii) 1999–2000; what is the total proposed budget for such projects for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this he estimates will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65932]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The first allocation made from the Mental Health Development Fund issued during financial year 1998–99. Awards over £10,000 in that year were as follows:

Health board	Project	1998–99 Funding (£)

Note:
Invitations have issued for bids for funds for later years

As health related expenditure the Fund will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Crime (Research)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of all allocations of money over £10,000 for research projects into crime, the causes of crime, the prison system, the police or the criminal justice system; if he will give the allocations over £10,000 already made for such research projects for financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; if he will give the total funds available for each of the next three financial years for such projects; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65812]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Research on crime, the causes of crime, the prison system, the police and the criminal justice system is commissioned by The Scottish Office from its criminal law research vote and, in part, from the social work research vote (offender social work services). Funds available from these research votes over the next three years are shown in the following table. From July 1999, these funds will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Local Care Partnership Scheme

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of all allocations of money over £10,000 made under the Local Care Partnership scheme in the financial year 1997–98; if he will list the allocations over £10,000 already made under this scheme for the financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; if he will give (a) the amount allocated to running costs and (b) the total funds available for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65811]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The allocations over £10,000 made from the Local Care Partnership Scheme in financial year 1998–99 were as follows:

Health board area/project	1998–99 funding
Argyll and Clyde
Strategic approach to joint commissioning of addiction services—Joint Development Officer	34,000
Co-operation in Levern Valley	64,000

Allocations made over £10,000 for financial year 1999–2000 were as follows:

Heath board area/project	1999–2000 funding
Borders
Hitting the targets	51,000
Lanarkshire
Services for homeless people	55,000

The Scheme did not operate in 1997–98. The Scheme will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Social Inclusion Partnerships

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of all allocations of money over £10,000 made under the Social Inclusion Partnerships in the financial year 1997–98; if he will state the allocations over £10,000 already made under this programme for the financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; if he will give (a) the amount allocated to running costs and (b) the total funds available for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65808]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 18 January 1999]: No allocations have yet been made to Social Inclusion Partnerships. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 13 November that he would allocate £18 million of the £48 million available over the next 3 years to 3 new Social Inclusion Partnerships in Drumchapel, Greater Pollok and Blantyre/North Hamilton when they submit detailed strategies which demonstrate satisfactorily that they can meet their objectives. They have been asked to do so by 15 February. Further decisions on the designation of Social Inclusion Partnerships have yet to be made.

The funds earmarked for Social Inclusion Partnerships will be included within the Scottish Administration's Assigned Budget and will be subject to decisions of the Scottish Parliament.

Contingency Fund

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current amount of his Department's emergency reserve or contingency fund; and what amount he proposes it should be in each of next three financial years. [65813]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Scottish Office does not have and has no plans for an emergency reserve or contingency fund. After devolution it will be for the Scottish Parliament to decide whether it wishes to set aside resources for this purpose.

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of projects receiving assistance under the New Opportunities Fund in the current financial year; what funds have already been earmarked (a) in total and (b) by project where already allocated for the next three financial years; and what percentage will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65796]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: National Lottery funding is not subject to annuality. Current estimates of cash allocations for the first three initiatives over the next four years, and of the percentages allocated for Scottish projects, are as follows:

Initiative	Total allocation (£ million)	Percentage allocation to Scotland
Healthy Living Centres	300	11.5
ICT training for teachers and librarians	300	10.2
Out of school hours learning and child care	400	11.5

The New Opportunities Fund will be inviting applications under these initiatives over the next few months. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport has also published a consultation paper on three further possible initiatives to be funded by the New Opportunities Fund over the next four years. £400 million is expected to be available for these initiatives, but its division among them and the percentages to be allocated to Scotland have not yet been determined. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will make an announcement shortly on the involvement of Scottish Ministers in National Lottery distribution after devolution.

Empty Homes Initiative

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of all allocations of money over £10,000 made under the Empty Homes Initiative in the financial year 1997–98; if he will give the allocations over £10,000 already made under this programme for financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; if he will give (a) the amount allocated to running costs and (b) the total funds available for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65801]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The breakdown of allocations of over £10,000 made under the Empty Homes Initiative in 1997–98 and 1998–99 was as follows:

Local authority	1997–98	1998–99	Total
Aberdeen City Council	—	45,610	45,610
Aberdeenshire Council	31,066	544,000	575,066

West Dunbartonshire Council	30,000	149,000	179,000
West Lothian Council	110,000	425,000	535,000

The running costs associated with the Empty Homes Initiative are covered within the Scottish Office administration budget. Over the next three financial years, 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02, a further sum of up to £15 million has been identified for the Initiative and local authorities have been asked to submit proposals by 12 February. All Empty Homes Initiative funds will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications have been received to date under the Empty Homes Initiative broken down by (a) council and (b) amount. [66267]

Mr. Macdonald: Thirty-one local authorities have applied to date for funding through the Empty Homes Initiative. The applications, broken down by council and amount, are as follows:

Local authority	Applications for funding in 1997–98	Applications for funding in 1998–99

Sixteen authorities were awarded a total of £2 million for 1997–98 and 27 authorities were awarded a total of £7 million for 1998–99. In November 1998 local authorities were invited to submit applications by 12 February 1999 for funding in the three years from 1999–2000 to 2001–02.

From 1 July 1999 the Empty Homes Initiative will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Challenge Fund

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of allocations of money over £10,000 made from the Challenge Fund in the financial year 1997–98, indicating allocations over £10,000 already made from the fund for financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; what is the total available under the fund for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65952]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The information is set out in the tables. The allocations shown are fully committed for those projects that were successful in the 1997–98 Central Challenge Fund and the 1997–98 and 1998–99 Transport Challenge Funds. These resources will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Non-custodial Offenders

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a break-down of all allocations of money over £10,000 made under the non-custodial offenders services scheme in the financial year 1997–98; if he will give the allocations over £10,000 already made under this scheme for the financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; if he will give (a) the amount allocated to running costs and (b) the total funds available for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65795]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The table shows the allocation of grants made to local authorities in 1997–98 and 1998–99 by Central Government for the provision of criminal justice social work services. Allocation of grant for 1999–2000 has yet to be made. Most of the grant allocated to authorities is used for revenue funding: the capital element is very small. The total funds available for criminal justice social work services in 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 are £40.8 million, £42.8 million, and £44 million respectively. All of the funding for criminal justice social work will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Millennium Festival Fund

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those projects which have been allocated funding from the Millennium Festival Fund (a) in the current financial year, (b) for 1999–2000 and (c) for 2000–01; what is the total moneys available from the fund in each of these years; and what percentage will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65805]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Millennium Festival Fund has been established to help the nation to celebrate the Millennium. Like other National Lottery expenditure, it is not subject to annuality. Each of the National Lottery distributing bodies operating in Scotland—the Scottish Sports Council, the Scottish Arts Council, the National Lottery Charities Board, the National Heritage Memorial Fund and the Millennium Commission—has contributed towards a Scottish fund of some £10.4 million.

Applications for large grants, over £5,000, were invited in May last year, with a closing date of late October. Details of the successful projects will be announced late next month. A further funding round, aimed at local communities and small organisations seeking grants of £500-£5,000, is expected to be launched shortly. It will be operational until June 2000.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will shortly make an announcement on the involvement of Scottish Ministers in National Lottery distribution after devolution.

New Deal for Communities

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of all allocations of money over £10,000 made under the New Deal for Communities in the financial year 1997–98; if he will give the allocations over £10,000 already made under this programme for financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; if he will give (a) the amount allocated to running costs and (b) the total funds available for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65799]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Working for Communities and Listening to Communities programmes were introduced earlier this financial year. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in May 1998 that two initial pathfinders would be established in Greater Easterhouse (Glasgow) and Wester Hailes (Edinburgh) under the Working for Communities programme; I expect the total cost of the two pathfinders in the current year to be between £250,000 and £300,000. An annual allocation of up to £200,000 is available to support each of the two pathfinders for the following three years.

Funding of £315,000 is being made available to support the development of New Community Schools in this financial year. Funding for this initiative will in future years be made available through the Excellence Fund for Schools.

A total of £3.3 million is available to support the Working for Communities and Listening to Communities programmes in each of the next two financial years, rising to £6.3 million in 2001–02. I have already announced the broad objectives for these two programmes and I expect to make a further announcement on the allocation of funds under these programmes before the end of March.

The running costs associated with the programmes are covered within the Scottish Office administration budget, and the funds earmarked for the Working for Communities and Listening to Communities programmes will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Transport Projects

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the transport projects of over £100,000 for which contracts have been signed which will require public funds in each of the next three financial years; what will be the annual cost of each of these projects for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of proposed spending on (a) road, (b) rail, (c) air, (d) sea and (e) other transport for this period has thus been allocated. [65928]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information on individual contracts entered into by local authorities is not held centrally.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each project of over £10,000 the moneys he has provided to (a) local authorities, (b) other groups and (c) projects commissioned by his Department for energy efficiency projects in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000; what is the total proposed budget for energy efficiency projects for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65937]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 18 January 1999]: In 1997–98 local authorities were allocated £2.5 million to improve the energy efficiency of their housing stock. In 1998–99 the Warm Deal has provided local authorities with £3 million, Home Energy Efficiency Installers with £1.75 million and Scottish Homes with £0.5 million to improve home energy efficiency across all tenures. An extra £1 million has been made available but has not yet been allocated. The budget for the Warm Deal in 1999–2000 will be £6 million. These funds will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament. Local authorities may use other resources for energy efficiency projects but no details are held centrally.

Innovation Fund for Child Health

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of all allocations of money over £10,000 made under the Innovation Fund for Child Health in the financial year 1997–98; if he will give the allocations over £10,000 already made under this programme for financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; if he will give (a) the amount allocated to running costs and (b) the total funds available for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65814]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: I announced details of the Innovation Fund for children's services in November 1998. No funds have been allocated from the fund for the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99.

The total amount made available in the next three financial years is as follows:

	£ million
1999–2000	2
2001–02	3

No funds have been allocated to running costs.

As health related expenditure the Fund will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Child Care Projects

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown by (a) local authority and (b) policy objective of the money made available for child care projects in financial years 1992–93 to 1997–98; what money has been allocated for child care by policy heading and local authority in financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; what are the proposed total amounts to be made available for child care over each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65927]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Grant Aided Expenditure (GAE) for children's services provided by local authorities for the years 1992–93 to 1999–2000 is shown in Table 1. It is for authorities to determine the proportion that may be spent on child care projects.

In addition to this funding, following the publication of the Green Paper "Meeting the Childcare Challenge: a Childcare Strategy for Scotland" (Cm 3958) an additional £4.7 million has been made available in 1998–99 to develop and support child care generally. Of this, £3.8 million was allocated to local authorities. The breakdown by authority is given in Table 2. Also in 1998–99, an extra £515,000 was allocated to Scottish Enterprise and £50,000 to Highland and Islands Enterprise to support the child care strategy.

Following the Comprehensive Spending Review, a further £49 million will be available over the three year period covering 1999–2000 to 2001–02 to support implementation of the child care strategy. £33 million of this will be allocated to local authorities: £5.75 million in 1999–2000, £13.75 million in 2000–01, and £13.75 million in 2001–02. In addition, £42 million will be made available to local authorities over 1999–2002 to expand support for families with very young children in areas of greatest need: £9 million in 1999–2000, £14 million in 2000–01, and £19 million in 2001–02. The breakdown of funding by authority for 1999–2000 is given in Columns 1 and 2 of Table 3. Decisions on allocations of funding to individual authorities in later years will be taken in due course.

A new Children's Services Development Fund totalling £36.7 million over 3 years from 1999–2000 was announced in November last year. The Fund will help provide improved advocacy for children, extension of fostering services and expansion of support for families with very young children. The first year allocations are set out in Column 3 of Table 3. Allocations for later years will be determined in due course.

This funding will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Excellence Fund

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown by (a) local authority and (b) policy objective or project over £10,000 of the money made available through the Excellence Fund to support children's learning in financial year 1997–98; what moneys have been allocated by policy objective or project or by local authority under the Excellence Fund in financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; what are the proposed total amounts to be made available under this heading for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65929]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Excellence Fund for Schools was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland on 15 July 1998. The Fund will operate for the three years 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 and comprises a Core Programme and a Special Programme. The £322 million of the Core Programme will be allocated by formulae to authorities in accordance with Scottish Office Education Circulars 4/98, 6/98 and 9/98 copies of which have been placed in the library.

£55 million will be made available under the Special Programme to support New Community Schools (£26 million), School Action Plans (£15 million) and Specialist Provision (£14 million). This money will be allocated to authorities on the basis of bids made against specific criteria. The Scottish Parliament will assume responsibility for expenditure from July.

Fishing Industry (Grants)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown detailing the value of grants of projects or groups receiving assistance by way of EU and Scottish Office grants to the fishing industry and the fish processing industry in the current financial year, individually and in total; what funds have already been earmarked (a) in total and (b) by project where already allocated for the next three financial years; and what percentage will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65797]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Under the Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance (FIFG), EC and UK funding is being made available between 1994–1999 to the fishing industry and fish processing industry in Scotland for various purposes. These funds will have been allocated before the Scottish Parliament is established. Expenditure on grants under the current EU programme is as follows:

Funds earmarked in this financial year	3,968,397
Funds already earmarked	24,996,818
Funds remaining to be awarded	3,760,358
Funds allocated to projects over the next three financial years	5,488,651

As the information required on individual projects relating to these figures is rather lengthy, I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The possibility of a successor scheme and its funding is being negotiated in the context of the Agenda 2000 proposals, but such aid will not be available before January 2000. The funding for any such scheme will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Business Growth Fund

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of all allocations of money over £10,000 made under the Business Growth Fund in the financial year 1997–98; if he will give the allocations over £10,000 already made under this programme for financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; if he will give (a) the amount allocated to running costs and (b) the total funds available for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65809]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 18 January 1999]: I intend the new Business Growth Fund to become operational from April 1999. Planned provision is: £3 million in 1999–2000, £4 million in 2000–01, and £5 million in 2001–02.

Details of the scheme, including the amount to be allocated to running costs, are currently being finalised in discussion with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I hope to be able to announce the final framework of the scheme shortly.

From July these resources will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Consort Healthcare

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what NHS properties have been sold to Consort Healthcare and for what amounts; who carried out the valuation of the properties and at what sums they were valued; what Government body or bodies were involved in the transactions; what assessment he made of the advantages of selling the properties on the open market and for what reasons he decided not to; if he will publish details of the transactions; and if he will make a statement. [65519]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Throughout the PFI process our guiding principle has been to ensure the completion of proper economic appraisals and assure the delivery of value for money at all stages of this project. Furthermore through our openness policies we have ensured that as much information as is commercially possible has been put in the public domain.

The disposal of excess sites by the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh NHS Trust has been done in such a way as to ensure that the Trust has received the proper value for the sites based on independent valuation and has been safeguarded against development gains.

In accordance with our guidance, the Trust will in due course be publishing an Addendum to their Full Business Case setting out changes between FBC approval and financial close and summarising the commercial contract in plain English. That document will detail the land values and the contractual arrangements agreed to safeguard the Trust against overage.

The sites at the City Hospital, the Princess Margaret Rose Orthopaedic Hospital and the Dental Hospital were included as a prepayment in the Private Finance Initiative (PFI) deal with Consort Healthcare. Planning restrictions reduce significantly the area of developable land at the City and Princess Margaret Rose Hospitals. The values bid by Consort were as detailed in the following Table:

Site	Value bid £ million
City Hospital	6.640
Princess Margaret Rose Hospital	3.725
Dental Hospital	0.500

The values due to the Trust will be different since the values bid for the City and Princess Margaret Rose Hospitals will be subject to an inflation uplift from August 1996 until the date on which the sites are transferred to Consort Healthcare and potentially there may be reductions in the value of the Dental Hospital due to asbestos decontamination and Section 75 planning conditions.

The estimated total value of the City and Princess Margaret Rose Hospital sites after a 3 per cent. inflation uplift is almost £12 million.

Furthermore the Trust has entered into Overage Agreements whereby additional payments will be made to the Trust if, in the case of the City and Princess Margaret Rose Hospitals, the construction of houses is in excess of the anticipated number or the use of any part of the site is changed from residential to retail or business use; and, in the case of all three sites, if any undeveloped part of the site is sold for profit.

The values bid by Consort Healthcare were considered by the Trust to compare favourably to the values prepared by the District Valuer and the Trust's property adviser (Ryden International). The District Valuer and Ryden International's values are detailed in the table.

£ million

Site	District valuer	Ryden International
City Hospital	6.25–7.25	6.80
Dental Hospital	0.50–0.55	0.35

The disposal of surplus sites within a PFI deal is the responsibility of the Trust. It is a generally accepted principle of PFI that such sites are included in the PFI deal. The average time taken to dispose of surplus NHS property is about 16 months. Where a site is not sold prior to becoming vacant the NHS has to bear the continuing costs of security and maintenance. I am content that when considered alongside the risks transferred to Consort Healthcare and the reduction in interest charges generated by the prepayment, the Trust has, as demonstrated in the Full Business Case approved by The Scottish Office and HM Treasury, achieved best value for money.

Research Grants

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown detailing the value of grants made to higher education establishments for the purchase of new research equipment in the current financial year, individually and in total; what funds have already been earmarked (a) in total and (b) by project where already allocated for the next three financial years; and what percentage will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65798]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Scottish Higher Education Funding Council (SHEFC) makes research grants to institutions to support a basic research capability in Scottish higher education institutions. These grants enable institutions to maintain and develop their research infrastructure. All SHEFC funding will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

The total value of SHEFC research grants in 1998–99 is £118.2 million. Most of this will be allocated to individual institutions selectively on the basis of the quality of research in institutions, as determined by the findings of the UK-wide Research Assessment Exercise. The allocation of this formula research grant (including an element for equipment) to each individual institution is set out in the table.

The SHEFC research allocations include a contribution to the UK-wide Joint Research Equipment Initiative, conducted jointly by the Higher Education Funding Councils and the Research Councils. The Council allocated £2.85 million to higher education institutions under this scheme in 1998–99 with joint funders providing a further £3.68 million. (Investments by the Research Councils and joint funders allocated a further £2 million to Scottish higher education institutions in 1998–99 under the JREI.) The Council allocations to higher education institutions are detailed in the table.

The total sums earmarked for SHEFC funding for the next three years are £588 million, £607 million and £640 million. The Council is currently working on final allocations for 1999–2000, including the split between teaching and research, and will publish details in March. However, included within that total is a new £23 million (£3/5/15 million) component which has been specifically earmarked to improve infrastructure in areas of research excellence aligned to the needs of the Scottish economy.

The only other major public investment in new research equipment is the Joint Infrastructure Fund, which will invest £600 million over the next two years. This collaborative UK-wide competition is being funded jointly by the UK Research Councils and the Wellcome Trust. The UK Research Councils are reserved under Schedule 5 of the Scotland Act 1999.

School Refurbishments

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in total and by project of over £50,000 the money made available to each local authority for school upgrade and refurbishment projects in real terms in financial years 1992–93 to 1997–98, indicating the allocations already made in the current financial year, and those earmarked for 1999–2000, in total and by project of over £50,000 for school upgrades and refurbishments; what is the total budget available for school upgrades and refurbishments in the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65938]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Such work is funded by the local authorities from the general resources available to them for capital expenditure across a range of services, including educational building. Capital allocations to the authorities, which are, in effect, general borrowing consents, are neither project nor programme specific. However, provision under the Comprehensive Spending Review allows for an increase of £185 million in local authority capital expenditure on school buildings over the three years from April 1999.

As part of the New Deal for Schools announced in the July 1997 Budget, £115.7 million is being made available to authorities over five years, in addition to the general resources available under the normal capital allocation arrangements, to tackle the backlog of repairs to school buildings and to improve facilities for ICT. These resources are being distributed to authorities on a formula basis through capital grant. The amounts payable to authorities in the 1997–98 and 1998–99 financial years are listed in the table. Project information is not available centrally in the form requested. Authorities have been advised that the distribution under this grant arrangement in 1999–2000 is expected to be broadly the same as in the current year.

An announcement about the distribution of the general resources available to local authorities for capital expenditure in future years is expected late next month. Capital allocations to local authorities will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

- Higher Still Evaluation—Cohort Study
- Developments in Pre-school Education
- Review of Partnership in Pre-school Education
- Scottish School Leavers Survey of 22/23 Year Olds in 1999
- Baseline Survey of Parents Demand for Childcare.

The total proposed budget for education research projects over each of the next three financial years is £947k per annum. This budget will come under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Knee and Hip Joint Replacements

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the average waiting times for each health board for (a) knee and (b) hip joint replacement operations for September (i) 1997 and (ii) 1998. [66887]

Mr. Galbraith: The mean waiting time for knee and hip joint replacement operations for the years ending 30 September 1997 and 30 September 1998 for each Health Board in Scotland is provided in the table.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yemen

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British Consul General in Aden first learnt of the detention of the five British citizens being detained in Aden. [66685]

Mr. Fatchett: Yemeni officials first mentioned on 29 December that they had arrested some, unnamed, British nationals. The Yemeni authorities confirmed the names and details of the five British nationals on 7 January.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of British visitors to Yemen in each of the last three years. [66945]

Mr. Fatchett: There are no reliable estimates available for the number of British visitors to Yemen.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase the number of diplomatic personnel at the British mission in Yemen. [66942]

Mr. Fatchett: None at present.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department first learnt that the five detainees in Yemen had been charged. [66940]

Mr. Fatchett: In the afternoon of 15 January the British Consul General in Aden reported that four of the men had been charged and the fifth was due to be charged later that night. Our Consul General confirmed on 16 January that the fifth man had been charged late on 15 January.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British Consul General in Aden met each of the five detainees in Yemen. [66939]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Consul General in Aden visited Shahid Butt, Ghulam Hussein and Sarmad Ahmed on 8 January and Mohssen Ghailan on 9 January. He visited Malik Nasser Harhara, who is a British/Yemeni dual national on 14 January. He is pressing for recurring consular access.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British nationals he estimates live in Yemen. [66944]

Mr. Fatchett: According to our latest Annual Consular Return dated 1997, there were approximately 350 British Nationals resident in Yemen. The current figure is believed to be in the region of 400.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to gain access to a doctor for the five detainees in Aden. [66941]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary telephoned Prime Minister Iriyani on 14 January to register our concern about complaints of ill-treatment and torture, and asked for access to the detainees by an independent doctor. Mr. Iriyani undertook to work for a positive response. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State asked for access when she met the Yemeni Ambassador on 13 January. Our Embassy continues to raise the matter daily with the Yemeni authorities.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when and how he first learnt of the kidnap of two Britons in Yemen on 17 January. [66938]

Mr. Fatchett: The Netherlands Embassy in Sana'a notified our Embassy at 1500 hours local time on 17 January that a Dutch family and Mr. and Mrs. Rosser had not returned to Sana'a as expected. A few hours later their vehicles were found abandoned 180 kms north of Sana'a. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office was immediately informed.

Brian Peters and Malcolm Rennie

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communication the Government have had with the Australian Government since 1975 concerning investigations into the deaths of Brian Peters and Malcolm Rennie; and if he will make a statement. [66850]

Mr. Fatchett: The Australian government have taken the lead on this issue as the two British journalists, one New Zealander and two Australians killed at Balibo, East Timor, in 1975 were based in Australia and worked for Australian television companies. We keep in regular contact with the Australian government and welcome their decision to refer recent new material on the killings, to Mr. Tom Sherman, who conducted the comprehensive 1996 report on Balibo, for his consideration.

During my meeting in Jakarta in October 1998, I raised the Balibo incident with President Habibi, who promised to look into the matter further.

UN Security Council

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policies the British Government intend to pursue with a view to ensuring that future decisions of the United Nations Security Council are upheld. [66739]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom is committed to ensuring that the authority and decisions of the Security Council are upheld. The policies to be pursued will depend on the UN decisions concerned.

Honorary Consuls

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the conditions of service and method of appointment of honorary consuls. [66869]

Mr. Fatchett: Prospective Honorary Consuls are nominated by Heads of Mission and their appointment is approved by the Head of Consular Division in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The candidates are usually individuals of some standing in the local community. They may be foreign nationals.

Honorary Consuls are not salaried employees. They give their time free of charge and receive a honorarium; the maximum currently is £1,835. They may claim certain admissible expenses e.g. official postage. Their consular functions are carried out from their private or business address. Generally no payment is made from official funds towards rent.

Honorary Consuls perform statutory and non-statutory functions. Statutory functions include duties under the Merchant Shipping Acts, notarial acts, and levying of Consular Fees. Non-Statutory duties include protecting the interests of British nationals, particularly those in distress; and promoting British commercial interests. They do not register births and deaths or issue standard passports. They are not expected to undertake political reporting or information work.

Honorary Consul appointments are for a period of five years and may be terminated by either side giving not less than one months's notice. At the end of the initial term and subsequent five year terms, the appointment may be renewed subject to the exigencies of the public service and provided the Head of Mission is satisfied with the incumbent's performance. The retirement age is 65.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many honorary consuls are in post. [66868]

Mr. Fatchett: There are 242 Honorary Consults in 90 countries.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many honorary consuls are currently employed by the UK owned (a) tobacco, (b) armaments and (c) other industries with commercial interests in the host country. [66870]

Mr. Fatchett: Most Honorary Consuls are business people. A breakdown of their activity or type of employment is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Kosovo

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Yugoslav authorities in respect of the massacre at Racak. [66947]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Acting on the instructions of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, the UK Chargé in Belgrade took action on 17 January on behalf of the EU members of the Contact Group to express condemnation of the Racak killings to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Belgrade, and to call for the withdrawal of the forces then in Racak, full compliance with the relevant Security Council resolutions and the agreements entered into by President Milosevic last October, access to Kosovo for the Chief Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, and the suspension of police and army officers in the Racak area on 15 January. The UK Chargé also joined in an EU demarche to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 18 January which made similar points. That same day a senior official of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office saw the Ambassador of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and made clear to him that we condemn the killings at Racak and stressed the need for the authorities in Belgrade to comply with the demands of the international community, also handing him a copy of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's Statement to the House that afternoon, 18 January 1999, Official Report, columns 565–67.

The UK has also played an active role in deliberations of the UN Security Council, the OSCE, NATO and the EU leading to the clear statements issued by those bodies in reaction to the Racak killings. The authorities in Belgrade can be in no doubt of our condemnation of what happened, and our view of the action which now needs to be taken.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Yugoslavian Ambassador in respect of the massacre at Racak. [66948]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A senior official of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office saw the Ambassador of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on 18 January, and made clear to him that we condemn the killings at Racak and stressed the need for the authorities in Belgrade to comply with the demands of the international community, also handing him a copy of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's Statement to the House that afternoon, 18 January 1999, Official Report, columns 565–67. Together with EU colleagues, the UK Chargé in Belgrade has taken similar action.

BBC World Service

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what stage discussions with the BBC World Service have reached in relation to their three year plan; and if he will make a statement. [67106]

Mr. Fatchett: The BBC World Service is drawing up its strategic plan for the next three years. The BBC are considering their priorities in the light of political, technological and commercial developments, given the increase in World Service funding of on average 3.8 per cent. in each year over the 1998–99 level. We expect detailed proposals to be submitted to my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary soon.

Kashmir

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish six-monthly reports on progress towards a resolution of the conflict in Kashmir. [67039]

Mr. Fatchett: Our view is that it is primarily for India and Pakistan to reach a solution over Kashmir although we have regularly repeated our willingness to assist if that is what the parties wish. We do not believe that publication of progress reports will help towards a settlement.

Swathi Pankhania

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis the entry clearance officer in Bombay is calling for additional evidence in the case of Swathi Pankhania, HO Ref. S787788. [67235]

Mr. Fatchett: The Migration and Visa Correspondence Unit will be writing shortly to my hon. Friend to inform him of the outcome of this case.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ensure that the entry clearance officer in Bombay is informed of his letters to the hon. Member for Leicester, East in respect of the case of Swathi Pankhania, Ref S787788. [67233]

Mr. Fatchett: We have no record of having sent any letter to my hon. Friend about the case of Swathi Pankhania. However, we have seen reference to a letter from the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), to my hon. Friend, dated 11 August 1998.

Iraq

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if a mechanism has existed for British members of the UN Weapons Inspection Team in Iraq to provide intelligence information to Her Majesty's Government and its agencies. [67051]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government have made clear that all information exchanges between the UK and UNSCOM have been strictly in pursuit of UNSCOM's mandate to dismantle Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction capability.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what circumstances British members of the UN Weapons Inspection Team in Iraq carried out tasks in that country beyond those required by the UN. [67020]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: None. All activities carried out by UK nationals serving as UNSCOM inspectors have been strictly in pursuit of UNSCOM's mandate to dismantle Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction capability.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the talks by his Department's Director for the Middle East and North Africa with the Government of Iran about the Iraq situation. [67354]

Mr. Fatchett: The FCO Director for the Middle East and North Africa visited Iran on 13–14 January for talks with Deputy Foreign Minister Sarmadi, Deputy Foreign Minister Zarif and the Director General for Western Europe, Mr. Qasemi. The Director briefed the Iranians on our thinking on the way forward on Iraq, focusing on activity in the Security Council, particularly on weapons of mass destruction issues, and the need to respond to the humanitarian situation.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the objectives of Her Majesty's Government policy on Iraq. [67275]

Mr. Fatchett: As a permanent member of the Security Council, our main objective is to ensure that Iraq complies with its obligations under UN resolutions. This is in line with the parallel aim of protecting the UK's interests both in the region and more widely. In pursuit of those objectives we are discussing with other Security Council members how to move forward, both on the key outstanding disarmament questions and on the humanitarian issues.

Al Shifa Factory, Khartoum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he received from the Ambassador to the Sudan following his visit to the Al Shifa factory prior to the US air strike. [67643]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Ambassador has visited the Al Shifa factory only once, for the official opening in July 1997. There was no reporting following this ceremonial occasion.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the basis for his oral statement of 19 January 1999, Official Report, column 705, that Senator Pinochet could not be permitted to return to Chile without the Government defying the courts and ending due legal process. [67311]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) asked whether it would not have been better to send Senator Pinochet to face due process in Chile. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's reply was on the basis that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary issued an Authority to Proceed in respect of the Spanish request and that this has been passed to Bow Street Magistrates court to consider committal. Issues relating to state immunity are currently being heard by the House of Lords. Due legal process is being followed.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 19 January 1999, Official Report, column 701, if he will indicate the location in the Official Report of the answer to which he referred. [67633]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I am pleased to have this opportunity to set the record straight. I was incorrect in my belief that the answer was in the Official Report. I have written to the hon. Member to apologise for this inadvertent mistake.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department was first contacted by Scotland Yard concerning the question of the diplomatic immunity status of Senator Pinochet. [67625]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Metropolitan Police contacted the FCO about Senator Pinochet's diplomatic immunity on 16 October.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department was asked for help by the Chilean Embassy in London in arranging a flight to Santiago for Senator Pinochet in the week beginning 12 October 1998. [67634]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Chilean Ambassador telephoned the FCO on 15 October to discuss Senator Pinochet's travel arrangements. FCO officials referred the Ambassador to British Airways. On 16 October, the Ambassador informed the FCO that he had secured a seat for Senator Pinochet on the British Airways flight leaving for Santiago on 20 October.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department received from the Chilean Embassy on 16 October 1998. [67631]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Chilean Ambassador telephoned the FCO on 16 October to follow up a conversation the previous day about Senator Pinochet's travel arrangements. The Ambassador informed officials that he had secured a seat for Senator Pinochet on a British Airways flight leaving for Santiago on 20 October.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, column 508, for what reasons Mr. Penfold did not use the communication facilities at the German Embassy to communicate with London. [67626]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Whilst Mr. Penfold was in Conakry he received a number of classified telegrams via the German Embassy. He did not use these facilities for sending reports to London. He has said it was not necessary. A commercial fax facility was available at his hotel and allowed him to communicate with London directly.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 347, on St. Helena, if he will state the reason for Mr. Timmreck being the subject of an exclusion order by the Governor of St. Helena; and what right of appeal is available to him. [67353]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The then Chief Secretary of the Government of St. Helena gave full reasons for the exclusion order to Mr. Timmreck in a letter dated 4 March 1994. If Mr. Timmreck's permission were obtained by the hon. Member for Wrexham, I would arrange for him to receive a copy of the letter.

I understand that Mr. Timmreck has applied to the Governor for the exclusion order to be revoked. This was considered. Mr. Timmreck was asked for more information which he has not yet furnished.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to provide St. Helena with landing facilities for aircraft. [67118]

Clare Short: I have been asked to reply.

In 1998 we agreed to fund a preliminary desk study into the technical feasibility of an airlink to St. Helena. The final report is due by Easter. If this is positive, we will fund a broader feasibility study of the engineering, economic financial and social considerations.

Iran

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Iran. [67276]

Mr. Fatchett: The New York agreement of September 1998 has allowed a welcome improvement in relations between the United Kingdom and Iran. We will continue to look for ways of strengthening relations further in areas of mutual interest while also pressing, with our EU partners, for improvements in Iranian policies which give us particular concern.

Dependent Territories

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that the laws on homosexuals in dependent territories will be changed. [67569]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Homosexual acts remain an offence in the five Caribbean Overseas Territories. We have pointed out to the Governments of these Territories that their legislation must comply with the international obligations which Britain has extended to them, and that, in the absence of local reforms in this area, we may have to impose appropriate legislation by Order in Council.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many UK overseas territories have brought their law on human rights in line with that of the UK since May 1997. [67566]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There are three human rights issues on which the laws of some of the UK's Overseas Territories differ substantively from those of the UK; capital punishment for murder (though only in Bermuda), judicial corporal punishment, and the law relating to homosexual acts. Since May 1997 three Overseas Territories have abolished judicial corporal punishment. No other human rights legislation has been enacted in the Overseas Territories since May 1997.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to publish the White Paper on Dependent Territories. [67565]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We expect that the White Paper will be published shortly. Preparation for the Paper has involved wide ranging consultation on a broad range of subjects. It has been a complex process now drawing to a close.

Tobacco Advertising

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions he has given to UK diplomatic posts abroad regarding the promotion of tobacco products. [67568]

Mr. Fatchett: Following last month's White Paper, this Department is preparing guidelines for posts.

EU Meetings

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Council of the EU for the period until 31 March and the major EU meetings for the period until the end of the German presidency. [67620]

Ms Quin: I refer the hon. Member to the European Calendar: January-June 1999, which was deposited in the Libraries of the House on 14 January 1999.

Referendums (EU Funds)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what conclusions he has reached from his consideration of the Neill Committee's recommendations on the conduct of referendums, with particular reference to the distribution of European Community funds. [66144]

Mr. George Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

The Government will announce their conclusions on these issues when they publish a draft Bill, to implement the main findings of the Neill report, before the summer recess.

Written Answers to Questions

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the changes to the operational autonomy of National Air Traffic Services which will follow its reorganisation. [66859]

Dr. Reid: Detailed decisions on the public private partnership proposals for National Air Traffic Services will not be taken until after the consultation period closes on 31 January 1999. However, our preferred option, as set out in the consultation paper, would give NATS autonomy within a new framework, policed by an independent regulator.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlay his decision not to (a) retain National Air Traffic Services in public ownership and (b) privatise it completely. [66860]

Dr. Reid: The Government's reasons for proposing a public/private partnership for NATS, in preference to any other option, are set out in paragraphs 2–6 of the document "A public/private partnership for NATS: a consultation paper by the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions", copies of which were placed in the Library of the House on 20 October 1998. In essence, we believe that a public/private partnership would provide an innovative solution to growing air traffic demands in the next century, while maintaining high standards of safety and performance through strong, independent, safety and economic regulation. A partnership would also:

free NATS' investment and management decisions from Government financing constraints and enable private capital to be used in ways more appropriate to the business; provide the right structure of incentives and disciplines to maximise efficiency; provide NATS with the opportunity to develop its business, for example by expanding overseas, and manage itself in accordance with best private sector practice;

clearly separate regulation from service provision so as to deliver greater accountability and transparency in NATS' operations;

maintain sufficient rights and safeguards for Government to address public sector interests such as national security and the UK's international relationships; allow the taxpayer to share in the success of the company; and allow other transport schemes to benefit from the proceeds of the share sale.

The consultation period ends on 31 January 1999.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the ability of the reorganised National Air Traffic Services to guarantee necessary levels of investment. [66861]

Dr. Reid: The Government issued a consultation paper setting out our broad proposals for a public/private partnership (PPP) for National Air Traffic Services (NATS) on 20 October 1998. Decisions on the detail of the proposals will not be taken until after the consultation period closes on 31 January 1999. However, one of the main objectives of the PPP is to free NATS from public sector borrowing restrictions so that it can more easily invest for the future.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Civil Aviation Pension Scheme will continue to be open to (a) existing and (b) future members of staff of National Air Traffic Services after the proposed reorganisation of the service. [66862]

Dr. Reid: The Government are currently consulting on the details of future pension arrangements for staff of National Air Traffic Services (NATS), as part of the consultation exercise on the proposed public/private partnership for NATS. The Secretary of State hopes to make a statement in due course, after responses to the consultation have been considered.

Pensioners' Travel Passes

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will preserve the rights of those low-income pensioners who are currently entitled to tokens redeemable against community bus and taxi fares when he implements his proposals for half-price travel passes. [66821]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no statutory rights, as such, to a particular kind of arrangement for concessionary travel. It is for each local authority to decide what concessions to arrange for its residents. Consultation on the introduction of the standard minimum scheme will consider the future arrangements for token schemes.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to compensate local authorities in whose area there is a disproportionate number of pensioners when he implements his proposal for half-price bus travel permits. [66820]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Local authority expenditure receives support from the Government by means of Revenue Support Grant. All aspects of our proposal for a national minimum standard for concessionary travel, including finance and the formula for the distribution of RSG, will be subject of consultation with local government and other relevant organisations.

Eurotunnel

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is Government policy that no vehicle powered by liquid petroleum gas and no dual-powered vehicle may be transported on the Eurotunnel shuttle; and if he will make a statement. [67343]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Eurotunnel will need to obtain safety approval from the bi-national Intergovernmental Commission (acting on the advice of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority) before they can convey LPG- and dual-powered vehicles. Subject to this safety approval, the Government would welcome the opening of Shuttle services to these vehicles.

Defence Estate

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has commissioned on the redevelopment of the Defence estate; and when it was published. [67128]

Mr. Raynsford: Fuller Peiser Property Consultants were commissioned in 1997 to review the existing policy context of Ministry of Defence disposals in England, and to advise Government on how they should seek to obtain value for money whilst having regard to the wider interest of Government. The Consultants' Report: "Development of the Redundant Defence Estate" has been received, and we are considering it. I expect to publish it shortly.

Publicly Owned Sites

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had, and with whom, concerning the definition of public interest in the sale of publicly owned sites. [67129]

Mr. Raynsford: My officials will be discussing the definition of public interest as part of the remit of a working group of interested Departments. The group will be considering recommendations in the Fuller Peiser Property Consultants Report: "Development of the Redundant Defence Estate".

Pesticides (Research)

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the research work which he has commissioned in connection with his pesticide minimisation policy; what are the terms of reference of that research; and if he will publish the results of the research. [67103]

Mr. Meale: My Department has commissioned several research projects in connection with the pesticide minimisation policy including: a study into the private costs and benefits of pesticide minimisation, carried out by RPA and Entec; an assessment of a range of economic instruments for pesticide minimisation, carried out by ECOTEC Research and Consulting; and research into the design of a tax/charge scheme for pesticides, also carried out by ECOTEC Research and Consulting. This last research considers the detailed design and potential impact of a charge or tax intended primarily to secure reductions in pesticide use, better targeting and substitution by less harmful pesticides or alternative techniques. A decision concerning publishing the results of this report will be made in due course.

Waste Incineration

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the proposed EU directive on the incineration of waste; and if he will make a statement. [67038]

Mr. Meale: An Explanatory Memorandum (EM12791/98) on the proposal for a Council Directive on the incineration of waste was submitted to Parliament on 30 November 1998. Expert consultants are currently finalising a report on the proposal, on the basis of which a Regulatory and Environmental Impact Assessment will shortly be submitted to Parliament under a Supplementary Explanatory Memorandum.

Highmoor Quarry, Oldham

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he has taken to ensure the compliance with the landfill site licence in respect of noxious smells at the Highmoor Quarry site in Oldham. [67225]

Mr. Meale: The Environment Agency is responsible for the supervision and enforcement of waste management licences and has provided the following information about odours at Highmoor Quarry.

The licence for this site requires that "There shall be no offensive smells or other strong odours detectable outside the boundary of the site. All malodours detected shall be investigated and immediate steps taken to ameliorate the problem."

The steps taken to ensure compliance with this licence condition include the Environment Agency's requiring the site operator to take measures to prevent the emission of odour. This resulted in the capping and covering of the leachate and monitoring wells and the engagement of "Entec" as consultants to carry out further investigation of odour emissions at the site. The consultants' report is due in the week beginning 25 January 1999.

The Environment Agency is also carrying out its own investigations. It has established a "footprint" of odour sources at the site and submitted air samples for analysis of the odour constituents. This will enable the Agency to monitor for identified determinants at sensitive locations. As a part of its consideration of compliance with the licence, the Agency is registering all complaints about odours from the site and plotting their locations, with the intention of linking them to meteorological conditions.

Parliamentary Travel Arrangements

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to recommend that hon. Members returning on parliamentary business to Heathrow and Gatwick airports are encouraged to return to Westminster by public transport. [67570]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 January 1999]: A key aim of our New Deal for Transport is to encourage individuals to switch modes, to drive less and to walk, cycle and use public transport more. The White Paper attaches particular importance to improving public transport links to airports for passengers and employees alike. Heathrow and Gatwick both already have excellent public transport connections to Westminster, and major investments are now underway and planned to improve services further still.

British Standard (Lead Replacement Petrol)

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to establish a British standard for lead replacement petrol in time for the withdrawal of leaded petrol for sale by 1 January 2000. [67360]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am pleased to report that the British Standards Institution is well advanced with the preparation of a standard for lead replacement petrol. It is expected to be published during the summer months in good time for January 2000.

Quality Partnerships (Freight)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to paragraph 1.43 of the White Paper, "A New Deal for Transport", what measures he proposes to facilitate quality partnerships for freight between local authorities and lorry operators. [67614]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The draft guidance on Local Transport Plans, issued on 12 November 1998, explained that, as well as passenger transport, issues connected with freight distribution would need to be addressed within the plan. As stated in our Transport White Paper, our intention is that these be addressed through quality partnerships for freight.

The draft guidance pointed to the practical guidance in "A Manual of Guidance for Local Authorities and Others: Lorries and Traffic Management" which was distributed to all local authorities in 1990, providing 256 pages of practical, low cost advice designed to promote efficient distribution of goods and minimise their environmental and social impacts. This manual is complemented by a booklet "Lorries in the Community" which provides the strategic context; explaining the potential impact of lorries in terms of congestion, pollution, noise, vibration and damage to the road infrastructure and the conflict that can arise between the need for access to town centres with the desire to improve safety for pedestrians and other road users. It explains the value of voluntary agreements and the value of the practical measures described in the manual in meeting the Government's goals for distribution.

The Freight Transport Association has been promoting a best practice initiative "Delivering the Goods" which has helped put the ideas into practice.

Over the coming months the Department will develop further guidance by drawing together best practice and experience on how to go about establishing quality partnerships. Through sharing this experience with as wide an audience as possible, we will provide further, practical advice to local authorities.

By bringing environmental, social, planning and business objectives together, partnerships can play a key part in promoting a more sustainable system for goods distribution. We intend to develop this theme further in a follow up to the White Paper on sustainable distribution.

Bridges

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the changes in mileage undertaken by (a) heavy vehicles and (b) freight trains as a consequence of the implementation of the bridge strengthening requirements of EU Directive 85/3/EEC. [67591]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department has no information on the extent to which heavy goods vehicle mileage or freight train mileage may have been influenced by any weight limits placed on bridges as a result of the higher lorry weights allowed since 1 January this year under EU Directive 85/3/EEC.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) amounts expressed at 1999 prices and (b) percentages of moneys were allocated to highway authorities under TPPs related to bridge strengthening works, for each year since 1987. [67592]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Separate figures cannot be given for bridge strengthening only. The following table shows annual allocations to English local highway authorities for bridge maintenance, assessment and strengthening, both in 1999 prices and as a proportion of the total allocations as part of the Transport Policies and Programme (TPP) system. Prior to 1991–92, these resources were allocated as part of the Revenue Support Grant settlement and could not be separately identified.

1992–93	132	13
1993–94	159	13
1994–95	156	15
1995–96	136	13
1996–97	109	12
1997–98	92	12
1999–2000	128	20

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the first bridge strengthening project began in implementation of EU Directive 85/3/EEC; what percentage by mile of work required has been completed to date; and when he expects work required under the Directive to be completed. [67594]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The first strengthening of a Highways Agency bridge under the current assessment and strengthening programme was carried out in 1989. Of the Highways Agency's bridges which require strengthening, some two thirds have been permanently strengthened to date and the remainder have been safeguarded pending permanent strengthening. The permanent strengthening work is expected to be completed in 2001. There is no estimate by mile of the work required to implement EU Directive 85/3/EEC but the whole motorway and trunk road network is operational for HGVs. This network carries 57 per cent. of goods vehicle traffic.

About 85 per cent. of the assessments of structures on local roads in England are complete and of these some 95 per cent. now meet the new load-bearing standard.

As assessments are not yet complete, it is not possible to determine when local road bridge strengthening work will be completed. Not all of this work, however, is a requirement of Directive 85/3/EEC. Authorities' programmes include strengthenings which meet the needs of their local communities as well as those on routes of greatest strategic importance for HGVs.

Railways (Rolling Stock)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals the Rail Franchising Director has received from the rolling stock companies to enable the replacement of Mark 1 rolling stock during the life of the existing franchises of Connex South Central and South West Trains. [67774]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Franchising Director has not received any such proposals from the rolling stock companies. As I said in the answer to the hon. Member on 12 January 1999, Official Report, columns 102–04, it is the responsibility of the train operators to make such arrangements with rolling stock companies as may be necessary to meet either their commitments to the Franchising Director or any requirements of the Health and Safety Executive. The Government are considering recommendations from the Health and Safety Executive that all Mark 1 rolling stock on the network should be modified or rebodied by 2003 and any modified stock replaced by 2007.

Car Parks

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he gives to (a) train operating companies and (b) bus operators in respect of car parking charges at their stations. [67588]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. It is entirely a matter for the train operating companies and the bus operators concerned to determine car parking charges at their stations.

Business Rates

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has for the future of the transitional relief system affecting business rates beyond 2000; and if he will make a statement. [67647]

Mr. Raynsford: No decision has yet been taken on whether to have a transitional rate relief scheme following the revaluation in April 2000. Before making a decision we need accurate and detailed information on how the revaluation will affect rate bills. This information will be available in the second half of this year, and we shall announce our decision then.

London Underground

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on (a) train, (b) signal and (c) track failures in each year since 1994–95, for all the lines on London Underground. [67904]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport works hard to minimise the incidence of equipment failure and its consequent impact on passenger service. I understand from London Transport that the figures from 1994–95 are as follows:

Summary of numbers London Underground Ltd. train delays: track, signal/points and rolling stock only by incident group and financial year (1994–95/1998–99)

	Signal points	Other track	Rolling stock
Delays in 1994–95	2,349	659	16,123
Delays in 1995–96	2,494	959	15,102
Delays in 1996–97	2,323	1,007	14,873
Delays in 1997–98	2,725	881	17,801
Delays in 1998–99 (36 weeks only)	1,941	589	14,011

Full 1998–99 statistics are not yet available as London Underground Ltd.'s data collection year covers 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999. Therefore the 1998–99 figures represents 36 weeks only

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the causes of disruption and delays on London Underground in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99. [67903]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport monitors the causes of disruption and delay to London Underground under eleven categories. Its figures, for the years in question, are as follows:

Cause	Delays in 1995–96	Delays in 1996–97	Delays in 1997–98	Delays in 1998–99 (36 weeks only)
Anti-social behaviour	5,254	5,485	5,645	3,775
Passenger ill/injured	608	604	676	539
Person on track	308	327	375	266
Unattended luggage	446	748	482	223
Terminus management	5,276	5,656	8,315	8,709
Driving technique	602	743	747	666
Possession overrun	115	96	114	114
Signal/points	2,494	2,323	2,827	1,941
Other track	959	1,007	907	589
Rolling stock	15,102	14,873	18,088	14,011
All other incidents	1,953	1,505	1,427	1,189
Total	33,117	33,476	39,603	32,022

Full 1998–99 statistics are not yet available as London Underground Ltd's data collection year covers 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999. Therefore the 1998–99 figures represent 36 weeks only.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Government plans for the funding of London Underground's investment for 1998 to 2003 and past spending from 1992 to 1997. [67905]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport currently funds investment from a mix of Government grant, operating surplus, and private finance, through which investment in the Underground over the next two years (1998–99 and 1999–00) will be around £1 billion. Under our plans for a public/private partnership for London Underground, our aim is to secure high and stable investment in modernising and maintaining the system, managed and financed by the private sector, under-contracts through which they will be remunerated in accordance with the delivery of required performance levels:

Over the period 1992–1997, Underground investment ran at an historically high level, in large part reflecting spending on the Jubilee Line Extension. But planned investment in the core network was scaled back dramatically in the light of the cuts imposed in the then Government's November 1996 budget. We have made available an extra £365 million grant for 1998–99 and 99–00 to help redress the shortfall in planned investment caused by this cut, and to cover preparation for implementing our public private partnership policy.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on establishing liability in the case of a serious infrastructure failure on London Underground after concessions have been awarded to private companies. [67906]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Public/Private Partnership contracts that London Underground are currently developing will specify the respective rights and responsibilities of the London Underground operating company and the infrastructure contractors. There will be a simple and robust procedure for allocating responsibility for asset failures that will form part of the day-to-day process for managing the contacts.

Work is still continuing to develop the details, but, if a serious infrastructure failure results in damage to the operating company's property or injuries to its employees or members of the public, the general principle will be that the party responsibility for the failure will bear the financial consequences. An appropriate liability regime and insurance requirements will be put into place.

Rail Passengers (Mobility Difficulties)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that train companies provide improved services for passengers with mobility difficulties. [66757]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations, which came into effect on 1 January this year, require new trains coming into service from that date to be fully accessible to disabled people, including those travelling in wheelchairs.

In addition, the Rail Regulator publishes a Code of Practice "Meeting the Needs of Disabled Passengers" which offers practical advice and guidance to train operating companies on the needs of disabled people. Operators are required to take the Code of Practice into account when producing their Disabled People's Protection Polices for approval by the Regulator, in accordance with the requirements of their operators' licences.

The Strategic Rail Authority will inherit the Rail Regulator's duties relating to disabled passengers.

Mersey Transport Authority

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has had with the Mersey Transport Authority; and if he will make a statement. [66756]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have held no recent formal discussions with Merseytravel although they were among many bodies who attend the North West Regional Transport Partnership Meeting in November last year.

Public Transport (Service Levels)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which private (a) bus companies and (b) rail companies he has held discussions with during the last 12 months about the standard of services which they provide; and if he will make a statement. [67152]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My colleagues and I have met a number of bus operators over the last 12 months to discuss a range of issues, including standards of service and our policies for promoting bus Quality Partnerships. The Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport and I met all rail franchisees and Railtrack on 26 November to agree short term measures to improve performance. A larger rail summit will be held on 25 February to look at the long-term improvement of standards across the rail network.

Gloucestershire County Council (Structure Plan)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he held with Gloucestershire County Council officers and elected representatives about its structure plan before appointing the panel to carry out its examination in public; and if he will make a statement. [67157]

Mr. Raynsford: Officials from the Government Office for the South West met officials of the County Council on various occasions and made formal objections to the deposit draft of the structure plan. I understand the report of the panel, who held the Examination in Public, was published on 11 January. I cannot comment further on the matter as the Secretary of State has a statutory role to play.

Tewkesbury Borough Council (Local Plan)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Tewkesbury Borough Council about its Local Plan in the last year. [67061]

Mr. Raynsford: Officials from the Government Office for the South West met officials of the Borough Council to discuss their consultation draft Local Plan last year.

Land Use Planning Requirements

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received following the consultation paper, Draft Town and Country Planning (Control of Major Accident Hazards) Regulations: 1999, to give effect to the land use planning requirements of the EC Directive (96/82/EC); and if he will make a statement. [68083]

Mr. Caborn: The consultation paper on the Draft Town and Country Planning (Control of Major Accident Hazards) Regulations: 1999 was issued on 2 December 1998. To date, 27 responses have been received from business, local government and environmental organisations. A list of responses has been placed in the Library of the House and copies of all the responses have been placed in the DETR library. The Government are considering these responses.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting between the Minister of Transport and the Singapore Minister of Communications held on 21 January; and if he will allow bilateral negotiations with Singapore concerning airline services to proceed, notwithstanding the present deadlock in US/UK negotiations. [67652]

Dr. Reid: Mr. Mah Bow Tan, Singapore Minister of Communications, and I had a useful exchange of views during our meeting on 21 January. The bilateral negotiations concerning air service will take place next month as planned.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

National Audit Office

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission what assessment he has made of the steps taken by the National Audit Office to increase public awareness of its work. [65558]

Mr. Sheldon: The Commission attaches considerable importance to public awareness of the work of the National Audit Office and this is essential to the public accountability process.

The National Audit Office has a constructive relationship with the media. Copies of reports are circulated widely along with a short press notice giving details of the key points.

The National Audit Office also publishes an annual report. This is available to journalists, audited bodies, academics, interest groups, professional bodies and the public and can also be found on the Office's web site. The National Audit Office's most recent annual report, Helping the Nation Spend Wisely, was published in July 1998 and describes its work and how it has saved the taxpayer more than a billion pounds over the last three years.

In addition the Comptroller and Auditor General and the National Audit Office are always willing to speak, and write, about their work when invited to do so.

DEFENCE

101 Battalion REME (Chorley)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many elements of the financial assessment of the move of HQ 101 Battalion REME from Chorley to Queensferry had been costed prior to the decision being taken; [65018]

(2) what cost centres his Department plans to take account of when assessing the potential savings of moving HQ 101 Battalion REME from Chorley to Queensferry. [65013]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Prior to the decision being taken to transfer HQ 101 Battalion REME from Chorley to Queensferry, HQ Land Command assessed property disposal values, TA Centres running costs, projected refurbishment/improvement costs, and the cost of providing alternative facilities for those cadet units affected by the restructuring.

Territorial Army

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what date the final draft of the Ministry of Defence publication, "Modern Forces for the Modern World: A Territorial Army for the Future" was (a) approved by Ministers, (b) approved by Commander in Chief Land Command and (c) sent for printing; [65011]

(2) when the document on the future structure of the Territorial Army published on 17 November was sent to the printers; and how far in advance of that date the decisions announced therein were taken. [65314]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It was for Ministers to approve the document "Modern Forces for the Modern World: A Territorial Army for the Future", which they did on 4 November. The document was sent to the printers on 6 November and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence was able to announce his decisions on the future of the TA on 17 November 1998, Official Report, columns 749–70.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the average total cost, at full establishment and (b) what percentage of that relates to salaries in financial year 1998–99, of (i) an Armoured Infantry Battalion, (ii) Mechanised Infantry Battalion, (iii) Light Infantry Role Battalion, (iv) TA Infantry Battalion, (v) TA Fire Support Battalion, (vi) RAC Armoured Regiment (MBT), (vii) RAC Armoured Reconnaissance Regiment (Scimitar), (viii) TA Reconnaissance (Landrovers), (ix) RA Regiment 1555mm AS90, (x) RA Regiment 105 Light Gun, (xi) RA Regiment MLRS, (xii) RA Regiment Javelin, (xiii) RA Regiment Rapier, (xiv) RA Regiment HVM, (xv) RE Armoured Divisional Engineer Regiment, (xvi) RE Field Squadron, (xvii) RE Amphibious Engineer Squadron, (xviii) RE EOD Squadron, (xix) RE AS Squadron, (xx) TA Field Squadron, (xxi) TA AS Squadron, (xxii) Royal Corps of Signals, (xxiii) Signal Regiment, (xxiv) Independent Squadron, (xxv) TA Independent Squadron, (xxvi) RLC,

(xxvii) General support regiment RLC, (xxviii) Divisional support Squadron, (xxix) Brigade support Squadron, (xxx) TA Ration Squadron, (xxxi) REME Support Battalion, (xxxii) RAMC Field Hospital, (xxxiii) RAMC Field Ambulance, (xxxiv) TA Field Hospital, (xxxv) TA Field Ambulance, (xxxvi) Royal Military Police Company and TA Company, (xxxvii) Intelligence Corps Company and TA Company, (xxxviii) Army Air Corps, (xxxix) Squadron Lynx/TOW and (xl) Headquarters and Staff. [66845]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Armed Forces (Youth Recruitment)

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of those currently serving in the armed forces joined when under 18 years of age. [66221]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The numbers of those serving in the Armed Forces at 1 December 1998 who joined when they were under 18 years of age is as follows:

	Total	Officers	Other Ranks
Total	83,490	[1]2,560	80,930
Naval Service	18,861	[1]226	18,635
Army	46,608	2,247	44,361
Royal Air Force	18,021	[1]87	17,934

[1] The Naval Service and Royal Air Force figures exclude those Officers who have previously been promoted from the ranks as the relevant data is not held centrally.

HMS Invincible

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if HMS 'Invincible' had a full ship's company on board when she left Portsmouth recently. [66698]

Mr. Doug Henderson: HMS Invincible sailed from Portsmouth with a crew of 635, which represents 96.5 per cent. of her full crew complement.

HMS Intrepid

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a decision on the future of HMS Intrepid. [66699]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Strategic Defence Review confirmed our plans to replace HM Ships Intrepid and Fearless with two new amphibious assault ships early in the next decade. It is planned that HMS Intrepid will remain in service, at low readiness, until 2001. On current plans, she will be replaced by HMS Albion in 2002.

Trident

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was paid in each of the last five years to the US Government to guarantee the servicing of the UK Trident missile stock; and if this money is part of the estimated Trident running costs. [66825]

Mr. George Robertson: No payments have been made to the US specifically to guarantee the servicing of UK Trident missile stock. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 18 November 1998, Official Report, column 633, to his earlier question and to my letter to him of 26 November 1998, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much of the money paid by the UK to the US Government on Trident to be spent during fiscal year 1999 is for items essential to maintain the continued operational availability of the UK Trident system; [67042]

(2) if he will list the items to be purchased from the money authorised recently to be paid to the US Government as the UK share of the fiscal year 1999 Trident procurement programme. [67041]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 19 November 1998, Official Report, column 713, and to the letter I sent him on 26 November 1998, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

Submarines

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the crew numbers of the Swiftsure class of submarines are up to full complement; how many officers and men are on each submarine; and if he will make a statement. [67249]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Crew numbers for operational Swiftsure submarines are maintained at the full complement level of 16 officers and 121 men. Submarines in refit and not required for sea duty have a reduced ship's company fluctuation around a core of eight officers and 58 men. Currently one of the five S class submarines is in refit and is manned by six officers and 44 men. Reduction in non-operational crew numbers is an approved policy to help maintain operational complements at the full level.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of AWE Company Security, Environment, Safety and Health Systems Analysis reports. [67213]

Mr. Spellar: I have arranged for this to be done.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of his officials is responsible for co-ordinating his Department's action on the millennium bug. [66753]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 21 January 1999]: As announced to the House last year, the MOD official responsible for our Year 2000 programme is the Director-General Information and Communications Services, Mr. Andrew Sleigh.

National Defence Industries Council

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the membership of the National Defence Industries Council and its working parties; and how these have changed since 1996. [67297]

Mr. Spellar: Membership comprises, on the Government side, Minister and senior officials from the MOD, together with DTI representation. The industry side consists of a number of senior company representatives, the President or agreed representatives of the four major trade associations in the sector, British Marine Equipment Council, Defence Manufacturers' Association, Federation of the Electronics Industry, Society of British Aerospace Companies, and the Secretary of the Defence Industries Council. All appointments to the National Defence Industries Council are of a personal nature and subject to the approval of the Secretary of State for Defence.

Membership, January 1999

Mr. Ken Batten
Sir Colin Chandler
Sir Barry Duxbury
Mr. Tony Edwards
Mr. Richard Evans
Sir David Lees
Mr. Ian MacBean
Lord Prior
Mr. D. J. Wright.

It would be a daunting task to list the great numbers of names of those who contributed to the important work of NDIC over the past three years and especially in relation to the Strategic Defence Review, SDR.

Military Sales (United States)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of goods made in and exported from the UK ordered by the US Department of Defense in each of the last 10 years. [67418]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The MOD is currently working with the FCO and the DTI to prepare the Government's first Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls. The Report will include details of export licence applications for UK Military List items and details of such equipment exported by customer country with annual values. When the Report has been issued I will write to my hon. Friend concerning the information requested for previous years.

Departmental Estates

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total (a) asset and (b) rateable value of his Department's property and estates in (i) the UK and (ii) Scotland. [66844]

Mr. Spellar: The total asset value of the UK Department Estate measured in terms of its existing use to the Ministry of Defence as at 1 April 1998, is approximately £12 billion and the Scottish Estate is approximately £1.5 billion.

The total rateable value of the UK Estate is approximately £430 million and that of the Scottish Estate is approximately £49 million.

Both sets of figures include the TAVRA estate.

Private Finance Initiative

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the PFI proposals under consideration in Renfrewshire; and if he will make a statement. [66995]

Mr. Spellar: There is currently one PFI proposal under consideration in Renfrewshire. My Department selected Bannockburn Homes (a Consortium led by John Mowlem and Co. PLC) as the preferred bidder for the provision of Service Family Accommodation for 164 Army families in Central Scotland. Part of the requirement was to be fulfilled by the construction of 61 houses at Craigton Farm, Bishopton, Renfrewshire but on 21 January 1999 Renfrewshire District Council rejected the planning application. Bannockburn Homes, led by Mowlem and Co. PLC are now considering alternative arrangements.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his review of actions necessary to ensure a coherent UK response to threats from biological and chemical weapons. [67697]

Mr. George Robertson: This is an important area of work. I will publish the outcome of the review as soon as possible.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the formal programme of co-operation he has agreed with the United States on the threat to armed forces from chemical and biological weapons. [67694]

Mr. George Robertson: A US/UK Joint Venture Oversight Group on the defence response to the threat posed by chemical and biological weapons has been established. The first meeting took place in Washington on 14 December 1998 and agreed the basis on which work would be carried forward in the areas of policy, operational assessment and technical co-operation. We will build on this exchange as a means of developing further the already strong defence capabilities of both countries.

We also continue to value highly our long-standing collaborative arrangements with the US through the trilateral (UK/US/Canada) Memorandum of understanding (MOU) and the quadripartite (UK/US/Canada/Australia) arrangements represented by the Technical Collaboration Programme (TTCP) on chemical and biological defence.

Uranium

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if United Kingdom production levels of highly enriched uranium are adequate to meet current demand; and if he will make a statement. [67696]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South-East (Mr. Iddon) on 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 12.

Lieutenant Colonel K. R. Pople

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will announce the decision on Chapter 62 administrative action being taken against Lieutenant Colonel K. R. Pople. [67695]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No, this action is entirely a matter between the individual concerned and the Army authorities. I would therefore withhold such information under Exemption 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information as it relates to the privacy of an individual.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic Modification

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister is to convene the Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic Modification; what is the remit of the Group; and to which Minister it will report. [67352]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic Modification is a Cabinet Committee chaired by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office. Its terms of reference are to consider issues relating to biotechnology, in particular those arising from genetic modification.

Stephen Lawrence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government will erect a memorial or name a building in a central part of London in memory of Stephen Lawrence. [67369]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 January 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary met Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence on 24 June 1997 and told them that they would have our full support if they wished to establish some form of memorial to their son Stephen.

I understand that Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence have decided that a charitable trust to award scholarships and bursaries to assist young people to study architecture is a fitting way to remember Stephen in a positive way. The Stephen Lawrence Charitable Trust was launched on 11 September 1998 and I was very pleased to send a message of support.

There is also a memorial stone at the bus stop in Eltham where Stephen was attacked.

However, if Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence want a further memorial we would, of course, consider the matter again and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will discuss this with them when he next meets them.

Right hon. Member for Hartlepool

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a list of the dates on which he has discussed Government business with the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) since 1 January. [67769]

The Prime Minister: The business of Government is a matter for Ministers; however, I have meetings with hon. Members on a wide range of Government policies, and will continue to do so.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Former Colonies (Public Service Pensions)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the number of UK citizens resident in the United Kingdom who worked in administration, education or other public services in the former colonies who currently rely on pensions from that service for their income. [66630]

Clare Short: As at 15 January 1999, the Department for International Development (DFID) were paying 10,976 service pensions and 7,159 dependants' pensions to UK residents in respect of public service in the former colonies. Those involved are covered by HMG's pension protection arrangements. We do not hold information on the individual pensioner's citizenship, although most are likely to be British nationals. Nor can pension recipients be split by occupation as this information is not held centrally.

In addition to those pensioners paid by DFID, there are many former colonial public servants who do not qualify under these arrangements and who are paid their pensions directly by the present day governments of the former colonial territories. We have no way of knowing the numbers paid in this way.

Jubilee 2000

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the progress of the Jubilee 2000 Campaign. [66900]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

Jubilee 2000 campaigns continue to increase public awareness of the importance of securing effective debt relief for heavily indebted countries.

WALES

National Assembly

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial provision he has made for informing the public about (a) the voting system for elections to the National Assembly for Wales and (b) general information about the Assembly; and if he will make a statement. [66481]

Mr. Michael: An overall budget of some £2 million has been allocated to the National Assembly Information Campaign to ensure that the electorate is able to vote in full knowledge of the Assembly's powers and of how the Additional Member system works. In addition, a public information and Education service will be established within the Office of the Presiding Officer. That service will publish a range of information factsheets to inform the public and educational institutions about the National Assembly. Financial provision for this service has not yet been finalised.

Quangos

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the quangos which were operating in April 1997 which subsequently have had their powers transferred to other quangos. [67232]

Mr. Michael: Since April 1997, the powers of the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Land Authority for Wales have been transferred to the Welsh Development Agency.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure that emergency services in Wales achieve millennium date change compliance. [67455]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has taken steps to ensure that all necessary measures are taken by the police and fire services in Wales to prepare for the Millennium date change. I have sought to reinforce the sense of urgency and the need for co-operation with local authorities and other public services in preparing for all possible contingencies.

The Welsh Ambulance Trust has responsibility for ensuring Year 2000 compliance of emergency ambulance services. An All Wales Co-ordinating Group has been established to oversee the activities being undertaken by all NHS Trusts and Authorities. The Group is chaired by the Director of the Welsh Office Health Department. An independent assessment of preparations is also being provided by District Audit.

To ensure that there is no material disruption to any of these essential services over the Millennium period, I have invited senior members from the police, fire and NHS in Wales to participate in a high level co-ordinating forum. Representatives from other sectors with responsibility for the provision of key public services will also attend and I will keep progress under close review.

Welsh Development Agency

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what strategic guidance and targets he has set for the enlarged Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement. [68046]

Mr. Michael: I have written to the Chairman of the Welsh Development Agency (WDA) informing him of the revised strategic guidance for the WDA until March 2000 and consolidated targets for 1998–99 following the merger with the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Land Authority for Wales. Copies of that letter have been sent to all right hon. and hon. Members representing Welsh constituencies. Copies have also been placed in the Library of the House.

The strategic guidance is for eighteen months to March 2000; but it will be subject to review by the National Assembly, who will also set targets for financial year 2000–01 and beyond.

The consolidated targets for 1998–99 take account of the half year pre-merger targets set by my predecessor and performance against them. I have, however, asked the WDA fundamentally to review the nature of the targets for 1999–2000 and beyond. In doing this I want the Agency to set very clear objectives which focus its work and reflect the Government's priority of spreading prosperity to all parts of Wales.

Concessionary Bus Fares

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those councils which issue (a) bus passes and (b) bus tokens to pensioners. [67284]

Mr. Hain: All authorities in Wales provide bus passes as part of their concessionary travel schemes, with the exception of Ceredigion, Pembrokeshire and Powys who issue tokens. I understand that each of these authorities is considering the possibility of switching from tokens to passes.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each local authority in Wales the amount of money allocated for meeting the costs of concessionary bus fares for pensioners for (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01. [67283]

Mr. Hain: It is for local authorities to make financial provision for their concessionary fares schemes from the resources available to them, and authorities will not yet have set their budgets for 1999–2000. Authorities are free to determine the nature of their concessionary fares schemes, although from April, I expect all local authorities in Wales to be operating schemes which at least meet the minimum standard of £5 for a bus pass and half fare for bus travel for pensioners. The increases in net total standard spending announced on 9 December included sufficient funds for this.

Swansea City Council

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the outstanding (a) total and (b) per capita level of loan debt of Swansea City Council at 31 March 1997. [67285]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The table in the official record of the answer I gave on this matter on 19 November 1998, Official Report, columns 806–07, excluded the information for Swansea. The complete table including Swansea is as follows:

Outstanding loan debt as at 31 March 1997 [1]

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Defence Exports

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people are employed by Government departments and agencies to assist in supporting and promoting defence exports; and at what cost. [66038]

Mr. Spellar: I have been asked to reply.

The Defence Export Services Organisation DESO within the Ministry of Defence is principally responsible for co-ordinating Government support for British defence exports. For Financial Year 1997–98, DESO employed some 680 staff and the gross expenditure was £55.8 million. This was offset by receipts of £34.6 million from customer governments to meet in full the cost of Project Offices dealing with Government-to-Government programmes. Of the remaining £21.2 million, £6.8 million was covered by receipts, leaving a net operating cost attributed to the DESO budget of £14.4 million.

DESO costs are more than offset by benefits to the defence budget arising from DESO activity:

Around £50 million annual cash receipts on average over the last five years from Commercial Exploitation Levy.

About £70–90 million cash annually from disposal sales receipts over the last five years.

Around £400 million in the last financial year saved on procurement costs by spreading fixed overheads across longer production runs.

Other Government Departments carry out activities which support British defence exports but the information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prepayment Gas Meters

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review the standing charges for gas consumers who use prepayment meters. [65970]

Mr. Battle: I believe that it is essential to tackle issues surrounding fuel poverty. In this respect, I have on a number of occasions made my concerns clear to both the Director General of Gas Supply and to the gas industry. Following on from this, the Director General is currently looking at ways of revising of Ofgas Social Dimension Action Plan to identify actions which will provide solutions to the problems of the fuel poor, including looking at ways of reducing the costs of prepayment meters, and at addressing the needs of other low income customers who pay by other methods.

Horizon Programme

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will implement the Horizon Programme throughout the network of Post Office Counters. [65881]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Benefits Agency/Post Office Counters Ltd. automation project was commissioned under the Government's private finance initiative with ICL Pathway Ltd. as the private sector partner. Current plans provide for all post offices to be automated by the end of 2000.

Post Office Licences

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post office licences, formerly operated by sole traders, have been transferred to multiple retailers in the last two years. [66926]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from Post Office Counters Ltd. that 47 post offices formerly operated by sole traders have been transferred to multiple retailers in the last two years.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post office licences formerly operated by sole traders have been transferred to Alldays in each Post Office Counters Ltd. region. [66924]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from Post Office Counters Ltd. that 9 post offices formerly operated by sole traders have been transferred to Alldays. The breakdown by Post Office Counters Ltd region is as follows:

Region	Number
North Thames Anglia	2
South East	1
South West	5
Scotland	1

Nanny Agencies

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of nanny agencies operating in the UK. [66932]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have made no such estimate but I expect to receive their views, along with those of other agencies, on the review to be published shortly of the statutory standards of conduct set under the Employment Agencies Act 1973.

Working Time Regulations 1998

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what publicity the Government have given to the provisions of the Working Time Regulations 1998. [66866]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Department ran a public awareness campaign in the national press in September and October. Guidance material on the new legislation is available free through a number of public outlets (Libraries, Citizens Advice Bureaus etc), on the internet or can be obtained directly on 0845 6000 925.

Garages (VAT Exemption)

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of (a) competition policy issues which arise from insurance companies which own their own garages and carry out in-house repairs being exempt from VAT on labour and (b) the impact which this has on independent garages; and if he will make a statement. [67247]

Dr. Howells: Under UK competition legislation, the Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for monitoring markets and considering allegations of anti-competitive practices, abuse of monopoly position and restrictive trade practices.

I understand that the possible VAT advantages which may be derived by insurers who carry out repairs in their own in-house body shops were considered by the Director General in 1998 as part of a review of the recommended repairer schemes operated by insurance companies. The Director General concluded that action under the competition legislation was not appropriate.

Questions about exemptions from VAT systems are a matter for Customs and Excise. I understand Customs and Excise are currently looking further at this issue and would welcome evidence of the revenue and employment consequences.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew), of 18 January 1999, Official Report, columns 364–65, on nuclear fuel, what is the basis for his statement that the Japanese Government's preferred means of using recovered plutonium is for it to be converted into MOX nuclear fuel. [67099]

Mr. Battle: The policy of the Japanese Government with respect to the nuclear energy industry is set out approximately every five years in a document published by Japan's Atomic Energy Commission. This is called the "Long Term Programme for Research, Development and Utilisation of Nuclear Energy". In the most recent of these documents, published in 1994, the Atomic Energy Commission confirmed Japan's policy on recycling nuclear fuel and noted the need to begin using MOX fuel. More recently, a full review of Japan's nuclear fuel recycling policy was undertaken and culminated in the publication on 31 January 1997 of a policy statement by the Atomic Energy Commission. This policy statement, which was subsequently endorsed by the Japanese Cabinet on 4 February 1997, proposed a prompt start to a programme for using MOX fuel in Japanese light water reactors. The contracts between the Japanese electricity utilities and both BNFL and COGEMA for the supply of MOX fuel are consistent with that programme.

Transco

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how he proposes to use his special share to protect consumers in the impending break up of Transco by British Gas plc. [67336]

Mr. Battle: The effect of the Government's special share in BG plc is to prohibit any person from having an interest in shares which carry 15 per cent. or more of the total votes attaching to the shares in BG plc. Given their market-sensitive nature, significant announcements about policy towards the special share would be made through the Stock Exchange. The interests of consumers are protected through the regulatory system; this is enforced by the Director General of Gas Supply, and is currently under review by the Government.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with British Gas plc about the break up and sale of Transco. [67335]

Mr. Battle: I meet the Chief Executive of BG plc from time to time to discuss matters of common interest.

German Parcels

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the purchase by the Post Office of German Parcels requires clearance by European or UK regulatory or competition authorities. [66834]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 21 January 1999]: I understand from the Post Office that all necessary clearances have been obtained.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial obligations have been incurred by the Post Office in its acquisition of and indirect stake in General Parcel arising from its purchase of German Parcels. [66835]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 21 January 1999]: Through its acquisition of German Parcels, the Post Office has also acquired 23 per cent. of the shares in General Parcel. I understand that there are no material additional financial obligations directly resulting from that shareholding.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to promote exports of renewable energy technologies by United Kingdom companies in the United Kingdom. [67690]

Mr. Battle: My Department assists British renewable energy companies to win export orders worldwide, and since 1995 has had a focused programme of activities including, trade missions, overseas seminars and exhibitions, inward visits, market research and information dissemination. This programme is supported by two dedicated Trade Promoters, who have been concentrating their efforts on target markets such as China, India and Spain. For example, last autumn the Minister for Science opened a renewable energy seminar, and associated trade mission, in Peking. We also take advantage of other opportunities in overseas markets, which in the past year have included, Poland, United States and the Philippines.

British renewable energy exports are estimated to have risen from an historic level of £10-£15 million p.a. in the early 90's to around £80-£100 million p.a. in the last two years.

What further support the Government might give to help UK renewable energy companies to exploit overseas markets is being considered as part of the policy review on renewable energy. I plan to publish a Consultation Paper on the Review shortly, which will set out the options and pose a number of questions to industry and interested parties.

Defence and Security Equipment Exports

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in respect of foreign (a) companies and (b) Governments which have been given guarantees in relation to defence and security equipment in the past three years (i) the name of the country to which defence and security equipment has been sold, (ii) the level of debt guaranteed for sales to each country in each of the last three years and (iii) the amount of that debt which was paid out by the ECGD in each of the last three years. [66981]

Mr. Wilson [pursuant to his reply, 25 January 1999, c. 28–29]: Unfortunately one of the figures given for Oman was wrongly transcribed, instead of an amount guaranteed of £908 million, the figure should read £0.9 million:

£ million

Year	Country	Amount guaranteed	Amount paid as claims under these guarantees 1996–97 to 1998–99
1997–98	Oman	0.9	0

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what visits he or his predecessors have made (a) overseas to countries other than EU member states and the applicant countries of Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovenia and Estonia and (b) to Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovenia and Estonia since those countries formally applied to join the EU. [67059]

Mr. Byers: Poland and Hungary applied to join the EU in April 1994. Since then the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has made the following visits to countries outside the EU.

Finland—June 1994 (not in EU at that time)
South Africa—July 1994
Korea & Malaysia—October 1994
Japan—January 1995
India—February 1995
Saudi Arabia—March 1995
China—May 1995
Singapore, Thailand & Malaysia—September 1995
USA & Canada—November 1995
India—January 1996
Japan, UAE—April 1996
Russia—May 1996
China & Bahrain—August/September 1996
Mexico & USA—October 1996
Singapore—December 1996
India & Pakistan—January 1997
Japan—May 1997
USA—September 1997
India & Australia—November 1997
China, Hong Kong & Pakistan—January 1998
Moscow—March/April 1998
Switzerland—May 1998
Singapore—June 1998
South Africa—September 1998
USA—October 1998.

SCOTLAND

Lockerbie

11. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the Crown Office in securing a trial of the suspects of the Lockerbie bombing. [65837]

Mr. McLeish: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is responsible for the prosecution of the two suspects accused of the Lockerbie bombing. Securing the surrender of the two suspects for trial is, at this stage, a matter within the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs.

Rural Public Transport

13. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to promote increased spending on rural public transport. [65839]

Mr. Macdonald: The Government are providing new resources to support rural public transport over the next three years. £13.5 million will be available through the Rural Transport Fund. As part of this initiative, I am pleased to be able to announce today that I am awarding grants totalling over £500,000 to 22 rural community transport projects. Many different areas of Scotland will benefit, ranging from Wigtownshire in the south to Orkney and Shetland in the north. In addition, local authorities will be able to bid to the Public Transport Fund for rural transport projects. That Fund will provide £90m over three years. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

19. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to promote increased spending on rural public transport. [65846]

Mr. Macdonald: £13.5 million is being invested over a 3 year period through the rural transport funding package announced last year. Taking the allocations the Government have made from this fund in 1998–99 as a yardstick, totals of £10.5 million would be available to local authorities to provide additional public transport services, £1.8 million for community transport projects and £1.2 million to assist rural petrol stations. I know that this initiative is being warmly welcomed in rural areas, not least because these resources represent additional funding not previously made available. In addition, local authorities will be able to bid to the Public Transport Fund for rural transport projects. The Fund will provide £90m over 3 years. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Numeracy and Literacy

14. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures have been taken to improve performance in numeracy and literacy in Scottish schools. [65840]

17. Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he has taken to improve performance in numeracy and literacy in Scottish schools. [65843]

Mrs. Liddell: The early intervention programme, worth a total of £60m over five years, will establish the basic literacy and numeracy skills children will need. We have set targets to raise the level of achievement in literacy and numeracy in line with the national benchmark of 80 per cent. of children achieving the relevant stages in primary school and 75 per cent. at S2. We have invested £30m over three years from the Excellence Fund to support in-service training of teachers with particular emphasis on literacy and numeracy in the P6 to S2 stages, and £15m over three years to support family literacy schemes to help parents to help children to read. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

New Deal

15. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the New Deal in Scotland. [65841]

Mr. Dewar: I am very encouraged by the early results of the New Deal for 18–24-year-olds.

Land Reform

16. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on his proposals to change the land ownership legislation in Scotland. [65842]

Mr. Dewar: The proposals which I launched earlier this month have received a wide welcome. Between the more extreme views, there is now a remarkable measure of agreement about the priorities for change.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

27. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many landowners in Scotland will be affected by his recommendations for compulsory purchase in his recent land reform proposals. [65854]

Mr. Macdonald: It is expected that use of the new power of compulsory purchase in the public interest would be justified only in exceptional circumstances.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to compensate landowners in Scotland who are adversely affected by his proposals for land reform. [65845]

Mr. Macdonald: Under these proposals, where land was acquired compulsorily, appropriate compensation arrangements would necessarily apply.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Housing

20. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on housing policy in Scotland. [65847]

Mr. Macdonald: As I announced on 23 November, we shall shortly be publishing a Green Paper on housing in Scotland. The Green Paper will be the first major policy document on Scottish housing in over a decade and will provide a sound basis for the new Scottish Parliament to develop its own policies and programmes. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Roads Programme

21. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's review of the roads programme. [65848]

Mr. Macdonald: The consultation period on the Government's proposed framework for the appraisal of trunk road investment in Scotland ended on 16 October 1998. The responses have now been analysed and some useful suggestions from respondents incorporated into the appraisal framework. The outcome of the review will be announced as soon as is practicable. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Economic Prospects

22. Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met senior representatives of the CBI in Scotland to discuss economic prospects. [65849]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend's most recent meeting with CBI Scotland was on 10 September when he was principal guest and speaker at their Annual Dinner. My noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for business and industry met senior officials of CBI Scotland on 11 August and again on 26 October. Scottish Office officials are also in regular contact with CBI Scotland to discuss a range of issues relating to the Scottish economy. Economic development will be devolved to the Scottish Parliament.

Industrial Trends

24. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the most recent quarterly industrial trends survey by the CBI in Scotland. [65851]

Mr. Macdonald: I have noted the results of the January 1999 CBI Scottish Industrial Trends Survey which were released this morning.

With one quarter of the world now in recession, no country is immune from the effects of the current instability in the world economy. I fully appreciate the difficulties this is causing for Scottish manufacturers.

The Government are taking firm action to ensure that the economy is capable of sustained and steady growth. The recent cuts in interest rates are possible because of the tough decisions we have taken.

Small Business Federation

25. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish Small Business Federation; and if he will make a statement. [65852]

Mr. Macdonald: Members of the Scottish Office Ministerial Team and officials are in regular contact with the Federation of Small Businesses and have met representatives of the Federation on a number of occasions. Most recently, my noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for business and industry opened the Federation's new premises in Glasgow on 20 October 1998, during which he met members of the Federation's Scottish Policy Team and national officials.

Diabetes

26. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive advice from the national screening committee about the feasibility of introducing a national screening programme for Type 2 diabetes. [65853]

Mr. Galbraith: The National Screening Committee is currently considering the detailed aspects of this issue. I hope that the Committee will be able to make recommendations to Ministers by the end of this year.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projects currently being considered for PFI funding in Scotland, indicating the number of contracts with performance bonuses as well as penalties built in; which projects are build, own and operate; and if the service costs for PFI projects can be broken down into capital cost and service cost. [66000]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 20 January 1999]: The information requested on projects under consideration for PFI funding and on signed projects which are build, own and operate schemes is set out in the tables.

Precise information on whether a scheme under consideration will be build, own and operate depends on the outcome of negotiations. No contract sponsored by The Scottish Office has a performance bonus regime. Payment mechanisms vary on the basis of usage, availability and performance. In general, payments commence on the delivery of services, with deductions thereafter for non-availability or poor performance. A feature of PFI projects is that they are not separable into components, and so service costs are not a separable element of the overall charge. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Notes:
Tables 1 and 2 do not contain those projects which are within Trust and Health Board delegated limits.
Table 2 excludes projects sponsored by Local Authorities.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the disadvantages which are assessed in respect of potential PFI projects in the National Health Service. [65835]

Mr. Galbraith: The current hospital building programme is the biggest in the history of the NHS. It is funded by a mixture of public and private finance. PFI funding is used when projects are affordable, prove value for money, offer improved healthcare and provide significant advantages for patients. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress in improving energy efficiency in Scottish homes. [65844]

Mr. Macdonald: Under the Government's Warm Deal, £2.5 million was spent last year on improving home energy efficiency in Scotland. This year's budget is just over £6 million and the same amount will be allocated next year. 25,000 households have already benefited and many more will do so. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Criminal Trials

31. Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to expedite trials in criminal cases. [65858]

Mr. Hoon: The Government are taking significant steps to reduce delay in criminal cases.

The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 contains measures to improve case management and bailed defendants will appear in court on the first available day after charge. In addition, fast tracking schemes are being introduced to halve the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders.

The Access to Justice Bill improves publicly funded criminal defence services through the introduction of contracting as well as taking powers to employ salaried defenders.

Land Registry

34. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current workload of the Land Registry; and what assessment he has made of the employment prospects of Land Registry staff as a result of the change in demand and the increased use of information technology. [65862]

Mr. Hoon: The current workload of the Land Registry is 10.8 million transactions for the first nine months of 1998–99. This compares with 9.3 million transactions for the same period in 1997–98 and represents an increase in business of 15.6 per cent.

Employment prospects for Land Registry staff have not changed as a result of its use of information technology. In response to increased property market activity in 1997–98, the Land Registry recruited 330 new members of staff to maintain service level requirements. Over the current financial year, the Land Registry intends recruiting some 240 staff to replace those lost through natural wastage. Information technology has enabled the Land Registry to develop the talents, skill and enthusiasm of its staff to provide a progressively improving service whilst maintaining a workforce in the region of 8,500.

Magistrates Clerks

35. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from interested parties with regard to the proposed changes to the qualifications required of a clerk to a magistrates court. [65863]

Mr. Hoon: My Department has received a number of representations on this matter. As of 15 January 1999 I have received 120 letters from MPs and 107 letters from members of the public. The Department also received 114 responses to the Consultation paper. These included representations from all seven of the representative bodies within the Magistrates' Courts Service.

Guilty Pleas

36. Caroline Flint: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, what was the average time taken to process guilty pleas for minor offences through the magistrates courts in the last year for which figures are available. [65864]

Mr. Hoon: For summary cases, in which the defendant entered an initial guilty plea, a sample taken in June 1998 found that the average time from first listing to completion was 16 days.

Magistrates

37. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates have been suspended or dismissed in each of the last five years; and if he will provide a breakdown of the main reasons. [65865]

Mr. Hoon: The number of magistrates removed from office by the Lord Chancellor in each of the last five years is as follows:

1995: 1

1996: 3

1998: 11.

The main reasons for removal were:

10 magistrates moved or emigrated and failed to notify the Clerk or resign;

10 magistrates were found to have conducted themselves improperly;

9 magistrates were convicted of criminal offences or had orders made against them in the civil courts.

No magistrates have been suspended by the Lord Chancellor in the last five years, although some have been required to refrain from sitting pending inquiry.

Solicitors

38. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress his Department has made in reviewing the current working practices of the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors. [65867]

Mr. Hoon: The Office for the Supervision of Solicitors is an independent body, and its working practices are primarily a matter for the Office. There are no current plans to alter the current arrangements for handling complaints against solicitors. However, the Legal Services Ombudsman oversees the handling of complaints against members of the legal profession, and she has stated in her latest report that although the Office has made some improvements since it started operating in September 1996 there is still a long way to go. When the Ombudsman publishes her next annual report later this year, I will consider whether any further action is necessary.

Legal System (Reforms)

39. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what cost savings he estimates will accrue from his planned reforms to the legal system and its administration. [65868]

Mr. Hoon: The Government are undertaking a wide-ranging programme of reforms of the legal system and its administration. The most significant elements of that programme are: the establishment of the Community Legal Service and the Criminal Defence Service and the measures to reduce delay in the Court of Appeal (Civil Division) in the Access to Justice Bill currently before Parliament; and the implementation of the first phase of reform of the civil justice system in April 1999.

Saving money is not the Government's objective. The reforms of the system should make it easier for those wishing to resolve disputes to do so effectively.

Those who need to seek assistance from a solicitor should find that costs are more predictable and the risks of litigation much less. No-win no-fee arrangements between lawyers and private clients in more cases will give greater access to justice. Contracting for publicly funded legal services will provide cost effective, quality assured and properly targeted help to those most in need and the taxpayer will get better value for money from what we spend. We will direct resources to areas of greater need or into areas where the market cannot provide necessary services.

Sheriffs

40. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to review the role of sheriffs. [65869]

Mr. Hoon: Sheriffs have a role in the enforcement of High Court judgments. A review of enforcement is currently being undertaken by the Lord Chancellor's Department, which will examine that role in some detail. Work on this stage of the review will begin in July 2000. Any proposals that might change the role of Sheriffs will be subject to full public consultation as and when they arise. I am not aware of any proposals to review the functions that Sheriffs have in addition to their enforcement role.

Law Commission Reports

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the titles and dates of publications of Law Commission reports on which legislation has not been enacted. [67308]

Mr. Hoon: A list is provided. The Law Commission has published 157 Law Reform reports and 18 Statute Law Revision reports, of which 57 have not resulted in legislation or have not been otherwise implemented. Of these, 14 were not intended for legislation and one further report, "Judicial Review and Statutory Appeals (Law Commission Report No. 226)", resulted in minor legislation but for completeness it is included in the list.

[1] Reports which did not call for legislation
[2] Only part of the report resulted in legislation

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what arrangements are in place in his Department to respond to Law Commission reports; and if he will make a statement. [67307]

Mr. Hoon: Reports which relate to the Lord Chancellor's areas of responsibility are allocated to the Division within his Department's Headquarters most closely concerned with the subjects covered. Progress on each report is monitored, and there are regular meetings between the Commission and senior Departmental staff to clarify issues and discuss how consideration of reports is taken forward.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what staff and other resources in his Department are dedicated to responding to Law Commission reports. [67306]

Mr. Hoon: No staff or other resources are solely dedicated to dealing with Law Commission reports. Because the Law Commission's reports raise issues relating to particular policy areas, they are handled by the police Divisions most closely concerned with the subject.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to respond to the Law Commission's report of March 1998 on psychiatric injury. [67309]

Mr. Hoon: I expect that the Government's response to the Law Commission's Report on Liability for Psychiatric Illness will be published within the next three months.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement concerning the backlog of unimplemented Law Commission reports concerning uncontroversial issues. [67305]

Mr. Hoon: Last year, we reviewed all Law Commission reports for which my Department was responsible, and which were then outstanding. I informed this House of the results of that exercise on 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 709, in response to a question asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Melanie Johnson). The Lord Chancellor, Lord Irvine of Lairg, provided further information on unimplemented Law Commission reports in another place on 29 July 1998, Official Report, House of Lords, columns 201–02.

Some aspects of the report on Restitution for Mistake of Law: Ultra Vires Public Authority Receipts and Payments (Law Commission report No. 227) remain outstanding from that review. We have consulted the Law Commission further on that report, and will publish the Government's response on the remaining matters within the next month.

Of the reports received since that review within the responsibility of my Department, there are two which are unlikely to prove controversial. These concern The Rules against Perpetuities and Excessive Accumulations of Income (Law Commission report No. 251) and Execution of Deeds and Documents by or on behalf of Bodies Corporate (Law Commission report No. 253). We expect to announce our decision on these reports in the spring.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to respond to the Law Commission's report of December 1997 on aggravated, exemplary damages. [67310]

Mr. Hoon: I expect that the Government's response to the Law Commission's Report on Aggravated, Exemplary and Restitutionary Damages will be published within the next three months.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what agreements exist between Government Departments and the Law Commission about the timing of responses to Law Commission reports. [67300]

Mr. Hoon: The Law Commission discusses such arrangements separately with the Departments concerned. The Lord Chancellor's Department aims to respond within six months of publication.

Lands Tribunal Appeals

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many lands tribunal appeals were lodged between 1 April 1997 and 31 December 1997. [67775]

Mr. Hoon: The Lands Tribunal registered 132 Rating Appeals and 52 Leasehold Reform Appeals between 1 April and 31 December 1997.

Notary Public Services

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the Government's policy with regard to the maintenance of the monopoly enjoyed by the Worshipful Company of Scriveners on notary public services in London. [67203]

Mr. Hoon: The Department has obtained the views of interested parties on this issue. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor is currently considering whether the monopoly should be abolished. He hopes to be able to announce his conclusions shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Glidewell Report

Mr. Beard: To ask the Attorney-General what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations of the Glidewell report in London. [65859]

The Attorney-General: My answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson) on 30 November 1998, Official Report, column 67, provided an interim progress report on the consideration and implementation of the recommendations in the Glidewell Report. A chart dealing with individual recommendations is in the Library of the House. Recommendations 54, 55 and 56 are specific to London. Recommendations 54 and 55 have been accepted and are being implemented. Recommendation 56 is under consideration. Work on the recommendations as a whole is currently being taken forward on a national basis. The post of Chief Crown Prosecutor for London and the Assistant Chief Crown Prosecutor posts are being filled through open competition and the selection process has begun. The intention is to make appointments by April 1999. In the meantime, preliminary planning is underway in CPS London to prepare for the implementation of changes locally. This will be taken forward by the new Chief Crown Prosecution for London when he or she takes up the post.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Human Rights

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will indicate (a) on what date she sought legal advice on possible conflicts between the recommendations of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights on contract compliance measures and European Union law, (b) on what date advice was received and (c) what were the principal conclusions; and if she will place a copy of the opinion in the Library. [64208]

Mr. Ingram: When the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights published its report "Employment Equality: Building for the Future" in June 1997 a working group and number of sub-groups, consisting of senior civil servants and legal advisers, were set up to study and advise Ministers on the Report's recommendations. The working group reported to Ministers on the recommendations on contract compliance in December 1997. Legal advisers were party to that advice but did not provide a specific opinion on the topic.

Child Benefit (Renewal Claims)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many renewal claims were made for child benefit (a) in 1997–98 and (b) from 1 April to 31 December 1998; how many (i) have been processed with payments made and order books issued and (ii) are outstanding; and how long it takes to process a renewal claim. [67032]

Mr. McFall: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Chris Thompson. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Chris Thompson to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 26 January 1999:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of applications for renewal order books for child Benefit.

The number of renewal order books issued for the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998 was 387,636 and for the period 1 April to 31 December 1998 it was 343,356. Figures are not available for those that are outstanding.

Renewal order books are normally issued automatically so there is no need for a renewal claim. While most order books are issued in time to ensure that there is no break in payment, there can be a delay in the issuing if some order books. This occurs when a customer has reported a change in their circumstances and enquiries have to be made to clarify their entitlement to benefit. I am aware that these delays can cause distress to customers and we have recently set up a special section to deal with these cases. This will ensure that the number of such cases are kept to a minimum and are processed as quickly as is possible.

I hope that this explains the position to you.

Northern Ireland Electricity

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she has taken to ensure that Northern Ireland Electricity (a) undertakes a review of existing infrastructure and investment in new infrastructure and (b) implements an effective strategy for communications with consumers. [67250]

Mr. Ingram: The Independent Director of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland has the statutory duty to protect the interests of consumers in respect of the continuity and quality of electricity supply services. He has sought a full and detailed report from Northern Ireland Electricity (NIE) to be delivered before the end of January 1999 on the company's response to the problems encountered by consumers over the Christmas holiday period, including the communication arrangements for keeping customers informed during emergencies. He plans to publish the NIE report along with its conclusions on the improvements needed to NIE arrangements for dealing with future emergency situations. The Director also proposes to publish a Consultation Paper seeking views on the proper balance between the costs of supplying electricity and the range and quality of customer services.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions have taken place with senior management in Northern Ireland Electricity concerning the protracted interruptions to electricity supply over the Christmas 1998 period; and what was the outcome. [67027]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the Chief Executive of Viridian Group plc, the holding company of Northern Ireland Electricity plc, on 6 January 1999. She expressed her concerns about the problems faced by electricity consumers over the Christmas 1998 period and requested an urgent report on the company's performance in response to the disruptions in supplies. NIE agreed to provide the Secretary of State with the requested report by 31 January 1999.

Belfast Agreement

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations have taken place and with whom regarding the proposed document on the normalisation of security in Northern Ireland as envisaged in the Belfast Agreement. [67488]

Mr. Ingram: Discussions continue through a range of contacts at both Ministerial and official level.

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to publish the proposed document on the normalisation of security in Northern Ireland as envisaged in the Belfast Agreement. [67487]

Mr. Ingram: We intend to publish soon a security strategy paper outlining our approach to normalisation.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

"Girls in Sport"

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment his Department has made of the "Girls in Sport" briefing document prepared by Nike UK in conjunction with Mary Peters, CBE. [64955]

Mr. Banks: I have read Nike UK's briefing document and welcome initiatives that lead to greater participation of women in sport.

Officials in my department have met with Nike UK to discuss the document and the issue of women and sport generally.

I understand that Nike UK will be evaluating responses to its document and publishing its findings in the Spring. I look forward to learning more about this in due course.

Opera Companies Review

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the (a) occupations and (b) employers of members of the Independent Review of the Future of the Royal Opera House Companies and the English National Opera. [66692]

Mr. Chris Smith: Members of the working group which reviewed the future of lyric theatre in London are listed, together with their occupations and employers, where applicable, at that time. The members were appointed to the working group by the Chairman, Sir Richard Eyre. Appointments were made in a personal capacity, taking into account members' expertise and experience. They did not represent specific organisations.

Local Deprivation Indicator

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which measures of local deprivation his Department and its agencies use in considering allocation of funds to local projects. [66723]

Mr. Chris Smith: A variety of statistics are used by public bodies sponsored by the Department in order to measure deprivation. For example:

Index of Local Deprivation; and

Index of Local Conditions for England and Wales; and various statistics used in Social Trends and Regional Trends.

Other statistics may also be taken into account, e.g., The English Sports Council uses the Index of Local Deprivation plus a table showing 85 local authority areas where there are pockets of urban deprivation together with a list of Rural Development Areas, the poorest non-urban places.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Stephen Lawrence

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the reasons for the length of time taken between the initial report of the Police Complaints Authority into the police investigation into the murder of Stephen Lawrence and the decision of the PCA on what disciplinary action to take against officers still serving in the Metropolitan Police. [66477]

Mr. Straw: This is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and the Police Complaints Authority (PCA). Following is a chronology of events provided by the Chairman of the PCA.

Date	Events
22 April 1993	The murder of Stephen Lawrence
13 February 1997	Complaint from Mrs. Lawrence received by the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) and referred for investigation to the PCA.
18 March 1997	Kent County Constabulary agreed as investigating force. (Deputy Chief Constable Robert Ayling—Senior Investigating Officer, Chief Superintendent David Clapperton—Investigation Officer).
29 September 1997	First contact between the Lawrence family and Kent Constabulary with the Police Complaints Authority.
1 December 1997	The Authority's report made to the Home Secretary under section 97(2) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act issued to Parliament and the public.
30 December 1997	Statutory statement of satisfaction with the investigation issued by the PCA. Formal conclusion of the investigation.
2 February 1998	Memorandum from the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) under section 90 of the Act received by PCA. This memorandum contains the recommendations of the force as to disciplinary outcomes of the investigation.
10 March 1998	PCA responds to MPS recommending charges of Neglect of Duty against DI Bullock and other informal disciplinary recommendations.
12 March 1998	Lawrence family informed of recommendations DI Bullock made aware of charge.
16 March 1998	Sir William Macpherson requests further action in disciplinary proceedings be delayed until his inquiry concludes Part 1.
May/June 1998	Correspondence/meetings between MPS and PCA as to whether MPS could respond to the PCA's recommended charges before or after the conclusion of Part 1 of the Macpherson Inquiry.
6 July 1998	Agreement reached that MPS would now respond to PCA recommendations in view of the completion of Phase 1 of the Macpherson Inquiry.
20 July 1998	MPS formally accepted charges in principle against DI Bullock.
21 October 1998	MPS respond with proposed charges against DI Bullock having taken counsel's advice.
November/December 1998	PCA recommended that further charges from MPS were insufficient to cover alleged matters of neglect by DI Bullock.
	Correspondence/discussion re further suggested charges. PCA decided to prepare detailed charges rather than accept MPS proposals.
4 January 1999	Final suggested charges submitted to MPS by PCA.
7 January 1999	Detailed charges, now 7 in number, accepted by MPS.
12 January 1999	PCA Press release announcing the number of charges and the direction that they will be heard by tribunal.

Ministerial Expenditure

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the investigation which he has announced into claims of excessive expenditure by the right hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) will be completed; [66922]

(2) if the results of the investigation into claims of excessive expenditure by the right hon. Member for Copeland will be published; [66921]

(3) who will conduct the investigation he announced on 17 January into claims of excessive expenditure by the right hon. Member for Copeland; [66923]

(4) if he will list the terms of reference of the investigation into claims of excessive expenditure by the right hon. Member for Copeland; [66920]

(5) if the investigation into the claims of excessive expenditure by the right hon. Member for Copeland will take evidence from third parties. [66925]

Mr. Straw: The hon. Member is misinformed. I have not announced any investigation into the matter referred to. I said that there has now been a complaint and of course there will be a response. That response is now contained in the letter from my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to the hon. Member dated 20 January, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Young Offender Institutions

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the length of time in each day for which remand prisoners in young offender institutions remain locked in their cells. [67045]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are investing substantial funds to develop more effective regimes in Prison Service establishments. They are determined to pursue active regimes in establishments holding young people as part of their commitment to focus the youth justice system on the prevention of offending by young people. The Prison Service is currently working on new regime standards and the creation of a distinct estate for boys aged 15 to 17 in consultation with the Youth Justice Board. These measures will better meet the needs of the young people and provide a more purposeful and active day. An assessment is also underway of the needs of girls under 18 years old.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of time prisoners on remand in young offender institutions spent in custody awaiting disposal of their case in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [67044]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information for all untried and convicted unsentenced young persons held in prisons in England and Wales is given in the table.

Estimated average time spent in custody for untried and convicted unsentenced young persons in prisons in England and Wales, 1994–98 [1]

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a requirement that all asylum interviews are tape-recorded. [67094]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My officials are considering the practical implications of piloting the tape-recording of asylum interviews. I will advise the House of my conclusions shortly.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to have disposed of the outstanding applications for asylum made between 1 July 1993 and 31 December 1995; [67110]

(2) when he expects to have disposed of the outstanding asylum applications made before 1 July 1993. [67096]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 332.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish guidelines to staff on implementing the new policy of considering compassionate circumstances at all stages of an asylum case. [67095]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As we made clear in our White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—A Modern Approach to Immigration and Asylum" published in July, we are developing criteria which would allow due weight to be given to compassionate factors in cases involving children, including cases of asylum claims, where refusal of leave to remain would otherwise be the appropriate course. Once the criteria are decided, instructions given to staff will be published.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of time from asylum application to initial decision in each year since 1980. [67117]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information from 1984 onwards is given in the table. Regretfully, information for earlier years is not available.

Average decision times in months, 1984–1998 [1]

Year of decision	All applications [2]	Applications lodged pre-July 1993	Applications lodged post-July 1993
1985	9	9	n/a

1996	17	53	12
1997	22	65	15
1998	17	79	12

[1] The average length of time (in months) relates to the year in which the decisions were made.

[2] Excluding dependants

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the lowest Civil Service grade at which a decision to refuse asylum may be made. [67113]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Asylum decisions are taken by trained officers at the appropriate grade depending on the complexity of the issues raised. For the majority of decisions, a decision to refuse would not be taken below the level of executive officer, but in some less complex cases a decision to refuse would be taken by an administrative officer.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if an individual who has been granted exceptional leave to remain will be entitled to apply for reunion with family members abroad within four years. [67093]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the family reunion concession, those who have been granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom may be joined by their pre-existing spouse and minor dependant children after they have spent four years in the United Kingdom provided that they can meet the maintenance and accommodation requirements of the Immigration Rules. Consideration is also given to allowing other family members to join a sponsor in the United Kingdom if there are compelling compassionate reasons for doing so.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications made between 1 July 1993 and 31 December 1995 have been disposed of to date; and with what result. [67111]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is given in the table.

Asylum applications made between 1 July 1993 and 31 December 1995 by status as at the end of 1998 [1]

Case status as at 31 December 1998

Young Remand Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of time spent by young people held in custody on remand before their case was decided in the last year for which figures are available. [67224]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is given in the table.

Estimated average time spent in custody for untried and convicted unsentenced young persons in prisons in England and Wales in 1998 [1]

Prisoners (Young People)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many boys aged (a) under 15, (b) 15, (c) 16 and (d) 17 years are currently imprisoned in adult prisons in England and Wales. [67231]

Mr. George Howarth: The currently available information relates to the population on the last day of December 1998 and is given in the table. Young persons held in adult prisons are normally accommodated separately from adults.

Persons aged under 15 years are not held in Prison Service establishments but are remanded to local authority accommodation. This information is published in a Department of Health publication entitled "Children accommodated in secure units" (reference A/F 97/21). This information is presented on a financial year basis with the last report covering the year ending 31 March 1997.

Young Prisoners (Suicides)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those people aged under 18 years who committed suicide in prisons in England and Wales last year were (a) being held in adult gaols and (b) on remand. [67218]

Mr. George Howarth: Regrettably, three apparent self-inflicted deaths occurred last year among those aged under 18 years in prisons in England and Wales, of which one was in a young offender unit of an adult prison. Two of the prisoners were unsentenced.

The inquest on the first death returned a verdict of suicide. The inquests on the remaining two deaths have not yet been held.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the incidence of suicide among people aged under 18 years in prisons in England and Wales. [67217]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are committed to doing everything possible to reduce the incidence of suicide in prisons. My noble Friend, Lord Williams, chairs a regular meeting between the Prison Service and a range of representatives from groups interested in prison suicides including: the Samaritans; Howard League; Prison Reform Trust; Inquest; and the Board of Visitors, to discuss how they can work more closely together.

The Prison Service is currently re-examining instructions and guidance on caring for the suicidal to be issued as a new Prison Service Order (PSO). The special needs of under 18 year olds will be considered as part of that review. In addition, the Prison Service is currently developing new regime standards for under 18 year olds in consultation with the Youth Justice Board. These, along with the creation of a distinct juvenile estate, will improve the standard of care and quality of regimes for remanded and sentenced juveniles held in Prison Service accommodation.

We welcome the current thematic review of suicide and self-harm conducted by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, the report of which is soon to be published. We look forward to any recommendations he has in this important area of work.

Prisons (Probation Service)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons in England and Wales do not have a probation service operating within the prison; and if he will make a statement. [67222]

Mr. George Howarth: Probation services operate in all prison establishments.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision he has made for additional staff at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate during the transfer of files from Croydon. [67240]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: About 42 staff were made available to help with moving files out of Lunar House (which is to be refurbished). Crating and transportation of files was carried out by a commercial contractor.

Deportation Orders

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 330, on deportation orders, if he will give the reasons for the deportation orders not having been given effect. [67337]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Reasons for orders not being given effect could be established only by examining each case individually at disproportionate cost. However, a delay may arise for one or more of the following reasons: an appeal or other legal challenge, an asylum application, difficulties in obtaining a travel document, the subject has still to complete a custodial sentence or cannot be traced. Some of the latter may have left the country without informing the Immigration Service. Orders issued later will inevitably be activated outside the reference period.

Prison Service (Learmont Report)

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to respond to the report of General Sir John Learmont on the Prison Service; and if he will make a statement. [68123]

Mr. Straw: General Sir John Learmont's report on the escapes from Parkhurst and the management of the Prison Service has had a huge impact. His findings, together with those of Sir John Woodcock's inquiry into the escape from Whitemoor in September 1994, have led to greatly improved physical security and a significant change in the way staff in prisons consider security as they go about their day to day tasks. The number of escapes, the measure by which the Prison Service is most often judged by the public, has dropped significantly since the report.

Of the 127 recommendations on prison security and the management of the Service, 118 have been accepted in full, in part or with some qualifications. The position on each recommendation is set out in a document which has been placed in the Library. Those recommendations which have been accepted but have not yet been implemented in full will be taken forward within existing resources. A revised Security Manual has now been published which will tie up a number of outstanding matters. I have decided not to accept Sir John's proposals for a High Security prison and a control prison, in the light of the significant improvements to security in the Category A estate and improvements in the management of the most seriously disruptive prisoners.

There remains one substantive recommendation on which I have asked for further work to be done—No. 63, proposing that all staff, including Governors, should normally wear uniform. I hope to be able to announce a decision on this recommendation soon and a final report on the outcome of this inquiry will be provided then.

Illegal Lotteries

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, column 482, if he will list the (a) names and (b) location of those magistrates' courts where prosecutions for lottery offences under sections 2, 3, 4, 13 and 14 of the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976 were tried in each of the years between 1994 and 1997, indicating the outcome of each hearing. [67587]

Mr. George Howarth: As the tables containing the information that we have from court reports are long, they have been placed in the Library.

Parades

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will collate and publish data from police authorities on (a) the number of towns in which St. Patrick's Day parades are held each year, (b) police estimates of the number of participants in parades of over 1,000 persons for each of the last 10 years and (c) the number of parades which raised public order concerns. [66963]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not held centrally. There are no plans to request this information from police authorities, which could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Correspondence (Political Impartiality)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to his Department's officials on the inclusion of party political material in correspondence; how he monitors the political impartiality of his officials with respect to the letters they send out; and if he will make a statement. [67153]

Mr. Straw: Civil servants are required under the terms of the Civil Service Code to conduct themselves with integrity, impartiality and honesty, and in such a way as to deserve and retain the confidence of Ministers and potential future Ministers. This is supported by a duty placed on Ministers not to use public resources for party political purposes, to uphold the political impartiality of the Civil Service and not to ask civil servants to act in any way which would conflict with the Civil Service Code.

If the hon. Member has a specific letter in mind and would like to give me the details I will of course consider the matter very carefully.

HEALTH

Blood Products

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice the Chief Medical Officer has issued to (a) public officials, (b) civil servants and (c) Ministers facing the risk of infection with hepatitis A on overseas visits, on the choice to be made between British-derived γ-(gamma-)globulin and the alternative hepatitis A vaccine. [61058]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 November 1998]: Advice to all these groups is the same as for other travellers.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what efforts have been made to obtain alternative supplies of hepatitis A vaccine as an alternative to British-derived γ-(gamma-)globulin; and with what results. [61052]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 November 1998]: There are circumstances where Hepatitis A vaccination is not clinically appropriate because of the time delay between its administration and the resulting protection becoming effective.

Two licensed Hepatitis A vaccines and non United Kingdom sourced gammaglobulins are already available.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of banning the use of British-derived γ-(gamma-)globulin; [61055]

(2) what assessment he has made of the advantages of a ban on the use of British-derived Anti-D. [61048]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 December 1998]: On 26 February 1998 the Committee on Safety of Medicines advised that the National Health Service Bio Products Laboratory and the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service's Protein Fractionation Centre take steps to source products from plasma derived from outside the United Kingdom including Anti-D and gamma globulin. The Committee further advised that this should be done within a timeframe to be agreed with the committee, giving regard to the effects on the supply of all products but especially of vital and less readily obtainable life saving products. In the meantime, the Committee did not advise withdrawal of licensed UK sourced Anti-D and gamma globulin products. I have accepted the Committee's advice and will keep the matter under review in the light of any further advice or changed circumstances.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the risk of contamination of British-derived γ-(gamma-)globulin stocks within the NHS with the infective agent of new variant CJD; [61056]

(2) what assessment he has received of the risk of contamination of British-derived Anti-D stocks within the NHS with the infective agent of new variant CJD. [61049]

Ms Jowell: [holding answer 27 November 1998] The Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) completed its review of the sourcing of blood products in May and advised that the theoretical risk that new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease could be transmitted by blood products could not be discounted. The Committee further advised that The National Health Service Bio Products Laboratory and the Protein Fractionation Centre should move to sourcing products from plasma derived outside the United Kingdom within a time frame agreed between the CSM and giving due regard to the need for uninterrupted supply of all products including Anti-D and gammaglobulin.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Canadian Government on the importation of British blood products into that country. [61146]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 November 1998]: We have had no such discussions with the Canadian Government.

No officials at the National Blood Authority (including the Blood Products Laboratory) have had discussions with the Canadian Government about the issue of importing blood products from the United Kingdom to Canada.

However, officials will continue to maintain close contact with their counterparts in Canada and a number of other countries on issues related to blood products.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what efforts have been made to obtain alternative supplies of ready-made Anti-D from foreign sources; and with what results;

(2) what efforts have been made to obtain alternative supplies of ready-made γ-(gamma-)globulin for hepatitis A protection from foreign sources; and with what results. [61051]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 November 1998]: In the case of anti-D it is crucial to maintain licensed supplies of this essential treatment and non United Kingdom sourced product made in this country will be available from mid 1999. In the meantime one licensed non UK derived product is already available, and we are exploring other sources. There are currently adequate supplies of licensed non UK sourced gammaglobulin products in the country.

The Department's advice to doctors on all issues relating to immunisation is contained in "Immunisation against infectious disease" (1996) and is an Her Majesty's Stationery Office publication. This advice states that active immunisation with Hepatitis A vaccine is the preferred method of protection against Hepatitis A infection.

Spongiform Encephalopathy (Transmission)

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the methods available to prevent transmission of spongiform encephalopathy between animals are suitable to be used for humans. [61057]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 November 1998]: No. The potential of prophylactic medicines has been demonstrated in rodents under laboratory conditions, but has not been developed for use in natural disease in either animals or humans.

In so far as modes of transmission of spongiform encephalopathies are understood, any prevention or control measure must be carefully evaluated for its safety and efficacy (by research study where appropriate). This would be necessary to establish whether it has wider applicability beyond the species in which its effectiveness had apparently been demonstrated.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to implement the recommended autoclave regime set out in Annex B, Table B.1 of the joint Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens/ Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee Working Group document entitled "Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy Agents: Safe working and the prevention of infection". [61059]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 November 1998]: The recommended autoclave regime set out in Annex B, Table B1 re-iterates previous advice from the Department, first issued in 1981. Therefore, the autoclave regime in itself is not new advice. The main change in the 1998 guidance with respect to surgical instruments is to advise disposal of all instruments used on patients with clinical symptoms of Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease and not just those used for neurological and ophthalmological surgery.

The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens/ Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee guidance gives advice to employers on the precautions needed to comply with the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations with respect to the agents of Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies.

The Department has publicised the updated guidance. In particular, on 28 April 1998 the Department's Deputy Chief Medical Officer wrote to the National Health Service announcing publication of the updated guidance. He asked that it be drawn to the attention of relevant staff, specifically those with responsibility for infection control and those responsible for re-processing medical devices. In his letter he highlighted that the annexe on decontamination would be particularly relevant.

It is the responsibility locally of trusts to ensure that such guidance is adhered to.

Consultation Document MLX 249

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that the Medicines Control Agency proposals set out in consultation document MLX 249 are modified to include a right of independent appeal against Medicines Control Agency decisions. [65176]

Ms Jowell: How the review panel is constituted, and its terms of reference, form an important part of the proposals. We will consider carefully all responses on these issues before deciding whether and what legislation should be brought before Parliament.

Accident and Emergency Services

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what levels of spare capacity in terms of (a) beds and (b) staff hospitals are advised to maintain to meet surges in demand for accident and emergency services. [65493]

Mr. Hutton: We have published guidance and good practice on managing emergency pressures in the emergency services action team (ESAT) reports of 1997 and 1998. Within this broad framework it is for health authorities and National Health Service trusts to balance services to meet emergency demand throughout the year. Copies of the ESAT reports are available in the Library.

Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all NHS trust and health authority appointments which were not made by the due date and which remained outstanding on 1 January. [65768]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

Haslar Hospital

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investment his Department has made in facilities at the Royal Naval Hospital, Haslar in each of the last five years. [65782]

Mr. Denham: The Department has made no investment in the facilities at the Royal Hospital Haslar in any of the last 5 years.

The Portsmouth Hospital National Health Service Trust and Royal Hospital Haslar work closely together and staff from both organisations work across both hospital sites. Doctors provide cover in certain specialties and staff are exchanged, in particular in cardiology and urology. No revenue transfer is involved. Haslar charges the NHS trust for the use of its magnetic resonance imaging scanner.

"Our Healthier Nation"

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend all relevant targets outlined in the Green Paper: "Our Healthier Nation", to include those aged 65 to 79 years. [66336]

Ms Jowell: The "Our Healthier Nation" Green Paper proposed four targets for improving health, three of which were expressed as reductions of mortality for people under 65. We received over 5,500 responses to the consultation, many of which commented on the implications of the proposals for older people and on the age range of the proposed targets.

We are currently developing the "Our Healthier Nation" White Paper taking full account of the consultation responses, including those relating to age limits on the targets. We plan to publish the White Paper in the spring.

Pain Killers (Pack Sizes)

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the impact of new regulations on aspirin and paracetamol pack sizes; what action he will take to ensure that pharmacists are aware of their discretion to supply up to 100 tablets at a time without a prescription; and if he will make a statement. [66674]

Ms Jowell: The Medicines Control Agency (MCA) is monitoring the impact of the new regulations on paracetamol and aspirin pack sizes and will review the effectiveness of the measures once sufficient data have been collected.

The pharmacist's discretion to supply up to 100 tablets or capsules at a time without a prescription was publicised by the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, the professional body for pharmacists, in August 1998 in their publication, the Pharmaceutical Journal. The MCA will be highlighting the availability of this discretion in an article it will shortly be submitting to the Journal on this and other issues relating to the introduction of the new pack sizes.

NHS Litigation Authority

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the role and responsibilities of the NHS Litigation Authority. [66580]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Litigation Authority (NHSLA) is a special health authority established in November 1995. Its principal task is to administer schemes set up under Section 21 of the NHS and Community Care Act 1990 to allow NHS bodies to pool the cost of injury, loss or damage to property and liabilities to third parties arising from the carrying out of their functions. The NHSLA administers three schemes:

a scheme covering liabilities for alleged clinical negligence where the incident occurred after 1 April 1995 (the clinical negligence scheme for NHS trusts);

a scheme relating to existing incidents which occurred before that date (the existing liabilities scheme); and a scheme to manage residual clinical negligence liabilities of regional health authorities from 1 April 1996.

From 1 April 1999 the NHSLA will also be responsible for establishing a scheme to provide cover for non-clinical risks.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names and remuneration of the members of the NHS Litigation Authority. [66579]

Mr. Denham: The membership of the National Health Service Litigation Authority is as follows.

Sir Bruce Martin QC (Chairman);

Mr. Steve Walker (Chief Executive);

Mr. Ian McQuattie (Director of Finance);

Mr. John Speedman (Non-Executive);

Mr. R. S. Bradshaw (Non -Executive).

The accounts for 1998 show that the Chairman's remuneration was £19,285 and the chief executive's remuneration was £81,614 (including benefits and pension contributions). Other members received remuneration in the ranges:

£10,001–20,000: 1

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many cases since 2 May 1997 the NHS Litigation Authority has recommended the discontinuance of alternative disputes resolution proceedings; and if he will make a statement. [66582]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Litigation Authority has authorised discontinuance on one alternative dispute resolution proceeding since 2 May 1997. I have written to the hon. Member separately on that case. The NHS Litigation Authority actively promotes alternatives to litigation for resolving disputes wherever possible.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy towards the use of alternative dispute resolution procedures to deal with allegations of negligence in the NHS. [66581]

Mr. Denham: We are keen to find improved ways of handling clinical negligence claims which do not involve litigation. The National Health Service Executive launched pilot mediation schemes in the Anglia and Oxford and Northern and Yorkshire regions in April 1995 with the aim of exploring the scope for mediation as an appropriate alternative to litigation in the resolution of clinical disputes. The pilots ended last year and an evaluation project is in the final stages of reporting. We will look carefully at the findings and particularly whether there is scope to extend the use of mediation in the NHS.

Funding

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department (a) gives and (b) intends to give to NHS authorities to take full account of the clinical and cost effectiveness of new and current health interventions when making decisions on funding. [66741]

Mr. Denham: Priorities and planning guidance is issued annually to health authorities. We expect all decision makers in the National Health Service—including health authorities—to take account of clinical and cost effectiveness when making decisions on clinical care.

We are setting up the National Institute for Clinical Excellence which will, for the first time, provide the NHS with a single, coherent source for the development and dissemination of guidance about clinical and cost effectiveness.

NHS Trusts (Cheshire)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members on the (a) North Cheshire Health Authority, (b) Warrington Community Health Trust and (c) Warrington Hospital NHS Trust are resident in (i) the Warrington, North constituency, (ii) the Warrington, South constituency and (iii) other areas. [66832]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 21 January 1999]: One non-executive member of the North Cheshire Health Authority currently resides in the Warrington, North constituency, two reside in Warrington, South and two in other constituencies. The remaining non-executive post is not filled at present.

One non-executive member of Warrington Hospital National Health Service Trust currently resides in the Warrington, North constituency, three reside in Warrington, South and two in other constituencies.

Two non-executive members of Warrington Community National Health Service Trust currently reside in the Warrington, North constituency, and two reside in the Warrington, South. The remaining two non-executive posts are not filled at present.

Fluoridation (Northumbrian Water)

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of the judicial review being brought by Newcastle and North Tyneside Health Authority against Northumbrian Water over the company's refusal to fluoridise water supplies. [65958]

Ms Jowell: The Newcastle and North Tyneside Health Authority estimate legal costs of around £10,000 for each of the six health authorities that have been involved in the joint legal action.

Departmental Staff (Travel)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [67494]

Ms Jowell: Most staff in the Department are currently reimbursed for business use of their private car at the rate of 40 pence per mile for the first 4,000 miles in a year, and 22.5 pence thereafter.

Staff are encouraged to use public transport where it is cost effective to do so. As part of its strategy to encourage staff to switch to public transport and less polluting forms of travel, the Department has also set up a working group to review the policies and operational arrangements for business travel by departmental staff.

The Department encourages the use of bicycles wherever practicable and makes available an advance of salary of up to £500 for staff to purchase a bicycle and necessary safety equipment.

Beta-Interferon

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the research being commissioned by his Department into the effectiveness of Betaferon (Beta-Interferon-1b) for relapsing-remitting and secondary progressive multiple sclerosis, specifying the length of the research period, its cost and with whom the research is to be placed. [67425]

Mr. Hutton: Experts are still discussing the design of the proposed trial and no decision has therefore been made yet on its feasibility or value.

Dental Services (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much in total out of Gloucestershire Health Authority's Investing in Dentistry bid he expects to allocate; when he expects that total amount to be allocated by; and if he will make a statement. [67490]

Mr. Denham: Only those Gloucestershire Health Authority investing in dentistry bids which have been approved by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health will receive funding. Payment of the grants will depend on the individual terms and conditions of each of the awards.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Illegal Fishing

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has taken and what further measures are planned to address the problem of illegal fishing by Spanish nationals in Gibraltarian waters. [67266]

Ms Quin: In addition to the normal enforcement measures of the Royal Gibraltar Police and Gibraltar Police and Gibraltar Security Police, we have sought to address this problem by encouraging dialogue with fishermen, both at a local level and via the authorities in Madrid. We have also reached an understanding with the Spanish authorities of the situation that had prevailed between 1991 (when the Gibraltar Nature Protection Ordinance was introduced) and 1997 during which Spanish fishermen respected the authority of the Police, and have been seeking to return to that situation.

Chechnya

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when the British Embassy in Moscow learnt of the Interfax report of 6 December that a rescue attempt was to be made to release the hostages in Chechnya, employed by Granger Telecom; [66958]

(2) when the Foreign Office in London learned of the BBC World Service report from the Caversham Monitoring Service that Interfax had reported that a rescue attempt was to be made to release the hostages in Chechnya employed by Granger Telecom. [66959]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 21 January 1999, c. 536]: An administrative error led to an omission in my answer of 21 January to the hon. Member. The correct answer should read as follows:

On 7 December 1998, both HM Embassy Moscow and FCO officials in London saw the Interfax news agency despatch reporting Chechen assertions that the men were being held outside Chechnya and that Russian law-enforcement agencies might try to rescue the hostages.

EU Common Foreign and Security Policy

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the subjects currently under discussion by common foreign and security policy working groups; and if he will make a statement on the nature of United Kingdom representation in each group. [66150]

Ms Quin: Twenty-eight Common Foreign and Security Policy Working Groups meet on a regular basis. The UK attends all these meetings. The UK delegations are composed of officials with the necessary expertise from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and other Government Departments concerned.

The subjects which the Working Groups cover are:

Administrative Affairs Africa
Armaments Policy Asia
Central Europe
Consular Affairs
Conventional Arms Exports Communications
Drugs
Global Disarmament
Eastern Europe and Central Asia
Euro-Mediterranean
Human Rights
Latin America

Fishing Dispute (Gibraltar)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to refer the dispute over Spanish vessels fishing in British waters around Gibraltar to the International Court at The Hague. [67350]

Ms Quin [holding answer 25 January 1999]: We have no plans to refer this dispute to the International Court of Justice.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has put to the Spanish Government with a view to finding a solution to the current dispute over fishing by Spanish fishing boats in British waters around Gibraltar. [67349]

Ms Quin [holding answer 25 January 1999]: We have reached an understanding with the Spanish authorities of the situation that had prevailed between 1991 (when the Gibraltar Nature Protection Ordinance was introduced) and 1997 during which Spanish fishermen respected the authority of the Police. We have been seeking, through continuing dialogue with the Spanish authorities, to return to that situation.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what British reinforcements have been sent to Gibraltar to enforce the law with regard to fishing in British waters. [67351]

Ms Quin [holding answer 25 January 1999]: Primary responsibility for enforcing the laws concerning fishing in British waters around Gibraltar lies with the Royal Gibraltar Police. They have not been reinforced from the United Kingdom.

Coral Reefs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigation he has conducted into the effects of coral bleaching on the reefs of the British Indian Ocean Territory. [65823]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The British Indian Ocean Territory Government have made initial assessment of the extent of coral bleaching in the Territory. They have also agreed to sponsor a further, in-depth study into coral bleaching, which we hope will take place in February.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that commercial fishing close to the reefs of the British Indian Ocean Territory is adjusted to ensure the safe-guarding of the reefs. [65824]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The commercial inshore fishery occurs from dories drifting across the banks using only hook and lines, which are not considered harmful. We do not allow other methods such as trawling where nets could become entangled on the reef.

Controls are implemented by limited licensing, based on best available scientific information and adopting a precautionary approach to fisheries management.

Right hon. Member for Hartlepool

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is employing the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) as an adviser. [67885]

Mr. Robin Cook: No, but I will continue to maintain close contact with all Parliamentary colleagues interested in foreign policy.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to amend annexe II of the 1976 legislative measure of the EEC on Direct Elections to extend the franchise to the people of Gibraltar for elections to the European Parliament. [67396]

Ms Quin: We have no plans to seek to amend annexe II of the 1976 EC Act. Amendment would require the agreement of all Member States. In present circumstances there is no prospect of securing this.

Arms Embargoes

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many arms embargoes were in force on 1 December 1997; who they were against; on what date each relevant Order in Council was made; on what date a copy of each Order in Council was sent to the relevant British embassy or high commission; and on what date each order in Council was first read by the relevant British ambassador or high commissioner. [67698]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: At 1 December 1997, the following arms embargoes were in operation:

UN

Iraq

UNSCR 661 adopted on 6 August 1990. (The resolution imposed a general ban on exports, including arms.) The Iraq and Kuwait (United Nations Sanctions) Order 1990 was made on 8 August 1990.

Somalia

UNSCR 733 adopted on 23 January 1992. The United Nations Arms Embargoes (Liberia, Somalia and the Former Yugoslavia) Order was made on 20 July 1993.

Libya

UNSCR 748 adopted on 31 March 1992. The Libya (United Nations Sanctions) Order 1992 was made on 8 April 1992, replaced by the Libya (United Nations Sanctions) Order 1993 made on 16 November 1993.

Liberia

UNSCR 788 adopted on 19 November 1992. The United Nations Arms Embargoes (Liberia, Somalia and the Former Yugoslavia) Order was made on 20 July 1993.

Angola

UNSCR 864 adopted on 15 September 1993. The Angola (United Nations Sanctions) Order 1993 was made on 29 September 1993.

Rwanda (and neighbouring States if for use in Rwanda)

UNSCR 1011 adopted on 16 August 1995, replacing UNSCR 918 adopted on 17 May 1994. The United Nations Arms Embargoes (Amendment) (Rwanda) Order was made on 22 June 1994 and the United Nations Arms Embargoes (Rwanda) (Amendment) Order was made on 12 February 1997.

Sierra Leone

UNSCR 1132 adopted on 8 October 1997. The Sierra Leone (United Nations Sanctions) Order was made on 30 October 1997.

EU

adopted on 17 December 1996

Bosnia and Herzegovina

adopted 26 February 1996 but entered into force 13 March 1996 (maintaining earlier ban on Former Yugoslavia)

Burma

declared 29 July 1991

China

declared 27 June 1989

Croatia

adopted 26 February 1996 but entered into force 13 March 1996 (maintaining earlier ban on Former Yugoslavia)

Nigeria

adopted 20 November 1995

Sudan

adopted 15 March 1994

OSCE

agreed 28 February 1992

agreed 28 February 1992.

In addition, the UK restricted the export of arms to the following countries:

Argentina

with effect from 3 April 1982

with effect from 1 March 1993.

Orders in Council are made in respect of arms embargoes imposed by the United Nations Security Council. (Other embargoes are implemented under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994.) Until recently, it was the practice to circulate copies of the relevant resolutions, rather than copies of the Orders in Council, or summaries of them, to the relevant High Commissions or Embassies. Since July 1998 all FCO Departments and Posts overseas and all Whitehall Departments have been sent details of the scope and provisions of all new sanctions, including arms embargoes.

Arms Exports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1998, Official Report, columns 122–23, when he will publish a report on UK strategic exports; and if he will make a statement. [67893]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We will publish the report as soon as possible.

Anglo-German Working Group

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of the persons appointed to represent Her Majesty's Government on the Anglo-German Working Group; and what are its terms of reference and the persons or bodies to whom it reports. [65746]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 18 January 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and Chancellor Schroeder have authorised informal bilateral contacts. They are led on the British side by Lord Falconer on behalf of the Government. The exchanges also cover party political matters, which are handled on behalf of the Labour Party by my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson).

CABINET OFFICE

Departmental Staff (Travel)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [67495]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The mileage rates currently applicable to staff are:

	Private car rate
Miles travelled in a financial year	Up to 1500cc	Over 1500cc
Up to 4,000 miles	34p	43p
Over 4,000 miles	19p	23p

The Cabinet Office, along with its Agencies, is in the process of developing a new environmental policy and green action plan in line with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' guidance. An integral part of this development is consideration of how best to develop a Green Transport Plan for the Department. It is also an issue which is already being addressed as part of the development of the Department's new headquarters building.

TREASURY

Child Benefit

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate (a) the number of married couples entitled to child benefit whose combined taxable income exceeds the higher rate threshold where neither spouse pays higher rate tax and (b) the number of married couples entitled to child benefit whose combined taxable incomes are (i) less than £35,000, (ii) £40,000, (iii) £50,000 and (iv) less than twice the higher rate threshold, where one of the spouses is a higher rate taxpayer. [64672]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of married couples entitled to child benefit whose combined taxable income exceeds the higher rate threshold for a single person and where neither spouse pays tax at the higher rate is estimated to be about 850,000 for 1998–99.

Estimates for 1998–99 for the number of married couples entitled to child benefit and where one of the spouses is a higher rate taxpayer are given in the table.

Combined taxable income	Number of married couples
Less than £35,000	80,000
Less than £40,000	200,000
Less than £50,000	450,000
Less than £62,590[1]	675,000

[1] twice the higher rate threshold for a single person.

Concordats

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the concordats for regulating competition between (a) the regional development agencies in England and (b) the RDAs and equivalent bodies for Scotland and Wales. [66184]

Mrs. Roche: The Government will shortly publish a concordat on financial assistance to industry.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66214]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4.

EMU

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the reasons for which Sweden was excluded from early entry into Phase Three of Economic and Monetary Union. [66387]

Ms Hewitt: The Council Decision of 3 May 1998, in accordance with Article 109j(4) of the EC Treaty, stated that Sweden did not fulfil the necessary conditions for adoption of the single currency. Unlike the currencies of Italy and Finland, neither of which were within the ERM for two years, the Swedish Crown exhibited insufficient exchange rate stability during the two year review period. In addition, national legislation in Sweden, including the statute of the Swedish national central bank, was not compatible with the requirements of Articles 107 and 108 of the Treaty and the Statute of the ESCB.

EU Code of Conduct Group

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the taxes discussed by the EU Code of Conduct Group to date. [66345]

Dawn Primarolo: The EU Code of Conduct Group deals with business taxation and is therefore principally concerned with corporation tax and equivalent taxes in other Member States.

Tax Competition

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide the Government's definition of harmful tax competition. [66340]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton (Mr. Gibb) on 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 752.

Offshore Trusts

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on offshore trusts, with particular reference to trusts which will be exempt from new legislation. [66447]

Dawn Primarolo: It is our policy to ensure that the UK tax liability of those who set up, or benefit from, offshore trusts, reflects the benefits which they, or their immediate family, may receive from the trust. In the last Finance Act we introduced a comprehensive and effective regime for taxing gains realised within offshore trusts. This is a difficult and complex area of the law, which we keep under continual review to ensure that the system operates as we intend.

Asbestos Exposure

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of registered deaths in the United Kingdom within the last 12 months where the cause of death was due to exposure to asbestos; and if he will make a statement. [66650]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 26 January 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the number of registered deaths in the United Kingdom within the last 12 months where the cause of death was due to exposure to asbestos.

In 1997, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 1,597 deaths in the United Kingdom that were certified with asbestos or asbestos related diseases as a main or contributory cause of death.

Pesticide Tax

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when a decision concerning the imposition of a pesticide tax will be made. [66589]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 19 January 1999]: As was made clear in the Pre-Budget Report, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has commissioned research into whether a tax or charge on pesticides would be an effective way to reduce pollution. The Government are currently reviewing the findings of that research project, and will evaluate the results of other ongoing work in considering how best to proceed.

Duty-free Sales

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on retaining duty free sales in the EU. [64597]

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on retaining duty free sales in Europe. [64620]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 19 January 1999]: At the Vienna European Council meeting on 11 December 1998 the UK argued that there was a good case for looking once more at the decision to end duty-free sales in the EU. Heads of Government agreed that the Commission and ECOFIN should examine, by March 1999, the problems which could arise with regard to employment and to address, on the basis of proposals from the Commission, possible means of tackling these problems, including the possibility of a limited extension of duty-free sales.

The UK is now actively pursuing these issues with the Commission and other member states in order to find an acceptable solution, which has unanimous agreement.

Capital Assets (Devaluation)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the extent of the devaluation of capital assets worldwide as a result of the financial crisis in East Asia and South America; and what its principal effects have been on Her Majesty's Government policy. [66727]

Ms Hewitt: Despite recent gains in some East Asian and Latin American markets, stock values and currencies in these regions are still well below their levels of 18 months ago. But it is difficult to assess the direct effect of these price movements on global capital assets.

Because financial turbulence in Asia and the Americas has negative consequences for the inhabitants of those regions and poses a threat to global economic stability, the UK has taken a lead in finding solutions to the present turmoil. The G7 Declaration of 30 October 1998, which the UK brokered as G7 Chair, contained commitments to fight financial market contagion through an enhanced IMF facility; increase the transparency of the international financial system; enhance global financial regulation, in particular through better co-ordination between international financial institutions, national regulators and international regulatory bodies; and improve financial crisis prevention and resolution mechanisms, including the involvement of private sector creditors. G7 Finance ministers and Central Bank governors have also committed themselves to > "create or sustain the conditions for strong, domestic demand-led growth and financial stability", reflected in the interest rate cuts in G7 countries in recent months.

Fixed Investments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the excess of capital moneys over presently remunerative fixed investment opportunities worldwide; and if he will make a statement. [66726]

Ms Hewitt: International investment flows can bring huge benefits to all countries. But they also entail risks, as the events of the last 18 months have shown, when investors are insufficiently informed and educated and when institutions lack credibility.

The G7 declaration of 30 October 1998 set out a blueprint for the reform of the international financial architecture which will make a major difference in this regard. Increased transparency and openness in the public and private sector will provide better information on which the private sector can base its risk assessment and investment decisions. Better methods of involving the private sector in crisis resolution and prevention will also sharpen private sector risk-management and reduce moral hazard.

In addition, the G7 declaration pledges to bring together the key international institutions and key national authorities involved in financial sector stability better to co-operate and to co-ordinate their activities in the management and development of policies to foster stability and reduce systemic risk in the international financial system and to exchange information more systematically on these risks.

The Government believe that the opening of capital markets in emerging economies must be carried out in a careful and well-sequenced manner if countries are to benefit from closer integration into the global economy.

ECOFIN Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the ECOFIN Council held in Brussels on 18 January; and if he will make a statement. [66819]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor attended the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 20 January 1999.

The German Presidency and the Commission presented their work programmes in public session. All Member States were able to present their views on the programme. The emphasis on tackling unemployment was particularly welcomed. ECOFIN adopted a Report on information requirements in Economic and Monetary Union.

The Chairman of the Economic and Financial Committee presented Opinions on the Irish and Austrian Stability programmes. The Commission and several Member State gave their views on the Opinions. Both opinions, with minor amendments, were adopted by the Council. There was a brief discussion of Agenda 2000.

Beer Duty

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for harmonising beer duty in the United Kingdom with that of other European Union countries. [66970]

Dawn Primarolo: Member states are free to set excise duty rates at the level they feel are appropriate to their own particular circumstances, subject only to the agreed minimum rates. This was the basis of the agreement reached by all member states in ECOFIN in 1992 and achieved harmonisation to the extent necessary for completion of the Single Market. Nevertheless, the UK continues to argue for a levelling up of most minimum rates but recognises that progress is likely only in the long term.

VAT Returns (Euros)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons Customs and Excise is unable to accept VAT returns in euros; and if he will make a statement. [66983]

Ms Hewitt: Customs and Excise are unable to accept VAT returns in euros because to do so would present a real risk of serious revenue losses.

The tax is accounted for in respect of monthly or quarterly periods but there is a period of one month in either case for a VAT return to be submitted. Exchange rates may move during this period, giving the business an opportunity to time the sending of the return to maximise the benefit of any fluctuation.

Taxes (Final Reminders)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to ensure that the Inland Revenue does not issue final reminders from more than one tax office, in cases involving pensioners who receive pensions from more than one source. [66982]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue provides taxpayers with a unique taxpayer reference in the SA system from which the issue of final reminders and other forms is controlled. This unique reference should ensure that even where a taxpayer has more than one source of income and deals with more than one tax office, final reminders are generated only once.

HIPC Initiative

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made towards the goal set out in the G8's Birmingham Communiqué of all the heavily indebted poor countries being admitted to the HIPC initiative by the year 2000. [66742]

Ms Hewitt: Sixteen out of the 20 countries originally identified by the World Bank/IMF as eligible for HIPC debt relief have embarked on the process: Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Guinea Bissau, Guyana, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Rwanda, Tanzania, Uganda and Zambia. Four have not: Burundi, Democratic Republic of Congo, Myanmar and Sao Tome and Principe.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent amendments to the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative have been made to give further support to post-conflict and post-catastrophe countries. [67037]

Ms Hewitt: At the Annual Meetings of the IMF and World Bank in October, the decision was made to allow IMF post conflict assistance programmes to count towards a country's track record under the HIPC initiative. This could bring decision point (and therefore debt relief) forward by up to 12 months for certain countries, including Rwanda.

Following Hurricane Mitch, the Chancellor secured several measures to help mitigate the debt services burdens of post-catastrophe countries, including the establishment of an IMF/World Bank Trust Fund. The UK contributed £10 million to this. In December the UK participated in a Paris Club agreement which granted a three year moratorium on debt service payments from Honduras and Nicaragua.

Winter Mortality Rates

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara) of 8 December 1998, Official Report, column 140, regarding deaths from hypothermia, if he will provide the information by (i) region and (ii) parliamentary constituency. [67296]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply. The tables referred to in the letter are in the Library.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Linda Gilroy, dated 26 January 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the number of deaths from hypothermia by (i) region and (ii) parliamentary constituency in England and Wales in 1997.

The information requested is shown in the attached table.

Smuggling

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the quantity of beer smuggled into the United Kingdom for resale in the last year. [67229]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise estimate the volume of beer smuggled cross-Channel into the United Kingdom for resale in 1998 to be 2.6 million hectolitres.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many prosecutions for smuggling (a) alcohol and (b) tobacco there have been in each quarter since January 1993. [67230]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is not available in this form. Specific figures are available for the number of prosecutions generated by Excise Verification Officers for smuggling of alcohol and/or tobacco from within the European Union:

Year	Number
1993–94	44
1994–95	515
1995–96	438
1996–97	502
1997–98	417
1998–99 (April-December)	408

Exports

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the level of business confidence in relation to UK exports; and if he will make a statement. [67630]

Ms Hewitt: The Government welcome the improvement in exporters' sentiment revealed in recent surveys from the Confederation of British Industry and the British Chambers of Commerce.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maples: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he travelled from the Commonwealth Finance Ministers meeting in Mauritius in September 1997 to Bangkok for the ASEM meeting; who accompanied him; what was the cost; and what use he made of chartered helicopters for travel in and around Bangkok during the time he was there for the ASEM meeting. [67784]

Mr. Gordon Brown: All arrangements for this journey fully complied with the provisions of the Ministerial Code and Cabinet Office guidance on travel by Ministers.

Personal Investment Authority

Mr. Collins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to introduce an independent appeals element into the decisions of the Personal Investment Authority; and if he will make a statement. [67646]

Ms Hewitt: As a self-regulating organisation, the Personal Investment Authority must have fair and reasonable rules for admission, expulsion and discipline over its member firms, with scope for appeals. The adequacy of these arrangements is a matter for the Financial Services Authority.

Construction Industry

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he plans to take in respect of sole traders, partnerships and small companies in the construction industry who do not qualify for tax certificates as regards their position under the new deduction regulations; and if he will make a statement. [66980]

Dawn Primarolo: We shall be introducing legislation in the next Finance Bill to amend the rules of the new construction industry scheme which is due to take effect from 1 August 1999. That will make it easier for many small and medium businesses to obtain gross payment certificates. Those who do not qualify for certificates will be paid with deductions made on account of tax and national insurance contributions (NICs), but they will not ultimately be liable for any more tax and NICs than if they held certificates. The Inland Revenue has consulted widely with construction industry representative bodies on the design of the new scheme and has published guidance and set up telephone helplines for contractors and subcontractors.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he anticipates that the Food Standards Agency will be in operation. [66554]

Mr. Rooker: The date when the Food Standards Agency is established will depend on how soon the necessary legislation can be approved by Parliament. We hope to introduce a Bill later this Session if sufficient extra time is available.

CAP Reform

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will pursue with the European Commission proposals to reform the CAP by (a) abolishing the tobacco subsidy in Europe and (b) assisting pig farmers. [66895]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission is fully aware that the Government disapprove of the EU tobacco regime. The Commission is to report on the functioning of the common market organisation for raw tobacco before 1 April 2002, and we will continue to put forward our views.

I am keeping closely in touch with the Commission on the current pig situation. However, I consider that it is better to use existing market instruments rather than attempting a reform of the regime.

Tobacco (EU Subsidies)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on withdrawing the subsidy to tobacco producers in the European Union. [66903]

Mr. Rooker: This Ministry receives occasional correspondence about the EU tobacco regime. Last year, a number of letters from the public were received early in the year at the time of the proposals for reform of the regime.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress his Department made in encouraging installers of the Home Energy Efficiency scheme to take on young trainees as part of the Government's Welfare-to-Work programme. [66660]

Mr. Andrew Smith: All employers are encouraged to take on young people under the New Deal and we have made strong progress in engaging employers nationally and locally. We also recognise the importance of the four New Deal options. Under the Environment Task Force option, two of the key environmental objectives to improve the physical condition and energy efficiency of buildings and to conserve energy through the promotion of energy efficient schemes.

Travel-to-interview Costs

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discretion the Employment Service has to help with travel costs for interviews for people who have been unemployed for less than 13 weeks. [66822]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Employment Service Business Managers have the discretion to ignore short breaks in the 13 week unemployed qualifying period for access to the Travel to Interview Scheme (TIS). The Employment Service may also offer immediate access to the Scheme for victims of designated large redundancies.

Higher Education (Complaints Procedures)

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what action is being taken to ensure that universities and other institutions of higher education have in place an internal complaints procedure available to (a) undergraduates and (b) postgraduates; [67205]

(2) if he will list those universities and other institutions of higher education which do not currently have in place a formal internal complaints procedure available to (a) undergraduate and (b) postgraduate students; and what timetable has been set for the introduction of such complaints procedures in each case. [67207]

Mr. Mudie: In our response to the Report of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education (the Dearing Committee) we accepted the Committee's recommendation that, over the two years up to July 1999, institutions should review and, if necessary, amend their arrangements for handling complaints from students. We have encouraged them to take the necessary action in the light of guidance issued by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on an independent review of student appeals and complaints, published in April 1998. The Department does not currently keep records of whether or not an institution has a student complaints procedure but we shall be reviewing this summer the progress made in following up the Dearing Committee's recommendation.

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance is given by (a) the Quality Assurance Agency and (b) other bodies to universities and other institutions of higher education in relation to (i) the systems to be used in their internal complaints procedures and (ii) the ways in which complaints procedures should be publicised. [67206]

Mr. Mudie: We are not aware of any guidance issued by the Quality Assurance Agency. The Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals published guidance on an independent review of student appeals and complaints on 23 April 1998. The guidance does not advocate uniform machinery for the higher education sector. Rather, it identifies six options for meeting the principle of independent review.

Physical Education

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the time actually spent by pupils on PE at Key Stages 1 and 2. [67737]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There is no prescribed statutory minimum or maximum time which schools should devote to PE. The National Curriculum for PE consists of six areas of activity and schools have a degree of freedom in deciding which physical activities to teach and how much time should be allocated to them and to other National Curriculum subjects. PE must be taught to all children throughout their compulsory schooling.

Evidence from OFSTED inspections of the number of hours per week primary and secondary schools currently spend teaching PE as follows.

	Average hours of PE per week (approx.)
Key Stage 1 (ages 5–7)	1 hour 20 minutes
Key Stage 2 (ages 7–11)	1 hour 35 minutes

These figures do not account for travelling and changing time incurred in the provision of swimming tuition.

Tuition Fees (Liability Assessment)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students had not had their liability for tuition fees assessed by their local authority on 31 December 1998. [67409]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 25 January 1999]: This information is not collected centrally.

School Leavers

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each careers services area the percentage of young people leaving school at age 16 with (a) no qualifications and (b) few qualifications as defined by his Department, in rank order. [67252]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 25 January 1999]: GCSE/GNVQ achievements of all 16 year old pupils in maintained schools by careers service areas are shown in the table:

GCSE/GNVQ achievements of 16 year old pupils[1] in maintained schools in England, 1997–98

Careers service areas	(a) Percentage of 16 year olds achieving no qualifications	Rank	(b) Percentage of 16 year olds achieving at least 1 grade G but fewer than 5 grades A-C*	Rank
Avon	6.2	40	50.9	37
Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham	9.6	63	56.6	61
Bedford and Luton	4.4	9	53.1	47
Berkshire and Oxfordshire	5.1	22	46.1	11
Birmingham	8.1	53	56.4	60
Black Country	7.7	48	56.9	62
Bolton, Bury and Rochdale	6.5	42	52.6	44
Bradford	11.0	66	59.6	63
Buckinghamshire	5.3	27	43.3	5

National Curriculum

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the importance of design, engineering, manufacturing and technology in the curriculum. [67783]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Engineering and manufacturing are not subjects of the National Curriculum, but related issues are commonly covered by National Curriculum design and technology (D&T) and information technology (IT). D&T and IT have occupied a justifiably important position in the National Curriculum since its inception in 1990. We are reviewing the National Curriculum for the year 2000 and are considering a range of issues. In reaching decisions on the future shape of the National Curriculum, we will listen to the views of a wide range of people. There will be a public consultation on the revised National Curriculum in the summer.

Toddington and Didbrook Primary Schools

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from (a) Gloucestershire County Council and (b) other interested parties, on the proposal to amalgamate Toddington Primary School with Didbrook Primary School; what discussions with interested parties he intends to have before coming to his decision on the proposal; and when he expects to reach a decision. [67155]

Ms Estelle Morris: On 16 October, Gloucestershire Local Education Authority published statutory proposals to close Didbrook and Toddington County Primary Schools, and to establish a new school on the Didbrook site. We have received a number of representations. The local education authority has also received objections to the proposals, which they have passed on to the Department. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will give careful consideration to the proposals, to the objections to the proposals and to the local education authority's comments on the objections; and to any other comments he receives. He will reach a decision as soon as possible, consistent with full consideration of all the relevant issues.

Design and Technology

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how design and technology scores at secondary level compared with other subjects at (a) Key Stage 3 and (b) Key Stage 4 in Ofsted reports on progress and on teaching quality. [67782]

Ms Estelle Morris: Ofsted reports covering 1995–96 show that 58 per cent. of schools had good standards of achievement for design and technology (D&T) at Key Stage 3. More pupils reach this standard in English, art and physical education than in D&T, but fewer do so in other subjects. At Key Stage 4, 57 per cent. of schools had good standards of achievement for D&T. This is better than pupils' performances in mathematics, science, information technology and modern foreign languages but poorer than other subjects. We expect that the improvement at Key Stage 3 will gradually feed into Key Stage 4.

Departmental Papers (Access to Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67838]

Mr. Mudie: As the Department responsible for disability issues, we aim to make our most important documents available to the widest possible audiences including the visually impaired.

Summaries of recent Green and White Papers have been made available free in Braille and on audio cassette. The texts are also available on the Department's website, which many people with less severe visual impairments find very convenient, since they can adjust their own browser software to as large a type size as they require.

It has not been our usual practice to offer texts on floppy disk simply because there has not been significant demand. Availability of texts via the internet may now be satisfying that demand but, if we receive an ad hoc request for a text on disk, we are happy to produce and supply it.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the capital sum which would be required, at current annuity rates, to buy a pension which would give a person retiring at the age of 65 years the same income after housing costs as someone entitled to income support, assuming an average level of housing costs and taking into account the cash value of the principal benefits in kind available to pensioner recipients of income support but not to other pensioners. [65423]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Using a single life annuity rate, a capital sum of approximately £50,000 would be required to purchase an annuity paying £70.45 per week (the current level of Income Support applicable to a single 65 year old with no dependants or disability), indexed annually to the Retail Prices Index, for a person aged 65. A charge of 2 per cent. of the fund has been assumed to be deducted.

Notes:

1. Estimate is rounded to the nearest £5,000.

2. No adjustment has been made to the basic Income Support entitlement for a person aged 65. Pensioners on this level of income would qualify for assistance with most housing costs and for the principal benefits in kind, even though not actually in receipt of Income Support.

3. The annuity rate used is derived from the tables issued by the Government Actuary for determining the maximum annual income withdrawal from post-1997 protected rights held in an appropriate personal pension, based on the yield on UK gilts (High Coupon; 15 years) on 15 January 1999. These tables assume an annuity with Limited Price Indexation, ie an annual increase in line with the Retail Prices Index or 5 per cent., whichever is lower. Under current conditions, this gives a reasonable approximation to the cost of an annuity with full RPI linking.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to paragraph 17, on page 14 of "Partnership in Pensions", Cm 4179, what estimate he has made of the number of those reaching retirement age who, by 2025, will have to rely on means-tested benefits under his proposals. [65579]

Mr. Timms: The Green Paper proposals are designed to ensure that someone with a full working life, or years covered by credits, will receive a pension on retirement above the Minimum Income Guarantee. The full impact of the proposals will be felt when people have experienced a full working lifetime in the new scheme.

The estimate referred to in the Green Paper was made using the Department's PENSIM model which can give only a broad indication of the impact so far into the future. Due to the degree of uncertainty surrounding estimates, PENSIM cannot identify relatively small changes. The impact of pension policy tends to build up slowly over time and in 2025, after only 20 years of the new system, will be relatively small.

However, estimates suggest that approximately 1.5 million pensioners (around 20 per cent.) will receive payments from the Minimum Income Guarantee when it is introduced in April 1999. On the basis of unchanged policies (ie. not taking into account the effects of our other proposals in the Green Paper) approximately 3.5 million pensioners (1 in 3) in 2050 could rely on the Minimum Income Guarantee. Even if no behavioural changes are assumed, the new insurance contract for pensions will mean that these estimates are reduced to approximately 2.5 million pensioners (1 in 4) receiving income from the Minimum Income Guarantee in 2050, and a lower proportion in years after 2050.

As an illustration of the possible impact of the behavioural effects of the proposals in "Partnership in Pensions", if all those in work saved an additional 5 per cent., the figure would fall to approximately 2 million in 2050.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the numbers of pensioners who would be entitled to (a) existing income support and (b) the future minimum pension guarantee if (i) a pension disregard of (1) £10 per week and (2) £20 per week were introduced and (ii) if the disregard were confined to pension income paid to widows and widowers. [66460]

Mr. Timms: The tables show the number of pensioners who would be newly entitled to benefit under the proposed disregards.

Estimated number of pensioners who would float onto benefit

	Existing Income Support gainers in 1998–99	Future Minimum Income Guarantee gainers in 1999–2000
£10 occupational pension disregard	30,000	35,000
£20 occupational pension disregard	75,000	80,000

Estimated number of widowed pensioners who would float onto benefit

	Existing Income Support gainers in 1998–99	Future Minimum Income Guarantee gainers in 1999–2000
£10 occupational pension disregard	20,000	20,000
£20 occupational pension disregard	50,000	55,000

Notes:

1. The data are taken from the 1997 Quarterly Statistical Enquiries and 1995–96 Family Resources Survey, with administrative data adjustments. Figures are uprated to 1998–99 for Income Support and 1999–2000 for the Minimum Income Guarantee.
2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 5,000.
3. The figures given are of pensioner benefit units (the individual pensioner or at least one of the couple is of state pension age or above), rather than individual pensioners.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what respects, other than the rate of accrual on annual earnings below £18,000 and the crediting-in of carers and disabled people, the state second pension is planned to differ from SERPS. [67887]

Mr. Timms: Compared with SERPS, the new State Second Pension will improve the entitlements of lower paid employees, give extra help to moderate earners and for the first time provide credits to carers and the long-term disabled with broken work records.

Ultimately, we expect the State Second Pension to become a flat rate scheme for those on lower earnings, with moderate and high earners joining a funded pension.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish (a) the information in Chart 5 of "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions", for persons with annual earnings of (i) £3,000, (ii) £6,000, (iii) £9,000, (iv) £12,000, (v) £15,000, (vi) £18,000, (vii) £21,000 and (viii) £24,000 and (b) the income support rates for pensioners in 2050, in earnings-equivalent terms, if they rise in line with earnings between 1999 and 2050. [67886]

Mr. Timms: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is shown in the table.

Notes:

1. Assumes a full working life of 49 years from April 2002. Figures shown in constant 1998 earnings, and rounded to the nearest £1—totals may not sum due to rounding. The State Second Pension Scheme as described on page 45 of "A New Contract for Welfare; Partnership in Pensions", with the exception of the upper earnings band, which is assumed to be £20,000 (in 1998 earnings).
2. Although someone earning £3,000 is below the current LEL, their earnings would eventually exceed the LEL, as the £3,000 is assumed to grow in real terms by 1.5 per cent. per year, and the LEL stays constant.

(b) If the rates for the Minimum Income Guarantee were to increase broadly in line with the growth in average earnings between 1999 and 2050, they would be £75 in April 2050 for a single pensioner and £117 for a pensioner couple in constant 1999 earnings terms.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the statement on page 14 of "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions", that by 2025 well over half those reaching retirement age could have to rely on income-related benefits refers to income support or to all income-related benefits; and what would be the corresponding proportion if the link between the basic pension and average earnings were restored, assuming that income support rose in line with (a) prices and (b) earnings. [67889]

Mr. Timms: The statement on page 14 of "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" refers to the estimated number of recently retired pensioners in 2025 who might expect to rely on any income related benefit at some point during their retirement.

Assuming that the maximum rate of basic State pension were increased from the current level in line with average earnings growth from April 1999, (b) less than half of recently retired pensioners in 2025 might expect to rely on an income related benefit if income related benefits are uprated in line with average earnings growth, and (a) less than 1 in 10 if income related benefits are assumed to be uprated in line with prices. On current policies, less than a quarter of recently retired pensioners in 2025 might rely on an income related benefit during their retirement if income related benefits were uprated in line with prices.

These estimates have been made using the PENSIM model. Due to the number of assumptions used in PENSIM, and the uncertainty surrounding estimates so far in to the future, estimates should be considered as broad brush, and as showing the likely order of magnitude of estimated figures.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what rate of real increase in average earnings is assumed in the illustrative pension forecasts on pages 89 and 104–105 of "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions"; and if he will provide comparable figures based on a real annual increase of 2 per cent. [67888]

Mr. Timms: The pension forecast shown on page 89 of "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" is illustrative, and based on an individual who has already completed most of their working life. No assumptions have been made concerning the future growth in real average earnings for this illustration.

The hypothetical examples on pages 104–105 are based on real growth in average earnings (and individual earnings in each example) of 1.5 per cent. per year. The effects of assuming 2 per cent. real growth in average earnings (and in individual earnings in each example) are given in the tables.

Example 1: Mechanic

Current system (per week)	New system (per week)
State Pensions: £43 Private Pensions: nil	State Pensions: £76 Private Pensions: nil
Total: £43	Total: £76

Example 2: Office Manager

Current system (per week)	New system (per week)
State Pensions: £25 Private Pensions: £62	State Pensions: £35 Private Pensions: £71
Total: £87	Total: £106

Example 3: Laboratory Assistant

Current system (per week)	New system (per week)
State Pensions: £25 Private Pensions: £107	State Pensions: £25 Private Pensions: £149
Total: £133	Total: £149

Notes:
1. Figures shown in constant 1998 earnings, and rounded to the nearest £1—totals may not sum due to rounding.
2. The State Second Pension Scheme is as described on page 45 of "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions". Full details of the life histories assumed are on pages 104–105.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions are made in "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions", regarding the uprating of the lower and upper earnings limits for national insurance contributions between 1999 and 2050; and what the limits are expected to be in 2050, in terms of 1999 earnings. [67891]

Mr. Timms: The 1998–99 lower earnings limit of £64 a week and upper earnings limit of £485 a week were used for the costings in the Green Paper. These limits are increased in line with prices. On this basis and on the assumption that real earnings would grow by 1.5 per cent. a year, in 2050–51 the lower earnings limit would be £31 a week and the upper earnings limit £235 a week in terms of 1999–2000 earnings.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the £30 billion cost of raising the basic pension in line with earnings, quoted in "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions", was calculated, including the period to which it relates and the assumptions made; and what would be the resulting reduction in the cost of means-tested benefits. [67890]

Mr. Timms: The Government Actuary's Department estimate that by 2030–31 the annual cost of uprating Retirement Pension and other National Insurance benefits paid to people over State Pension Age in line with earnings would be of the order of £33 billion.

This estimate is in 1998–99 benefit rates, assumes a start date of April 1999 and is based on assumed real earnings growth of 1.5 per cent. Full details of the assumptions underlying the estimate will be available in the forthcoming Quinquennial Review which is prepared by the Government Actuary's Department.

Income-Related Benefit offsets might be of the order of £8 billion, assuming earnings uprating of Income Support.

Estimates such as these are subject to broad margins of error because of the long time period under consideration.

Pensioners

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are currently being underpaid in respect of their SERPS entitlements. [67901]

Mr. Timms: It is estimated that potentially some 172,000 pensioners could be being underpaid in respect of their SERPS.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioner households will receive a winter fuel payment (a) this year and (b) next year. [67781]

Angela Eagle: Both this winter and next, an estimated 7 million pensioner households will receive Winter Fuel Payments.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many pensioners in (a) each region, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales fail to claim the (i) income support, (ii) housing benefit, (iii) council tax benefit and (iv) other benefits to which they are entitled. [67780]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available. Following the discovery of an error in the published take-up statistics, we are working towards publication of revised statistics relating to 1996–97. Publication is likely in the Spring.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many new retirement pension claims were made in each month since 1 April 1998; and how many of those are currently not receiving correct and final payments of retirement pension. [67900]

Mr. Timms: The number of new retirement pension claims made in each month since 1 April 1998 are as follows:

Month	Number
April 1998	51,236
May 1998	45,718
June 1998	55,605
July 1998	50,176
August 1998	42,988
September 1998	50,224
October 1998	51,318
November 1998	48,612
December 1998	36,672

Source: Central Data Unit

At 20 January 1999 it is estimated that 180,000 people are potentially not receiving correct and final payments of Retirement Pension.

Local Deprivation Indicators

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which measures of local deprivation his Department and its agencies use in considering allocation of funds to local projects. [66716]

Angela Eagle: The Department administers a demand-led social security system based on national eligibility criteria. It therefore provides the main national means of alleviating the impact on families and individuals of insufficient personal financial resources.

However, there are a few instances where local criteria are used for the provision of funds. One such example is the annual allocation of the discretionary social fund budget to Benefit Agency District Offices. In this instance, one of the criteria used is individual demand for social fund loans amongst the local population in receipt of income support. This budgeting exercise occurs annually and full details on local budget allocations and how they are set are available in the Library.

In addition, there are a number of discretionary provisions available to those local authorities who administer Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. For example, housing benefit can be increased up to the level of the contractual rent for people who would otherwise experience exceptional hardship under provisions like the local reference rent. Overall financial provision, and its distribution to individual local authorities, is made annually in full consultation with the Local Authority Associations. Authorities can also operate discretionary local schemes to disregard up to the full amount of a War Disablement Pension and War Widow's Pension not already subject to a statutory disregard within the Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit provisions.

Noise-induced Hearing Loss

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors underlay his decision not to fund research into (a) noise-induced hearing loss and (b) hearing loss due to the aging process. [66857]

Mr. Bayley: A War Pension can be awarded only for disablement which is due to service. A pension cannot be awarded for age related hearing loss alone.

There is a long standing and proven mechanism in place under the War Pension Scheme to monitor any published scientific evidence which might affect entitlement to a War Pension. The Department does not, therefore, normally fund medical research in this area.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the terms of reference of the review of noise-induced hearing loss to allow it to consider the level of compensation given in civilian courts to police officers and others suffering hearing loss from service-related damage. [66858]

Mr. Bayley: No. This would not be appropriate because civil action is based on negligence, the War Pension Scheme is a "no fault" State compensation scheme.

Family Credit

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost of compensation for families in receipt of family credit for lost income while on parental leave assuming its application to children aged up to eight years and take up of 10 per cent. for men and 50 per cent. for women. [67002]

Angela Eagle: No such cost in respect of Family Credit is anticipated as, subject to passage of the necessary legislation, Working Families Tax Credit, administered by the Inland Revenue, will replace it from 5 October 1999. The Government are committed to implementing the terms of the Parental Leave Directive by 15 December 1999.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many of the couples with children currently in receipt of family credit (a) the man is the main wage-earner and (b) the woman is the main wage-earner. [67423]

Angela Eagle: The information is as follows.

Family credit couple recipients	Number
Male main wage earner	304,000
Female main wage earner	90,000

Notes:
1. Figures are based on a sample of 5 per cent. of family credit awards and as such are subject to a degree of sampling error.
2. Caseload figures are rounded to the nearest thousand and may not sum to totals.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security of the couples with children currently in receipt of family credit paid by direct debit to an account of the claimant's choice, how many of the accounts are in the name of (a) the man, (b) the woman and (c) the man and the woman. [67424]

Angela Eagle: This question can be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the lone parents currently in receipt of family credit are (a) women and (b) men. [67422]

Angela Eagle: All. The most recent figures available are for August 1998, at that time 16,000 lone parent family credit recipients were men and 374,000 were women.

Notes:
1. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample of family credit awards and as such are subject to a degree of sampling error.

Child Support

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evaluation he has made of the responses to his Department's consultation on changes to the system of child support; and what reforms he proposes to make as a result and when. [67036]

Angela Eagle: We are currently considering the responses to the Green Paper "Children First: a new approach to child support" and will bring forward our final proposals for reform in due course.

Multiple Sclerosis

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people with multiple sclerosis are claiming (a) the long-term rate of incapacity benefit and (b) severe disablement allowance. [67761]

Mr. Bayley: At 31 August 1998 19,720 people with a main diagnosis of multiple sclerosis were receiving the long-term rate of Incapacity Benefit, and 9,780 were receiving Severe Disablement Allowance.

Widows' Pensions and Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many new (a) widows' pensions and (b) incapacity benefit claims were made in each month since 1 April 1998. [67899]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the tables.

Widows' Benefits claims since April 1998

Invalidity and Incapacity Benefits

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people received invalidity benefit in the last year it operated; and how many people received incapacity benefit in each of the years since it was introduced. [66631]

Mr. Bayley: Incapacity Benefit replaced Sickness Benefit and Invalidity Benefit on 13 April 1995. The short-term higher and long-term rates of Incapacity Benefit are equivalent to Invalidity Benefit. The available information is set out in the table.

Number of recipients of Invalidity Benefit/short-term higher and long-term Incapacity Benefit at the end of the statistical year

Year	Number
1994–95	1,766,900
1995–96	1,692,400
1996–97	1,632,060
1997–98	1,561,740

Note:
The 1994–95 statistical year ended 12 April 1995. From 1995–96 onwards the end of the statistical year is the last day in February.

New Deal (Lone Parents)

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many initial letters inviting lone parents to participate in the New Deal for Lone Parents have been issued; how many initial interviews have been booked; how many initial interviews have been carried out; how many lone parents have agreed to participate; and how many jobs have been obtained by lone parents participating in the New Deal for Lone Parents. [68045]

Mr. Darling: The information is as follows.

The National New Deal for Lone Parents started on 26 October 1998.

Latest information shows that from 21 July 1997 to 27 November 1998:

The number of letters issued[1] is 64,765

The number of initial interviews booked is 38,420

The number of initial interviews carried out is 28,762

The number of agreements to participate is 24,372.

A total of 5,689[2] jobs have been obtained by lone parents participating in the New Deal for Lone Parents.

The vast majority of lone parents who attend an initial interview decide to take part in the New Deal for Lone Parents (NDLP). This shows that we are offering a service that lone parents want.

Future NDLP results will be placed in the Library each month.

Notes:

[1] The management information for phases 1, 2 and 3 of NDLP differs slightly. The figure for "letters issued" does—for phase 1 only—also include contacts made by lone parents who had not received a letter from NDLP. In phase 1, this figure was entitled "contacts made".

[2] (i) Since 26 October 1998, the relevant period for the jobs obtained figure has differed slightly from that for the rest of the NDLP data. Therefore, while the "jobs obtained" figure relates to the period 21 July 1997 to 4 December 1998; all the other figures relate to the period 21 July 1997 to 27 November 1998.

(ii) The definition of "jobs obtained" includes only Employment Service (ES) job placings. This means that this figure does not include jobs obtained by lone parents who participate in NDLP but who find the job through a non-ES source. Since 26 October 1998 for example, another 146 lone parents participating in the NDLP have found jobs through a non-ES source with the help of their adviser. This figure is therefore likely to be an undercount of the total number of jobs obtained by lone parents participating in the NDLP.

(iii) From 21 July 1997 to 23 October 1998, the "jobs obtained" figure was defined as the first job obtained while participating in NDLP. However, since 26 October 1998 the "jobs obtained" figure has counted all ES placings, including those where a lone parent has obtained two jobs.

HEALTH

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been sought by the East Surrey Health Authority from his Department in respect of providing services and treatment for multiple sclerosis. [65481]

Mr. Hutton: No specific advice has been sought by East Surrey Health Authority. The organisation of health services and the manner in which they are delivered, including services for people suffering from multiple sclerosis, is a matter for health authorities.

However, we are determined to challenge and address unacceptable variations in the provision of clinically and cost effective treatments, which are not based on the health needs of the local populations.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's policy on the provision of Beta-interferon for the treatment of multiple sclerosis. [65488]

Mr. Hutton: Current guidance on Betaferon (Beta-Interferon-1b) recommends tht health authorities will have in place local arrangements with hospitals for purchasing and prescribing the drug in the light of medical evidence and local priorities.

Head Lice

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy for dealing with the spread of head lice among school pupils. [67033]

Mr. Hutton: Our policy is to encourage a "whole school approach" to the detection and treatment of head lice. This entails parents checking their children and other family members for head lice and arranging treatment where necessary, with such support from the local primary health care team as they may require. If this exercise is successfully undertaken on the same evening by all parents of children within a school, then the spread of head lice will be arrested.

Barnet Community Health Council

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give (a) the names, (b) the terms of office and (c) the nominating body of the members of Barnet Community Health Council. [67035]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the tables.

Ambulances

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he takes to assess value for money in the purchase of ambulances by health trusts; and if he will make a statement. [67219]

Mr. Hutton: The purchase of ambulance vehicles is the responsibility of individual National Health Service ambulance trusts. All NHS trusts are expected to adhere to purchasing policies and procedures which ensure fitness for purpose, demonstrate best value for the NHS and maintain the highest standards of probity.

Bone Marrow Transplants

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had a bone marrow transplant in the UK in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [67107]

Mr. Hutton: Provisional hospital episode statistic figures for National Health Service trusts in England show that there were 695 finished consultant episodes with a primary operation of autograft or allograft bone marrow operations in the financial year 1997–98.

Questions relating to residents who had bone marrow operations in NHS hospitals in Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Beta Interferon

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the recommendations on beta interferon funding made by West Midlands Beta Interferon Management Group on 6 October 1998. [67049]

Ms Jowell: The West Midlands Beta Interferon Management Group's recommendation to chief executives of health authorities was to increase the region-wide budget for beta interferon to £1 million, to ensure continuation of treatment for existing patients and to facilitate the inclusion of more patients onto the programme in the West Midlands.

The health authorities are currently considering how to implement this recommendation.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the waiting list for beta interferon treatment drawn up by the West Midlands health authorities. [67050]

Ms Jowell: The information is not collected centrally, nor is it held by the West Midlands health authorities.

Aspirin and Paracetamol

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the health implications of variations in costs of the new aspirin and paracetamol pack sizes; and if he will make a statement. [67034]

Ms Jowell: The Department has made no specific assessment of the health implications of the variations in costs of the new analgesic pack sizes. However, variations in the prices of aspirin and paracetamol have always been a feature of this very competitive market and equivalent products continue to be available at a range of prices.

The Medicines Control Agency is monitoring the impact of the new pack sizes on public health and will review the effectiveness of the measures once sufficient data have been collected. They are currently consulting on a proposal to exempt low dose aspirin 75 milligramme from the new pack size restrictions.

Stroke Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the differences in care and outcome for stroke victims, according to the postal code of their address. [66843]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 25 January 1999]: None. Evidence-based national service frameworks are being developed to ensure consistent access and quality of care right across the country. In December 1998 we announced that the national service framework for older people would include stroke services.

Nurses

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses worked for more than 48 hours a week in the last year, broken down by month. [67380]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally. The General Whitley Council (the national negotiating body for National Health Service staff with Whitley contracts) has agreed that an employee will not be expected to work more than a maximum of 48 hours averaged over 17 weeks in accordance with the Working Time Regulations. An employee may however agree to work over the 48 hour limit and will have to do so in writing to his employer.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Abortion Legislation

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to review the abortion legislation in Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [63040]

Marjorie Mowlam: The suggestion that the law on abortion in Northern Ireland should be reviewed has been made on a number of occasions, most recently in the report of the All Party Group on Population, Development and Reproductive Health, launched on 10 December 1998. I am still considering what, if any, action, should be taken in response to these suggestions.

I am, however, aware of the great strength of feeling on this issue, and the divergence of opinion that exists. I would want to reiterate most strongly the assurances already given by the Government, that we will not impose any change in Northern Ireland on this issue without consultation with elected representatives, including the Northern Ireland Assembly, and that any change would come about only with broad support from a cross-section of the people of Northern Ireland.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how long it takes to process an application for grant aid under the Environmentally Sensitive Areas Scheme. [67030]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The average time, based on claims dealt with in the first 9 months of the current financial year, is 10.15 weeks.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications were made for grant aid under the Environmentally Sensitive Areas Scheme (a) in each year from 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1998 and (b) from 1 April to 31 December 1998; of these (i) how many have been approved, (ii) what payments were made, (iii) how many were refused and (iv) how many are outstanding. [67031]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The figures are as follows:

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99 (to 31.12.98)
Claims made	1,107	2,173	2,655	2,557
Claims paid	1,107	2,173	2,655	1,492
Approved	All	All	All	All
Refused	None	None	None	None
Outstanding	None	None	None	1,065
Payment total (£m)	1.619	2.752	4.921	4.477

"We Will Remember Them"

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland with which groups she or other Ministers in her Department have had discussions as a consequence of the publication of Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's report, "We Will Remember Them". [68302]

Marjorie Mowlam: As part of the follow-up to Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's report, "We Will Remember Them", I, or one of my Northern Ireland Office Ministerial colleagues, have had discussions with representatives of the following groups:

Damien Walsh Group

Disabled Police Officers' Association

Families Acting for Innocent Relatives

Families Against Intimidation and Terror

Families of the Disappeared

Loughgall Truth and Justice Campaign

Prison Officers Association

Relatives for Justice

Survivors of Trauma

WAVE.

The Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram), has established a 'Touchstone' Group, to enable a cross section of those representing victims interests to provide advice and support to him on the development of policy for victims. In this connection he has also met with representatives of the following organisations:

An Crann/The Tree

Cost of the Troubles Study

Kairos

Shankill Stress Group

UDR Benevolent Fund

Victim Support NI.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Burundi

Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to introduce change of funding strategy for Burundi, moving beyond emergency relief towards more rehabilitation work; and what timeframe exists for this change. [67744]

Clare Short: A twin-track approach to the resumption of development assistance to Burundi was agreed at a donor meeting convened by UNDP on 11 January and attended by representatives of the Government of Burundi and ex-President Nyerere.

The international donor community agreed to provide immediate direct assistance to communities in Burundi focusing on local level reconciliation and rehabilitation. We already have the capacity to do this. It was also agreed that donors should prepare for the re-introduction of structural development assistance, which should follow the signature of a peace agreement. Burundi will need a substantial and well co-ordinated international effort to address its development constraints. Britain has not been a traditional bilateral donor to Burundi. But we will attempt to ensure that those multilateral organisations to which we are major contributors, including the EU and the World bank, are well prepared to make a major input when the political environment is right.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on progress on the Libra system for magistrates courts; and if he will make a statement. [67553]

Mr. Hoon: The Libra contract was awarded to International Computers Limited in December 1998. Libra will provide national standard computer services to magistrates' courts and offices with the first implementation planned for mid-2001 in Suffolk. The systems and services are expected to be implemented in all magistrates' courts by 2004, and will provide electronic links with other agencies in the criminal justice system.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates' courts committees have conducted formal access audits since his Department issued the Disabled Court Users Good Practice Guide for Magistrates' Courts Committees; and from what sources the funding for necessary changes will be provided. [67402]

Mr. Hoon: I issued a performance standard in December 1997 setting out the minimum standards of performance that magistrates' courts committees are required to achieve in relation to disabled court users. It is not a requirement that formal access audits be undertaken, however, the Good Practice Guide that accompanied this standard does recommend it.

A survey, undertaken by this Department during May and June 1998, showed that 64 out of 96 magistrates' courts committees had undertaken internal audits during the previous twelve months and 32 had arranged for independent inspections. It is always open to any magistrates' courts committee, in conjunction with its local authorities, to bid for additional resources from this Department towards the cost of improving disabled access, subject, of course, to there being funding available.

Legal Aid (Mediation)

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many cases, and at what cost, the Legal Aid Board has provided legal aid for dispute resolution by mediation. [67611]

Mr. Hoon: In the period December 1997 to December 1998, 1,962 mediations in family cases have been conducted as part of a pilot project. At this stage of the pilot project, it is not possible to provide exact cost per mediation as these costs include the cost of an initial information meeting with the clients, a contribution towards overheads and set up costs which enable mediation services to meet the requirements of the Legal Aid Board Family Mediation Franchise Specification. Legal aid has only been available for non-family cases since October 1998. It is at present not possible to provide information on the exact number or costs of non-family cases.

Solicitors (Professional Misconduct)

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many solicitors were disciplined for professional misconduct in each of the last five years. [67606]

Mr. Hoon: The Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal hears and determines applications relating to allegations of unbefitting conduct or breaches of the rules of professional misconduct. Under Section 47 of the Solicitors Act 1974, the Tribunal can make orders to strike off, suspend from practice, fine and reprimand solicitors found guilty of professional misconduct.

162 such orders were made from 1 May 1993 to 30 April 1994
206 such orders were made from 1 May 1994 to 30 April 1995
193 such orders were made from 1 May 1995 to 30 April 1996
171 such orders were made from 1 May 1996 to 30 April 1997
179 such orders were made from 1 May 1997 to 30 April 1998.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Home Detention

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons from which prisoners are to be released on home detention curfew on 28 January 1999 and the number of prisoners to be released in each case. [67426]

Mr. George Howarth: The assessments for Home Detention Curfew are still ongoing. I will write to the hon. Member after 28 January 1999 when this information becomes available.

Polling Stations (Access)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the establishment of an independent electoral commission which would have responsibility for the provision of practical assistance to the elderly and those with disabilities in using polling stations. [67257]

Mr. George Howarth: As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced during the debate on the Neill Committee report on the funding of political parties on 9 November 1998, Official Report, column 55, provision for the establishment of an independent Electoral Commission will be included in the draft Bill, to implement the main findings of the Neill report, to be published before the summer recess. The Government are currently giving careful consideration to the Neill Committee's detailed proposals with regard to the precise role and remit of the Electoral Commission.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in improving access to polling stations for people with physical impairments. [67258]

Mr. George Howarth: Consolidated and enhanced guidance which includes advice on national access standards will be issued to all returning officers shortly. The Working Party on electoral procedures which I am chairing will continue to consider disability access to electoral services of all kinds.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a person who has been refused political asylum but granted indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom has the right to appeal to a special adjudicator about the decision to refuse political asylum. [67109]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no right of appeal against a refusal to grant asylum in these circumstances.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been carried out on the comparative costs of (a) current arrangements for funding asylum seekers and (b) restoring benefits for asylum seekers, during the period that his Department takes to process an application. [67043]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The evidence available suggests that the removal of access to benefits to those asylum seekers who do not make their claim at their port of entry leads to a significant reduction in the numbers of asylum seekers. The Government believe that cash is a strong factor in encouraging economic migrants and that the restoration of benefits would lead to a significantly higher number of asylum seekers thereby leading to a much greater cost than the current arrangements. These conclusions come from an examination of the publicly available data.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were granted (a) refugee status and (b) exceptional leave to remain following a successful appeal against refusal of that status in each year since 1993, broken down by country of origin. [67112]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information on the number of allowed asylum appeals over the period 1994 to 1998 is available and this is given in the table.

Asylum appeals under the 1993 and 1996 Acts determined by adjudicators of the Immigration Appeals Authority, excluding dependants, 1994 to 1998

Police Federation

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what central Government payments have been made to the Police Federation in each of the last five years in support of (a) conferences organised by the Federation and (b) other purposes; and if he will indicate the statutory authority under which such payments are made. [67028]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is shown in the table. The only payments made in support of conferences are in respect of travel and subsistence expenses made for members of the Joint Central Committee and these cannot readily be shown separately from expenses paid for other purposes. Payments are made under sections 57(1) and 60(2)(d) of the Police Act 1996.

UN Convention on the Rights of the Child

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have to remove the United Kingdom's reservation on Article 37 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child. [67216]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We do not propose to remove this reservation. We are establishing a separate juvenile estate, but there will continue to be occasions when the mixing of young offenders and adult prisoners is necessary. This may be due to a lack of suitable accommodation or adequate facilities for a particular young person.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reservations and derogations the UK Government have entered under the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. [67214]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

Upon ratification in 1991 of the United Nations Convention of the Rights of the Child, the United Kingdom Government entered four reservations and two declaratory interpretations.

Police Manpower

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown, by rank, of the numbers of police officers (a) per police force and (b) in total, in each of the last 10 years. [67586]

Mr. Boateng: Information in the form requested is available from 1991. For earlier years, only information on the total number of officers in each force is available. The details for each year between 1989 and 1998 are set out in the tables, which I have placed in the Library.

Jury Trials

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he plans to publish the responses to his consultation paper on the right to trial by jury; [67582]

(2) what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the election of trial in the Crown Court by defendants charged with an either-way offence since 1 October 1997; [67580]

(3) what steps he plans to take regarding the right to trial by jury following his consultation paper of July 1998; and if he will make a statement. [67583]

Mr. Boateng: No research has been conducted into the election of trial in the Crown Court by defendants charged with an either-way offence since 1 October 1997. The consultation paper on determining the mode of trial, considered whether defendants should be able to choose to be tried by a jury in cases which magistrates have indicated that they would be content to hear. We are currently considering the responses to this consultation exercise and will make a statement when we have reached a final decision.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many section 5 firearms certificates he has issued in each of the last five years. [67767]

Mr. Boateng: The authority of the Secretary of State to possess, purchase or acquire, manufacture, sell or transfer weapons and ammunition prohibited by section 5 of the Firearms Act 1968 (as amended) is granted only to those applicants who can demonstrate a genuine need to have such weapons and ammunition. The total number of such authorities issued in England and Wales in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Authorities issued
1998	540
1997	320
1996	304
1995	261
1994	214

CS Spray

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to collect information on the number of times police officers and members of the public have started legal proceedings because of injuries caused by CS sprays. [67609]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not held centrally and there are no plans to collect it.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

A14

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) personal injury accidents and (b) fatalities were recorded on the A14 between Cambridge and Huntingdon in 1998. [66734]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested will not be available until June 1999. The latest available full years data are shown in the table.

Accidents/casualties on the A14 between Cambridge and Huntingdon: 1997

Severity	Number of accidents	Number of casualties
Fatal	1	1
Serious	10	12
Slight	50	79
Total	61	92

Vehicles Directive

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about progress at the Environment Council meeting on 21 December 1998 on the proposed Directive on end of life vehicles. [67340]

Mr. Meale: At the Environment Council, Ministers reached a degree of common understanding on many of the important issues raised by this Directive. However, the views of the European Parliament will need to be carefully considered and final decisions on the Council's Common Position will not be taken until the next Environmental Council in March, when the European Parliament's opinion should be ready.

Whipps Cross-Redbridge Relief Road

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what representations his Department has received concerning the delay in opening the Whipps Cross-Redbridge relief road; [67458]

(2) how much money has been spent on the Whipps Cross-Redbridge relief road; [67459]

(3) when the Whipps Cross-Redbridge relief road will be completed; [67461]

(4) what the projected opening date was for the Whipps Cross-Redbridge relief road on 1 May 1997. [67460]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Amess, dated 27 January 1999:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the Whipps Cross/ Redbridge Relief Road.

I am assuming that you are referring to Contract 4 of the A12 Hackney to M11 Link Road which goes from Whipps Cross to the Redbridge roundabout on the A12.

On 1 May 1997, we anticipated that the contract would be completed in the Spring of 1998.

Several local people, including the local Member of Parliament, have asked about the cause of the delay and we have explained that there have been difficulties with the specialist equipment necessary for safety in the tunnel at George Green. We now expect the road to be open to traffic this Spring although finishing work could take a little longer. This does not affect the overall completion date of Autumn 1999.

The cost to date of the works on Contract 4 is £53.2M (excluding VAT).

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67852]

Mr. Meale: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions currently publishes all White and Green Papers in HTML format on its Internet site. This ensures easy access by systems such as "screen readers, text-to-speech and text to Braille converters" making documents more accessible to the visually impaired.

Where appropriate, publications are also made available on audio tape, in large print, Braille or on floppy disk.

Water-borne Freight

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to achieve an increase in water-borne freight; if he will set targets; and if he will make a statement. [67618]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The Government are keen to encourage increased movement of freight by water where that is a practical and economic option. The Department currently gives Freight Facilities Grants for inland waterways schemes where freight would otherwise have gone by road. The Department will be re-examining the rules of the scheme to encourage more applications for inland waterways projects; and as announced in the White Paper on the Future of Integrated Transport, we intend to bring forward legislation to extend the application of the freight grant scheme to include coastal and short-sea shipping. The scheme is demand-led and the Department aims, as far as possible, to meet all eligible demand from within its budget. Since May 1997 there have been 5 inland waterway grants made totalling almost £1.65m, which represents a maximum of 770,000 tonnes. In addition the total 1998–99 budget for both rail and inland waterway schemes has been increased from the previous year by one-third to £40 million.

In addition, the Department is working to update planning guidance on transport which will encourage more freight to be carried by water. Local authorities in their development plans will be expected to consider opportunities for new development which are served by waterways; and to give better protection to sites and routes, both existing and potential, which could be critical in developing infrastructure to widen transport choices, including water transport.

Water Pollution (Costs)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the costs of agriculturally derived water pollution from (a) nitrates, (b) fertilisers generally, (c)pesticides and other biocides and (d) soil erosion; and if he will make a statement. [67714]

Mr. Meale: The environmental and economic costs of agriculturally derived water pollution are not available centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Classic and Vintage Vehicles (Leaded Petrol)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies his Department has undertaken on the effect of the phasing out of leaded petrol on classic and vintage vehicles; how many vehicles currently run on leaded petrol; what is the statutory basis for the change; and if he will make a statement. [67632]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In accordance with EU directive 98/70EC, leaded petrol will be banned from general sale from 1 January 2000 by regulations to be made under the Clean Air Act 1993. Of an estimated 6 million vehicles currently running on leaded petrol, about 5.3 million will still be doing so at the time the ban is introduced. Of these as many as 3 million could use unleaded petrol either directly or with simple engine adjustments. For a remaining 2.3 million, for which lead provides lubricant protection for soft valve seats and in some cases octane requirements, substitutes for lead, either in the form of additives incorporated in "lead replacement petrol" or provided separately for motorists' use will be made available by the oil companies. Such products will be suitable for classic and vintage vehicles as well as older vehicles generally. The Government are in addition exploring the possibilities for implementation of the provision in the directive which allows sales of leaded petrol to continue to a limit of 0.5 per cent. of total sales, though supply will ultimately be a commercial decision.

Aircraft Emissions

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has commissioned or carried out on the effect of emissions from aircraft with particular reference to the upper atmosphere; and if he will list such research. [67470]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since May 1997 my Department has participated in the following research projects:

AEROTRACE: identification and measurement of trace species in exhaust gases close to the combustor of a jet engine;

UK TRACE: measurement of changes in trace species between the combustor and engine exhaust;

AEROCERT: identification of possible revisions and extensions to engine certification procedures, and the effects of maintenance and operation on certified emission levels;

POLINAT: measurement and modelling of aircraft emissions in the North Atlantic flight corridor.

We also supported the development of the European inventory of emissions from aircraft worldwide, which was published last year.

Maintenance Vehicles (Safety Belts)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the consequences of excluding maintenance vehicles from the laws enforcing the wearing of vehicle safety belts; and if he will make a statement. [67359]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Maintenance vehicles are not exempt from the requirement that seat belts must be worn where they are available. There are specific exemptions for drivers in particular circumstances—these are listed in regulation 6 of The Motor Vehicles (Wearing of Seat Belts) Regulations 1993, SI 1993 No. 176.

Building Stock

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the increase in building stock over the next 10 years; and what plans he has to reduce carbon dioxide emissions from buildings by 2010. [67689]

Mr. Meale: The Government intend to develop a balanced and equitable strategy across all sectors to meet the UK's climate change targets. As a first step, on 26 October 1998, the Government published a consultation paper describing progress to date in reducing greenhouse gas emissions in the UK and setting out a variety of policy options for further action. The consultation paper refers to a number of options which could be taken to reduce carbon dioxide emissions including improvements in emissions from buildings in the commercial, industrial and domestic sectors.

Planning Applications

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which local authority headed his table which measured the speed with which planning applications were considered. [67875]

Mr. Raynsford: In the 12 months to September 1998, Worthing Borough Council headed the Planning Performance Checklist, determining 99.9 per cent. of planning applications within 8 weeks.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the average length of time taken by local authorities to process planning applications in 1997–98. [67877]

Mr. Raynsford: In 1997–98, district planning authorities in England decided 62 per cent. of all applications for planning permission and other related consents within 8 weeks and 84 per cent. within 13 weeks. Information is not available on the average length of time taken to determine a planning application.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidelines are issued to local authorities in respect of the processing of planning applications. [67878]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's policies on different aspects of planning are contained in Planning Policy Guidance notes (PPGs) and Circulars. PPG1 on "General Policy and Principles" gives general advice on a number of issues bearing on the consideration of planning permission. Environment Circular 9/95, "General Development Order Consolidation 1995", covers permitted development and more detailed procedural matters, including consultations before the grant of planning permission. It also contains advice on best practice in handling planning applications.

Health and Safety Executive (Workplace Deaths)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many incidents of death in the workplace were investigated by the Health and Safety Executive in each year since 1996. [67416]

Mr. Meale: The number of fatalities investigated by the Health and Safety Executive is set out in the table.

Year	Number of fatalities investigated
1996–97	397
1997–98	402
1 April-30 September 1998[1]	213

[1] Provisional

Dock Work

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the health and safety implications of increased casualisation of dock work. [67417]

Mr. Meale: It is not possible to assess how recent changes in the patterns of employment in the docks industry have affected health and safety. Such changes have included increasing mechanisation, bulk handling and containerisation at the same time as a substantial reduction in the numbers working in the docks. The Health and Safety Executive regularly meets docks industry representatives to review trends and consider any issues which might affect health and safety.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the Birmingham northern relief road on the air quality levels as set out in the National Air Quality Strategy; and how he expects any breaches of the levels to be remedied. [67577]

Mr. Meale: The original air quality assessment for the Birmingham northern relief road was published within the environmental statement for the scheme in 1993. Additional evidence was submitted to the public inquiry in 1994.

The United Kingdom National Air Quality Strategy, published in March 1997, post-dated both the original assessment and the public inquiry. However, the existence of the air quality objectives within the strategy was acknowledged in the decision letter for the scheme as a post-inquiry development which had to be taken into account, alongside the Inspector's report, in reaching a decision on whether or not to proceed. A judgment was made, based on an interpretation of the previous assessment work, on whether or not the objectives might be exceeded. It was concluded that all of the objectives, with the possible exception of that for PM_{10}, would be met with the road in place.

Under Part IV of the Environment Act 1995, local authorities must review and assess air quality within their areas. If a local authority decides that any of the air quality objectives are not likely to be met by 2005, it must designate an Air Quality Management Area covering the area of the predicted exceedance and produce an action plan for the achievement of the objectives. The Highways Agency would need to be closely involved in the development and implementation of any action plan which required measures to be taken in relation to a trunk road or motorway.

Road Schemes

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will name the road schemes by each local authority which make up the existing commitments in the Local Transport Settlement 1999–2000; and if he will indicate for each (a) the money awarded in the 1999–2000 local transport settlement and (b) the total costs. [67021]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The table shows allocations made to grant supported major road schemes as part of the 1999–2000 local transport capital settlement. These schemes were accepted for funding between the 1986–87 and 1997–98 settlements. The Government are committed to providing sufficient funding for their completion, provided they continue to make reasonable progress, although we do not commit to fund the full costs of a major local road scheme. The table does not include committed expenditure on non-road schemes or resources which cannot be identified to a single road scheme, such as resources to meet applications during 1999–00 for grant under the Industrial Development Act 1982.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authorities have formally asked his Department for the routes of road schemes withdrawn in the National Roads Programme to be protected as advised in paragraph 96 of the draft guidance on Local Transport Plans. [67023]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 January 1999]: To date no local authorities have formally indicated whether they intend to seek route protection for any of the schemes on routes to be detrunked which were withdrawn from the National Roads Programme as a result of the Roads Review. But, two authorities have proposed that route protection should be retained beyond the end of July pending the outcome of further studies.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of major new road schemes for which each local authority bid for funding under the TPP system for 1999–2000. [67022]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 January 1999]: We received eighty bids for new major local road schemes from English local highway authorities requesting capital funding in 1999–2000. The following authorities bid for one major scheme each: Lincolnshire, Northumberland, Stockton-on-Tees, Halton, Salford, West Yorkshire PTA, Buckinghamshire, Kent, Milton Keynes, Oxfordshire, West Sussex, Windsor and Maidenhead, Bath and North East Somerset, Bristol, Birmingham, Sandwell, Warwickshire, Barnsley, Kirklees, Bedfordshire, Cambridgeshire, Essex, Hertfordshire, Bexley, Enfield, Greenwich and St. Helens. Authorities bidding for two or more schemes are shown in the table:

Authority	Number of new major road scheme bids
Leicestershire	2
Nottinghamshire	5
Surrey	4
Cornwall	4
Devon	2
Gloucestershire	2
Somerset	2
Staffordshire	3
Stoke-on-Trent	2
West Midlands Joint authorities[1]	9
Worcestershire	2
Doncaster	3

Authority	Number of new major road scheme bids
Luton	2
Norfolk	7
Sutton	2
Total	80

[1] the bid from the West Midlands Joint authorities was submitted on behalf of Birmingham, Centro, Coventry, Dudley, Sandwell, Solihull, Walsall and Wolverhampton authorities.

As announced in the local transport capital settlement for 1999–2000 on 17 December 1998, we accepted two of these schemes.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [67489]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 January 1999]: Staff are encouraged to use public transport where it is available and if they do not do so, a single flat rate of 23.8 pence per mile is payable. Where public transport is not available, would give rise to excessive journey times or where staff have equipment or bulky luggage to carry, there are currently two sets of mileage rates payable for cars used on official business:

Pence per mile

Engine capacity	Ex-Department of the Environment staff		Ex-Department of Transport staff
	Up to 4000 miles	Over 4000 miles	Up to 4000 miles	Over 4000 miles
Up to 1000 cc	N/A		27	15
1001 cc to 1500 cc	34	19	35.7	19
1501 cc to 2000 cc	43	23	42	23
Over 2000 cc	47	30	46	30

The rates are currently under review not only to harmonise them but also as part of the Department's aim to encourage staff to minimise journeys by car and reduce the environmental impact of transport activity through Green Transport Plans. Consideration is being given to a single rate, regardless of engine size.

London Underground

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has received a Public/Private Partnership bid from Railtrack for the surface and sub-surface London Underground lines outside the criteria for the tender process. [67923]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have not sought or received any bid from Railtrack in relation to the London Underground public/private partnership (PPP).

Railtrack has made proposals to integrate London Underground's sub-surface lines (Circle, District, Metropolitan, and Hammersmith and City) with the main line network. The Office of Passenger Rail Franchising (OPRAF) is carrying out a preliminary study of the feasibility, costs and benefits of these proposals and is assessing them in the same way that it would any other such proposals. This work does not in any way imply that the Government believe that a case has been established for Railtrack's proposal on cost-benefit or other grounds, or that London Transport is minded to handle the sub-surface lines differently from the deep tube lines in the PPP.

The Government are continuing to develop the London Underground PPP along the lines announced to the House by the Deputy Prime Minister on 14 December 1998, Official Report, columns 629–30.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Death by Dangerous Driving (Sentences)

Mr. Randall: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases of causing death by dangerous driving have been referred to him for reference to the Court of Appeal on the grounds of unduly lenient sentence in the last 18 months; how many he has referred to the Court of Appeal; and how many sentences have been increased as a result of such referrals. [67657]

The Attorney-General: Since 27 July 1997 19 cases of causing death by dangerous driving in England and Wales have been referred to the Law Officers. 12 were referred by members of the public (3 through their MPs); 7 were referred by the CPS.

Of these 19, 1 case has not yet been considered; in 13 cases the sentence passed was not considered unduly lenient; 5 cases have been referred to the Court of Appeal. The sentence was increased by the Court of Appeal in 4 cases (although in one case the overall sentence, taking into account two other offences, was not increased). 1 case has yet to be heard.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Scottish Land Fund

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what powers the Scottish Parliament will have to (a) alter policy priorities in Scotland for the New Opportunities Fund and (b) increase the proportion of New Opportunities Fund money which goes to the Scottish Land Fund; [67421]

(2) if he will make a statement on the powers of the (a) Scottish Parliament, (b) Welsh assembly and (c) Northern Ireland assembly to direct or alter the distribution of lottery funds by each of the lottery distribution bodies in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland; [67419]

(3) if he will make a statement outlining the mechanism under which payments will be made to the proposed Scottish Land Fund from the New Opportunities Fund; and who will decide the level of payments made from the New Opportunities Fund into the proposed Scottish Land Fund. [67420]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The power currently held by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland to issue policy directions to Scottish sports and arts Lottery distributors will be transferred to Ministers of the Scottish Parliament. In relation to the Heritage Lottery Fund, the National Lottery Charities Board and the New Opportunities Fund (NOF), whose operations range across the UK, Scottish Ministers will be able to make directions which require distributors to take into account for their activities in Scotland the desirability of achieving particular objectives for devolved policy areas including giving priority to particular kinds of recipients, or recipients in particular parts of Scotland. In the case of a NOF initiative applying only in Scotland, Scottish Ministers will after consultation with the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport be able to make the order specifying the initiative, and to issue directions on any matter except the amount of funding to be allocated to the initiative. Powers in relation to the Millennium Commission will remain unchanged since most of its work is now complete. Scottish Ministers will not be able to make directions relating to the allocation of resources between Scotland and other parts of the United Kingdom, or those relating to the administration of Lottery funding, regardless of the purposes to be achieved by particular projects. Scottish Ministers will however be consulted on these matters as they affect Scotland.

Similar arrangements will apply to the National Assembly for Wales, although any order specifying a Wales only initiative of the New Opportunities Fund would be made by the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport with the agreement of the Assembly. The details of these arrangements, including their application to a Northern Ireland Assembly, are still under consideration. Concordats being drawn up between my department and home country departments will set out how the new arrangements will work.

There has been widespread public consultation on the three new NOF initiatives, which include one on green spaces and sustainable communities which could in Scotland constitute a Scottish Land Fund. Consultation on this initiative closed on 15 January and no decisions have yet been made regarding the final form of the initiatives or the financial allocations. After consultation with Scottish Ministers, the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport will decide the level of funding each initiative will receive and has the power to direct that a percentage of this amount be used in Scotland. NOF will administer the grant-giving process, taking into account the directions they have been given and decide which applicants should be supported.

Foreign Broadcasters

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what plans he has to extend the jurisdiction of the ITC and the scope of the Broadcasting Acts to companies based abroad who, through cable, broadcast in the United Kingdom; [66257]

(2) how he intends to ensure that the political impartiality required by the Broadcasting Acts is maintained in respect of broadcasts being made in the United Kingdom by companies based abroad; and if he will make a statement. [66256]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 20 January 1999]: Transfrontier broadcasting in Europe is regulated, in the European Economic Area, by Council Directive 89/552/EEC, as amended by Council Directive 97/36/EC ("The Broadcasting Directive"). Outside this area it is regulated by the European Convention on Transfrontier Television of the Council of Europe. Both legal instruments enshrine the "home State" principle; where a broadcaster is under the jurisdiction of one State, and hence licensed by that State, it may transmit freely to all others, provided that the minimum standards of the Directive or Convention are complied with. The Independent Television Commission may not extend its jurisdiction over such broadcasters, whether they broadcast by means of cable or satellite in the United Kingdom. Conversely, an ITC licensed broadcaster cannot be under the jurisdiction of any other State. By these means, a free market in legitimately licensed broadcasting services has been created throughout Europe.

European public service broadcasters are expected to observe principles of political impartiality and balance in their coverage of news and current affairs. This is regulated by the competent authorities in individual States. Any concern about political impartiality in a programme from abroad would need to be taken up on a bilateral basis either with the relevant regulatory authority or with the relevant Government.

Tourism (Training and Accommodation)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals his Department has to raise the standards of (a) staff training and (b) accommodation in the tourist industry. [67357]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 January 1999]: National Training Organisations (NTOs) are already working to ensure that training and development products are of high quality with a strong emphasis on transferable skills.

Current accommodation inspection schemes aim to identify and promote establishments to the public so that they can use them with confidence, through a system of facility classification and quality grading. The English Tourist Board, the AA and the RAC are now harmonising their accommodation schemes. The new harmonised accommodation rating scheme, being launched to consumers in September 1999, places far more emphasis on quality and will remove the confusion caused by the plethora of signs, and the lack of clarity about what to expect from each kind of serviced accommodation.

Further, our new tourism strategy, which will be published soon, aims to create a competitive world class tourism industry which provides affordable quality, is open to all and makes wise use of resources. The strategy contains specific recommendations for action to develop a trained and motivated work force in the industry and to improve the quality of tourist accommodation.

Tourism (Devon)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much Government money per head of population was spent on tourism and tourist attractions in Devon in the most recent year for which figures are available. [67317]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 January 1999]: Government funding for the national tourist boards supports tourism in Devon and every other county. In 1998–99, some £35 million will go to the British Tourist Authority (BTA) and £9.7 million to the English Tourist Board (ETB). The ETB in turn grants around £504,000 to the West Country Tourist Board (WCTB) which covers Devon and other counties in the South West of England. It is not possible to distinguish support for Devon from support for other counties.

Tourism also benefits from Lottery awards and funds from European programmes. In 1998–99, lottery awards of over £8 million (just over £7.50 per head of population) and over £1.4 million (just over £1.30 per head of population) from various European programmes has so far been granted to projects in Devon from which tourism stands to benefit.

In addition, the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy estimates that in 1997–98 local authority expenditure on tourism promotion in Devon was just over £2.8 million (over £2.60 per head of population).

New Opportunities Fund (ICT Training)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport by what date New Opportunities Fund moneys for information and communication technology skills training for teachers will be available to schools. [67384]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The New Opportunities Fund (NOF) will be sending information to schools, including details of how to apply for their funding entitlement and how to use it, in Spring 1999. The aim is that training for teachers and school librarians can begin—in schools—in Summer term 1999. Funding from NOF will be available to schools from mid-April.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list, for the delivery of information and communications technology skills training for teachers funded by the New Opportunities Fund, the organisations which (a) expressed interest in applying to become approved providers, (b) formally applied to become approved providers and (c) have been accepted as approved providers. [67391]

Mr. Banks: The New Opportunities Fund (NOF) is currently completing an approval process within which prospective providers have to demonstrate the skills and experience necessary to deliver high quality training in information and communication technology (ICT).

Some 3,500 organisations applied for the specification for training providers. Of this number 194 (England), 38 (Scotland), 38 (Wales), and 21 (Northern Ireland) made formal applications. The names of successful applicants will be published when final decisions have been taken.

Royal Society of Literature

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to meet the chairman of the Royal Society of Literature. [65574]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I will be meeting the Chairman of the Royal Society of Literature on 18 February.

DEFENCE

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the percentage of his Department's systems which might be affected by millennium compliance failure by other Departments, public or private companies and international Government and non-governmental systems. [66752]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 21 January 1999]: We are discussing this issue with our major suppliers, and are seeking assurances of continuity of supply from them and from their suppliers in turn.

Defence systems have relatively little dependence on systems in other Departments. We are liaising closely with our allies to identify the many international inter-dependencies and are working with them to ensure that allied and joint operations will not be adversely affected by the millennium date-change. These dependencies range from individual components to linkage between systems. Information on the number of such dependencies is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on steps taken recently at the Vulcan Naval Reactor Test Establishment at Dounreay to enhance protection measures against earthquakes; and if he will estimate the cost of this work. [66424]

Mr. Spellar: Work is taking place at the Vulcan Naval Reactor Test Establishment at Dounreay to enhance protection against a number of potential hazards, including earthquakes, while preparing the facility for a further period of operation. Modifications are required to enable the facility to meet standards directly equivalent to those required by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate for modern civil nuclear facilities. The cost of work related to enhanced protection measures against earthquakes is estimated to be about £9 million.

Infra-red Technology

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of investment by other Government departments into infra-red technology for use in the defence industry. [66670]

Mr. Spellar: None. Government investment in technology specifically intended for defence purposes would, however, be expected to fall primarily to the MOD.

Royal Navy Personnel

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel, of which ranks, are currently attached to each Royal Navy vessel (a) mothballed and (b) awaiting refit. [66702]

Mr. Doug Henderson: HMS Ark Royal is at present undergoing preservation by dehumidification and HMS Intrepid is currently on standby. Staffing levels of the two ships as at 1 January 1999 were as follows:

Ship/current role	Rank	Manning levels
HMS Ark Royal
(Preservation by Dehumidification)	Commander	1
	Senior Rates	26
		66

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of the service personnel currently attached to (a) HMS Ark Royal and (b) HMS Intrepid. [66701]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The annual cost of the service personnel currently attached to HMS Ark Royal and HMS Intrepid is some £1.7 million and £1.9 million respectively.

Trident

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of the British equivalent of the US Department of the Navy SP10 Memo 4900 SP131522 relating to UK Trident purchases in the US from fiscal year 1984 to date. [67040]

Mr. George Robertson: I am assuming that the documents which my hon. Friend is seeking are the UK's responses to the US Department of the Navy's budget authorisation requests. Copies of UK budget authorisations going back to 1984 are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. I have, however, arranged for the authorisations for the last six US fiscal years to be placed in the Library.

More comprehensive estimates of UK Trident acquisitions and running costs were included in the Strategic Defence Review Supporting Essay Five.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place with United States Government officials concerning the possibility of Britain meeting future US tritium requirements. [67212]

Mr. George Robertson: There are regular contacts and exchanges of information between the United States and the United Kingdom on nuclear matters under the aegis of the 1958 Agreement between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States on "Co-operation in the Use of Atomic Energy for Mutual Defence Purposes" Command 537 as amended. These contacts have included discussions on tritium requirements.

Chapelcross Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had with the DETR regarding the implications of the OSPAR agreement for continued operation of the Chapelcross tritium production facility. [67211]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD has not yet held discussions with the Department of the Environment, Transport, and Regions (DETR) on this matter. However, nuclear operators are having to consider how to achieve the targets set by OSPAR in July 1998 for reductions in discharges. I understand that the DETR are shortly to start discussions with operators, including BNFL who operate Chapelcross, so that proposals and programmes can be produced for presentation to OSPAR in 2000.

SCOTLAND

Children (Scotland) Act 1995

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the operation of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995. [66634]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The Children (Scotland) Act 1995 is already kept under review in a number of ways. It was identified as a research priority area in 1996 and a number of research studies have been commissioned across a wide range of the Act's provisions. Progress is reported through a series of research bulletins, copies of which are in the Library.

The operation of the Act is also reviewed regularly through inspections by the Social Work Services Inspectorate, publication of statistical information and a joint Scottish Office/COSLA working group set up for that purpose. A further indication of the effectiveness of the 1995 Act will come from the regular review of local authority children's services plans, which were required to be in place from April 1998. Taken together, the information from these sources allow effective oversight of the Act to be maintained.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Adoption and Fostering

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to gather and publish information about adoption and fostering in Scotland to record the numbers of children being placed, their ages and their care history. [66635]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 26 January 1999]: Information on adoptions in Scotland is collected and published regularly. The next publication, for the year ending December 1998, is planned for March 1999 and will contain information on numbers of children adopted, their age distributions and whether the local authority was involved in the adoption.

Information on the numbers of children looked after by foster carers is collected annually at an aggregate level. The latest data, for the year to March 1998, were published in December 1998. It is planned to publish an annual information note on the background of children who cease to be looked after during the year but without specifically identifying those children who were in foster care. There are no plans to collect or publish care histories on individual children.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Care in the Community

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums his Department currently allocates to councils for each person provided with residential accommodation under Care in the Community. [66636]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The allocations of resources to councils for their community care responsibilities are calculated with reference to a range of indicators, and not by allocating a sum per person. These indicators are agreed in consultation with COSLA.

The resultant distribution forms part of each council's Grant Aided Expenditure assessment which individual authorities allocate to services on the basis of local need. The Grant Aided Expenditure allocations for councils' social work responsibilities announced in the recent local government settlement for 1999–2000 total £1.1 billion, an increase of £50 million on the current year.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in each council area are provided with residential accommodation under Care in the Community. [66637]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The number of adults cared for in local authority residential homes and the number in private or voluntary homes who are wholly or partially funded by local authorities in Scotland at 31 March 1997, are provided for each local authority in the table.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what figures his Department uses to determine the economic charge per room which housing associations and other providers under the Care in the Community scheme have to charge to meet the registration standards set for staffing, food and accommodation and their loan charges. [66638]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 26 January 1999]: We do not calculate charges per room. Supported accommodation is only one of a large range of care options available to councils to meet their community care responsibilities. The distribution of funding—which is undertaken in consultation with COSLA—is not based on the cost of any one option.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

St. Patrick's Day Parades

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will collate and publish data from police authorities on (a) the number of towns in which St. Patrick's Day parades are held each year, (b) police estimates of the number of participants in parades of over 1,000 persons for each of the last 10 years and (c) the number of parades which raised public order concerns. [66962]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The police have no record of any St. Patrick's Day parades taking place in Scotland.

There have been no parades involving more than 1,000 people in the Dumfries and Galloway, Fife, Grampian or Northern police force areas. The information in respect of the remaining areas is as follows:

Central Scotland: One annual parade, of greatly variable size.

Lothian and Borders: One annual parade averaging 1,000 participants.

Strathclyde: (Information is available for the last 3 years only).

1996—21 parades averaging 2,700 participants

1997—28 parades averaging 3,530 participants

Tayside: One parade in 1993 involving approximately 7,500 participants.

All large parades require to be effectively policed to ensure the safety of the participants involved and of the public. However, only the parade in Tayside gave rise to serious public order concerns.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Saughton Prison

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the special segregation unit at Saughton prison was completed; how much it cost; how many prisoners it is designed to accommodate; how many staff will work there; when he expects it to be in operation; and if he will make a statement. [67497]

Mr. McLeish: The new Segregation Unit was completed in November 1998, at a cost of £1.3 million, excluding VAT. The Unit has been designed to hold a maximum of 14 prisoners. Staff on duty at any one time will comprise one Supervisor, 3 Residential Officers, and, when required, one Administrative Officer. The Unit will be brought into operation once current discussions with the Scottish Prison Officers' Association, about staffing levels for the establishment as a whole, have been satisfactorily concluded.

From 1 July 1999, prison service issues will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Housing Partnership Funding

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the local authorities which have bid for new housing partnership funding for the period 1999–2002, detailing for each authority (a) if the bid is a feasibility study of stock transfers, how many dwellings are covered by the study and (b) if the bid is for actual transfers of homes, how many dwellings the authority plans to transfer, if funding requirements are met in full. [67499]

Mr. Macdonald: All local authorities except Angus Council have submitted bids for New Housing Partnership funding for the period 1999–2002. Bids are at present being assessed by the New Housing Partnerships Advisory Group which will be making recommendations to Ministers. An announcement on the successful bids, including those involving feasibility work for councils considering the possibility of housing transfer, is expected around the end of February.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Scottish Office Documents

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the documents published by the Scottish Office since May 1997 indicating which were sent unsolicited (a) to all Scottish hon. Members and (b) to selected hon. Members. [67496]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Office produces a large number of publications of different kinds. A list of items published between May 1997 and January 1998 was placed in the House Library in February 1998. A further list of items published in the year to January 1999 will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Information about which publications were sent to hon. Members is not held centrally, and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. In general, The Scottish Office seeks to ensure that key publications are brought to the attention of hon. Members by sending copies to the hon. Member for each Scottish constituency. In addition, Scottish Office publications are available on the Department's web site: http://www.scotland.gov.uk/.

Social Exclusion Projects

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the social exclusion projects currently in operation in Scotland indicating for each (a) the number of people benefiting, (b) the Government's financial contribution and (c) the total cost. [67498]

Mr. Macdonald: The Government are taking forward a wide range of programmes and projects to promote social inclusion in Scotland. Over the next three years, the Government will invest £48 million in the new Social Inclusion Partnerships; £49 million in the National Childcare Strategy; £26 million in New Community Schools; £49 million in Early Intervention schemes; £24 million in Alternatives to Exclusion from School; and an additional £278 million in New Housing Partnerships. The Government have also pledged around £350 million over the lifetime of this Parliament to support the New Deals in Scotland, another key element of the Government's programme to promote inclusion. The Government's programme to promote social inclusion in Scotland will be set out in detail in the context of its "social inclusion strategy", to be published shortly.

From 1 July 1999, action taken forward under the social inclusion strategy will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Education White Paper

Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish the Government's Education White Paper; and if he will make a statement. [68124]

Mr. Dewar: I have today published our Education White Paper, entitled Targeting Excellence: Modernising Scotland's Schools. Copies have been sent to all Members with a Scottish constituency, and are also available in the Library of the House.

It sets out a radical programme for improvement and an approach to modernisation to achieve our objective of a world class schools system founded on excellence. At its centre is a focus on the needs of the individual child.

The programme for improvement incorporates a wide range of proposals in the early years, throughout the work of schools and to support children in learning outside the classroom. Key policies include a strategy on literacy and numeracy, the National Grid for Learning, involvement of parents and the piloting of New Community Schools.

Our approach to modernisation includes proposals on the teaching profession and organisation of schools to ensure that the framework within which schools and teachers operate empowers them to take responsibility for their own improvement. Many of these proposals are for further consideration and consultation.

From 1 July 1999 education will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament, and it will be for them to consider how they wish to take forward the proposals outlined in the paper.

WALES

National Assembly (EU Representation)

11. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he plans to establish representation for the National Assembly in Brussels which is separate from UK representation; and if he will make a statement. [66280]

Mr. Michael: Wales will continue to be represented formally in Brussels by the Office of the United Kingdom Permanent Representative. However, it will be for the Assembly itself to decide whether it wishes to establish a local presence in Brussels.

Paediatric Heart Surgery

12. Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to develop paediatric heart surgery in Wales. [66281]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The University Hospital of Wales is currently engaged in discussions with the Royal College of Surgeons over the best arrangements for delivering cardiac services for children following the departure of a key surgeon. The formal link between Cardiff's paediatric cardiac unit and Birmingham Children's Hospital ensures that children who need treatment are receiving it. The setting up of the associated paediatric intensive care unit at UHW, for which the Department is providing additional funding, will help to maintain and develop a viable high quality clinical service for the children of Wales.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Employment (South Wales Valleys)

13. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of employment trends in the south Wales valleys. [66282]

Mr. Michael: The Welsh Office will be publishing "A Statistical Focus on Wales: Valleys" on 24 February 1999. It will contain a significant amount of information on the labour market in the Valleys, compared with the rest of Wales.

Addressing the needs of the Valleys and West Wales is one of my main priorities as set out in "Pathway to Prosperity".

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Nurses and Midwives

14. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) nurses and (b) midwives have undergone training in Wales in the current year. [66283]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: In Wales there were 2,300 nurses undertaking three year diploma or degree courses during 1998 and 63 nurses undertaking a four year degree course. Eighty four nurses have taken the 18 month post basic midwifery diploma course and 36 students are undertaking the three year direct entry midwifery diploma course. In addition 140 nurses were undertaking the Diploma in Community Health studies course.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

20. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many whole-time equivalent nurses are currently employed in Wales. [66289]

Mr. Michael: The NHS in Wales reported that there were 23,691 whole time equivalent staff employed in the nursing, midwifery and health visiting group in September 1998.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

NHS Beds

15. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to encourage the more effective use of beds in the NHS. [66284]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: It is important that all parts of the NHS operate effectively and efficiently. The decisions on trust reconfiguration will enable more effective use of facilities in co-operation with other organisations, and the work already underway on a Corporate Strategy for NHS Wales together with the performance framework set out in "Putting Patients First", will contribute to improved results.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Gwynedd County Council (Employment Policies)

16. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Welsh Language Board regarding the employment policies of Gwynedd county council. [66285]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My right hon. Friend and I have held no such discussions with the Welsh Language Board.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

19. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding employment discrimination against non-Welsh speakers by Gwynedd county council; and if he will make a statement. [66288]

Mr. Michael: I have not personally received any representations since coming to office. My Department has received one representation. The Welsh Office has no power to investigate or intervene in local authority recruitment matters. Accordingly, the correspondent was advised to bring any concerns he might have to the attention of Gwynedd Council's Monitoring Officer.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Livestock Industry

17. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the Welsh livestock industry. [66286]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Welsh Office is working with the Welsh Development Agency and the industry to develop an Action Plan for the lamb and beef sectors which will be published in the Spring. This, together with the promotional work being done by organisations such as Welsh Lamb and Beef Promotions to reopen our European markets, will provide a basis for the Welsh livestock industry to strengthen its competitiveness and adapt to meet the challenges facing it.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Education Funding

18. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the funding for education in Wales for 1999–2000. [66287]

Mr. Michael: I have announced an extra £117 million spending for education in 1999–2000. The main elements are £70 million in the local government revenue settlement for education; an additional £23.5 million for further education; and an additional £38.2 million for higher education. Further details will be announced shortly.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

National Assembly

21. Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has in respect of the working hours of the Welsh Assembly and the provision of child care to support Welsh Assembly members and staff with children under 14 years of age. [66290]

Mr. Michael: It is for the Assembly itself to determine its working hours and its child care policy, having regard to the recommendations of the National Assembly Advisory Group (NAAG).

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

22. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much is planned to be spent on making ready a debating chamber for the National Assembly in Crickhowell House. [66291]

Mr. Michael: The estimated cost for providing a temporary chamber is £1 million.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

24. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he is proposing for ministerial responsibilities within his Department consequent upon the establishment of the National Assembly. [66293]

Mr. Michael: This is a matter for consideration once the Assembly is established.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about how he proposes to handle appointments to public bodies which are due to be considered in the run-up to, and during the establishment of, the National Assembly for Wales. [68344]

Mr. Michael: In considering appointments which fall due in this period I have been mindful of the need to allow the Assembly to take over its responsibilities quickly and in an orderly way in relation to those public bodies for which it will be responsible. It has been necessary to give early consideration to such appointments because of the time required for the appointments process.

I have now had the opportunity of considering appointments in detail and, generally, I propose to extend existing appointments for up to 12 months to allow the Assembly time to introduce its own policy and procedures. This is not suitable for all appointments and there is a need for some full term re-appointments and new appointments.

Different public bodies have varying circumstances and each one has had to be considered individually. The factors which have been taken into account in each case have been the potential impact on the body concerned of short term extensions to existing appointments, the need for long term stability and continuity; the number of appointments becoming vacant at any one time; the need to retain specialist knowledge or a balance of skills on the body concerned; past difficulties in recruiting members; and the number of appointments held by candidates. In all cases, I have had full regard to the guidance and advice of the Commissioner for Public Appointments and I shall continue to do so.

Decisions have now been taken on most of the appointments concerned and these will be announced in the coming weeks.

EU Structural Funds

23. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about reform of European structural funds in relation to Wales. [66292]

Mr. Michael: It is important that reform of the Structural Funds provides an outcome that is affordable, durable and fair and my Department is fully involved in discussions at the UK level and in Brussels to secure an outcome consistent with these principles. For Wales this should ensure that Structural Funds support is targeted at the most needy areas of the country and it remains very likely that West Wales and the Valleys will benefit from an Objective 1 programme starting next year.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Road Safety, Croesyceiliog

25. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the danger to pedestrians crossing the A4042 at the pedestrian crossing at Croesyceiliog. [66294]

Mr. Hain: Pedestrian safety is of paramount importance to the Welsh Office. Since an at-grade crossing place was provided in late 1987, no reported injury accidents involving pedestrians have occurred at this point, and the situation is constantly monitored.

During the design of the Llantarnam Bypass scheme and the subsequent Public Inquiry careful consideration was given to the issue of pedestrian safety.

Additional signing was provided, advising pedestrians and motorists of the crossing point and to help encourage pedestrian use of the upgraded subway.

Officials have recently agreed to meet with local residents for a discussion of their concerns in this matter.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

NHS Vacancies

26. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many vacancies for (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) midwives there are in the NHS in Wales. [66295]

Mr. Michael: Although this information is not collected centrally we do have some information regarding nurses and midwives but not doctors. The workforce plans produced by NHS Trusts identified at 30 September 1997, 442 vacancies for registered nurses in Wales out of 11,243 staff in post; 30 vacancies for community nurses out of a total 2,634 staff in post; and 24 vacancies for widwives out of 1,284 staff in post. The 1998 data will be available in May 1999. A nurse executive survey undertaken in June 1998, suggested that nursing vacancies had risen to 597.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Welsh Development Agency

27. Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to ensure that the Welsh Development Agency supports indigenous Welsh businesses as fully as it supports foreign investors. [66415]

Mr. Michael: Yesterday, on 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 172, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Preseli Pembrokeshire (Ms Lawrence), I announced that I had written to the Chairman of the Welsh Development Agency setting out Strategic Guidance for the period to March 2000. A copy of this letter is available in the Library of the House. I made it clear that the Agency, in addition to attracting foreign direct investment, must concentrate on supporting new businesses and encouraging small businesses to grow in all parts of Wales.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Schools (Funding)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the funding for schools in Wales for 1999–2000. [66279]

Mr. Hain: We have allocated an additional £70 million for education in 1999–2000 and I have made it clear that the bulk of this money should go into delegated school budgets to support teachers and promote higher standards in the classroom.

An extra £13 million for capital works at local authority schools is available in 1999–2000. This on top of capital provision for local authorities through Basic Credit Approvals (BCAs). The notional provision for education BCAs is £42.939m.

Further announcements covering the Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) programme and for infant class size reduction will be made shortly.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Quangos

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many quango posts in Wales have become vacant since May 1997; in which newspapers advertisements for these posts have been published; and which of these posts were filled without having been publicly advertised. [67272]

Mr. Michael: Seventy one Public Appointment vacancies in NDPBs in Wales have arisen. Of these;

Sixty vacancies have been advertised in local and national press.

Three vacancies were not filled due to merger or abolition of the body or transfer of powers, these being one member position on the Welsh Health Common Services Agency, one member position on the Health Promotion Authority for Wales and one member position on the Development Board for Rural Wales.

One member vacancy on the Ancient Monuments Board was not advertised as the appointment is made from a nominated source as laid down in statute.

Two member vacancies on the Tai Cymru Board falling in May 1997 were not advertised because the appointments process began under the previous administration. The board has now ceased to exist.

The appointments process has yet to begin for the five remaining vacancies. These are one member position on the Court and Council of the Museum and Galleries of Wales, one member position on the Arts Council for Wales, one member position on the Sports Council for Wales, one member position on the Gwent Agriculture Wages Committee and one member position on the Gwynedd Agriculture Wages Committee.

The local and national press used to advertise these vacancies in varying combinations were: the Western Mail, the Liverpool Daily Post, The Guardian, The Times, The Times Educational Supplement, The Times Higher Education Supplement, The Sunday Times, "Golwg", "Y Cymro", Water Bulletin and the Library Association Record.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Teacher Training

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated cost, in each of the next three financial years, of the recently announced inducement payments for students prepared to undertake teacher training courses; if these payments are to be made to students regardless of whether they are undertaking such courses in Wales or elsewhere; and if such grants will be made by his Department to students from outside Wales wishing to undertake such courses at colleges in Wales. [67104]

Mr. Hain: Payments of the bursaries for mathematics and science students will be made to those who undertake a PGCE course in mathematics or science in Wales, starting in September 1999. It will be paid as £2,500 during the PGCE course, and £2,500 to trainees entering the teaching profession. The full payment of the bursary will therefore be conditional on those students subsequently entering teaching within those subjects.

It is estimated that based on current intake targets the scheme in Wales could cost £775,000 per annum in 1999–2000 and the following two financial years. Payments will be made to all students undertaking courses in Wales; similarly, payments will be made by the Department for Education and Employment to all students undertaking courses in England. The precise mechanism for making the payments will be finalised in the next few months.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Government Residential Property

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how his Department has performed against last year's targets for reducing empty Government residential property; and what new targets have been set for 1998–99. [68345]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I am pleased to announce that the Welsh Office was largely successful in meeting the target set for disposal of empty government homes in 1997–98.

We are continuing to set challenging targets for disposal or bringing back into use those properties which become empty and hope to be able to maintain our success over the coming year.

Details of achievements against targets for 1997–98 and new targets for 1998–99 are set as follows.

Empty government residential property

	Number
Welsh Office achievements 1997–98
Total stock 1 April 1997	114
Empty stock 1 April 1997	33
1997–98 Target for disposal or bringing back into use	33
Achievement against target	28
Welsh Office targets 1998–99
Total stock 1 April 1998	136
Empty stock 1 April 1998	[1]17
Target for disposal or bringing back into use	9

[1] Includes 8 properties vandalised/derelict held for future road schemes and considered unsuitable for bringing back into use

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Concessionary Travel (Blind and Visually Impaired)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce regulations to require local authorities in Wales to provide a mandatory concessionary travel scheme for blind and visually impaired people. [67448]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Under the Transport Act 1985 local authorities may provide travel concessions for people who are blind or partially sighted, although there is no requirement to do so. My priority with concessionary fares is to ensure that from April all authorities provide schemes for pensioners which meet the minimum standard of a £5 bus pass and half-fares, and then to move to free bus travel for pensioners over the next two to three years. This will of course benefit many blind and visually impaired people.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Tir Gofal Agri-environmental Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received since the meeting of the Welsh Grand Committee on 16 December 1998 concerning the Tir Gofal agri-environmental scheme. [66269]

Mr. Michael: No representations have been received about Tir Gofal since the Welsh Grand Committee met on 16 December 1998.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Environmental Projects

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the funding of projects to improve the environment of Wales for 1999–2000. [66277]

Mr. Michael: I have announced that I will be making provision of £12.4 million for Tir Gofal over the next three years. Continuing support will be available from the Environment Wales grant scheme, CCW and others such as the WDA.

I will be making an announcement shortly about the £3 million I have earmarked for an Environment Development Fund. I thank my hon. Friend for her interest.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Aerosol Sprays

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what mechanisms exist to assess the toxicity of, and to approve the use of, the ingredients of aerosol spray products used in the domestic environment. [67910]

Dr. Howells: A number of chemicals are banned from use in consumer products by Directives agreed by all European Union Member States. Chemicals prohibited under the 'Classification, Packaging And Labelling Dangerous Substances Directive 67/548/EEC' and the 'Restrictions On the Marketing And Use Of Certain Dangerous Substances And Preparations Directive 76/769/EEC', are not available for use by aerosol, or other manufacturers. Dangerous chemicals are regularly reviewed under these Directives. The safety of chemicals not prohibited under these Directives and intended for use in domestic products, including aerosols, is regulated by the Chemicals (Hazard Information And Packaging For Supply) Regulations 1994 as amended.

These Regulations require, amongst other things, that manufacturers must assess a chemical product for its health effects (toxicity, irritancy etc.). If dangerous the product must then be labelled with a warning symbol and with phrases indicating the dangers. The particular chemical(s) which cause the product to be classified must also be named on the label. The Regulations also require that all potentially dangerous chemicals supplied to the public must be in packaging which is properly labelled and contains warnings about the potential hazards and giving brief advice on suitable precautions.

Casalee

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what investigations Her Majesty's Government have carried out into the affairs of Casalee; [65127]

(2) what dealings representatives of Her Majesty's Government have had with Casalee. [65128]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: As far as the DTI is concerned, a search of the most potentially relevant sources of information has produced no evidence of any DTI dealings with—or investigations into the affairs of Casalee.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the role of Her Majesty's Government official was in (a) sponsoring and (b) participating in discussions between Mr. John Bredenkamp and Brigadier Julius in connection with the affairs of (i) Allivane and (ii) Casalee. [65129]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: As far as the DTI is concerned, a search of the most potentially relevant sources of information has produced no evidence of any role played by DTI officials in these matters.

Stephen Kock

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) in what role Mr. Stephen Kock represented Her Majesty's Government in his dealings with Mr. Gerald Bull and the Space Research Corporation; [65149]

(2) in what role Mr. Stephen Kock represented Her Majesty's Government when advising Societé Generale de Belge, GECHEM and Warburgs during the negotiations by Astra to purchase PRB. [65150]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: As far as the DTI is concerned, I am not aware that Mr. Kock has ever represented the Department.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which civil servants in his Department met Mr. Stephen Kock to discuss matters relating to defence contracts with Malaysia in the period from January 1985 to the end of December 1988. [65138]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: A search of the most potentially relevant sources of information has produced no evidence of any such meetings between DTI officials and Mr. Kock.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions took place between his Department's officials and representatives of the Scott inquiry on the advisability of calling upon Mr. Stephen Kock to give evidence to that inquiry (a) before, (b) during and (c) after the inquiry. [65131]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: All issues relating to whom to call to give evidence to the Scott inquiry were solely a matter for Sir Richard Scott and his inquiry team.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions have taken place since 1992 between representatives of Her Majesty's Government and Mr. Stephen Kock over the dealings of Messrs Allivane in defence contracting between 1989 and 1992. [65124]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: As far as the DTI is concerned, a search of the potentially most relevant sources of information has produced no evidence of any DTI involvement in such discussions.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what role was played by his Department in sponsoring dealings in defence matters between Mr. Stephen Kock and Sir Thomas Legg. [65142]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: I am not aware of any role played by the DTI in relation to dealings in defence matters between Mr. Stephen Kock and Sir Thomas Legg.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Government-sponsored delegations to Russia between 1990 and 1995 included Mr. Stephen Kock. [65157]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: I am not aware of any Government-sponsored delegations to Russia between 1990 and 1995 which included Mr. Kock.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what role has been played by Mr. Stephen Kock in conjunction with representatives of Her Majesty's Government in arranging, promoting or negotiating arms supply to China. [65139]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: As far as the DTI is concerned, a search of the most potentially relevant sources of information has produced no evidence of any collaboration between Mr. Stephen Kock and the DTI in arranging, promoting or negotiating arms supply to China.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in what role Mr. Stephen Kock represented Her Majesty's Government when he negotiated credit for Iraq. [65151]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Mr. Kock did not represent the Export Credits Guarantee Department when credit facilities were negotiated for Iraq.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what role was played by his Department in sponsoring dealings on defence contracting matters between Mr. Stephen Kock, Mr. Roy Barber and Mr. Dennis Robertson of Stoy Hayward. [65141]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: A search of the most potentially relevant sources of information has produced no evidence of a role played by the DTI in any such matters.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration was made by his Department's inspectors of the advisability of bringing legal proceedings against Mr. Stephen Kock as a director of Astra. [65132]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Companies Act inspectors were appointed to investigate and report on the affairs of Astra and in particular the circumstances surrounding the acquisition of a Belgian company, PRB. However, when asked for their views on directors disqualification, the inspectors did not identify Stephen Kock as a candidate for such proceedings.

Companies House

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the increased income which will accrue to Companies House in 1999–2000 as a result of proposed changes to the level of fees to take effect on 1 March 1999. [67913]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The increased income expected in 1999–2000 as a result of proposed changes to fees from 1 March 1999 is approximately £2 million. This figure includes both the direct effect of changed fees and the forecast impact on sales revenue as volumes adjust to changed fees and other market-place parameters.

End-of-life Vehicles

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is his Department's current estimate of the cost of implementation of the draft EC Directive on end-of-life vehicles; [67341]

(2) if he will publish the results of the consultation exercise by his Department to assess the implications of the draft EC Directive on end-of-life vehicles. [67342]

Dr. Howells: The Government estimate that the cost of implementing this Directive will be £312 million per annum in 2005 and £388 million per annum in 2015. My Department submitted an Explanatory Memorandum and Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA) on the Directive to the European Scrutiny Committee in December 1998, and the RIA was then updated in January 1999. These documents summarise the results of our consultation exercise and give further details on the costs and benefits of this Directive. Copies of the Explanatory Memorandum and the RIA are available from the Vote Office, and copies of the updated RIA have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect of the End of Vehicle Life directive on vintage and classic cars; what is his Department's current cost compliance assessment; what voting arrangements apply to the directive; and if he will make a statement. [67392]

Dr. Howells: Vintage and classic vehicles will only be affected by this Directive if they become 'waste' as defined under existing legislation—in other words, when the owners have decided to discard them. My Department submitted an Explanatory Memorandum and Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA) on this Directive to the European Scrutiny Committee in December 1998, and the RIA was then updated in January 1999. Copies of the Explanatory Memorandum and RIA are available from the Vote Office, and copies of the updated RIA have been placed in the Libraries of the House. This Directive is a qualified majority voting Directive made under Article 130s(1) of the Treaty of Rome. It has still to be finalised and decisions on the Council's Common Position are not expected until the next Environment Council in March.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to implement the European Union Directive on End-of-Life Vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [67154]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 26 January 1999]: This Directive has still to be finalised. Decisions on the Council's Common Position will not be taken until the next Environment Council in March, and the Directive is not presently expected to come into force until the year 2000. We would then envisage that Member States would be given an appropriate period in which to implement the Directive.

Industrial Tribunals

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of (a) chairmen and (b) wing members of industrial tribunals are women. [67742]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Employment Rights (Dispute Resolution) Act 1998 renamed industrial tribunals as employment tribunals from 1 August 1998.

The current percentage of women who are (a) employment tribunal chairmen (including the Presidents) is 15.4 per cent. and (b) lay members is 29.5 per cent.

British Aviation

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of British aviation. [66930]

Mr. Battle: The Prime Minister's statement with the Heads of Government of France and Germany of December 1997 made it clear that there is an urgent need to restructure the aerospace and defence industries in Europe, if our companies are to continue to compete successfully in world markets. That remains the case. However, as Ministers have made clear, it is for industry to make specific restructuring proposals.

Any proposed merger would be considered by the relevant competition authorities. Each case would be considered on its own merits.

Tourism

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of loans under the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme have been in the leisure, hospitality and tourism sectors; and what is the total value of such loans. [67400]

Mr. Wills: Loans under the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme are recorded under the Central Statistical Office's Standard Industrial Classification of economic activities. Leisure, hospitality and tourism are not recognised as separate sectors within this classification.

Businesses in these areas are distributed within a range of industrial sectors and a manual collection of the data would incur disproportionate costs.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the percentage of electrical goods currently on sale in the United Kingdom which are not millennium compliant; what steps he is taking to ensure that goods which are not millennium compliant are clearly marked as such; and if he will make a statement. [66645]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 20 January 1999]: Only a small percentage of electrical goods on sale in the United Kingdom depend on date changes to function correctly. The 'Millennium Bug Homecheck!' brochure available from Action 2000 and major high street retailers contains a list of domestic electrical and transport equipment not affected by the date change and a list of those which are, mainly home computers, video recorders, burglar alarms, fax machines, digital cameras, answerphones, camcorders, videophones and watches. The Government have sought to make sure that suppliers of electrical goods are fully aware of their responsibilities for ensuring compliance of any such goods on sale that are affected by the date change. Many of the large retailers have tested their electrical goods and given written guarantees that they are millennium compliant.

The application of false or misleading statements to products is a criminal offence under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968. Any goods falsely described as millennium compliant would be subject to controls which already exist.

Regional Aid

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of the proportion of EU structural funding proposed for rural areas under the European guidelines on regional aid published in March 1998. [66142]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Commission's draft regulation for the Structural and Cohesion Funds for post 1999 propose that rural areas could be eligible for funding under Objectives 1, 2 and 3. There is also a proposal for a Community Initiative for rural development. There are no details of proportions of funding available to rural or any other areas at a national level.

The Guidelines on Regional Aid, published by the Commission in March 1998, cover the review of Assisted Areas which is the subject of a separate exercise. No decisions have been yet made on areas which might be eligible after 1 January 2000.

Unsolicited Faxes

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he plans to take to regulate the unsolicited sending of facsimile messages. [67456]

Mr. Wills: Further to my predecessor's written answer on 16 November 1998, Official Report, column 434, the Government laid the Telecommunications (Data Protection and Privacy) (Direct Marketing) Regulations 1998 before Parliament on 17 December 1998. These Regulations will come into force on 1 May 1999.

The Regulations will prohibit the sending of unsolicited direct marketing faxes to private individuals and sole traders in the UK, as well as to partnerships in England and Wales. The Regulations also establish an "opt-out" scheme for corporate subscribers who do not wish to receive such faxes. The Office of Telecommunications (OFTEL) is responsible for setting up the opt-out scheme. Details of how to register will be publicised in due course.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Al Shifa Factory, Khartoum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government gave to the letter of the Sudanese Minister of Foreign Affairs of 27 October 1998 asking for clarification of his comments, made on 23 October, to the effect that Her Majesty's Government had independent evidence that the Al Shifa factory in Khartoum was making chemical or biological weapons before the United States air strike. [67623]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary did not make the comments to which my hon. Friend refers.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67839]

Mr. Fatchett: Under current publishing arrangements FCO would make any White or Green papers available on its Web site—www.fco.gov.uk. Standard Web browsing software allows documents to be viewed online in large fonts, or downloaded for use in specialised computer systems for the visually impaired. There are no plans to supplement this by floppy disk distribution.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by title the publications produced by his Department since 1 February 1998. [67385]

Mr. Fatchett: A list of departmental publications from February to December 1998 has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Departmental Recruits (Human Rights Course)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the (a) instructors, (b) location and (c) subjects concerned in the one day human rights course for new Foreign Office recruits. [67368]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Human rights training courses are held in the FCO and are organised by the Human Rights Policy Department. They cover international law and institutions, UK policy, projects and case studies, as well as presentations by NGOs. In human rights training courses over the last six months, presentations have been given by Amnesty International; Save the Children Fund; Article 19; Penal Reform International; Medical Foundation for the Victims of Torture; and Minority Rights Group.

Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Liberal Democrat Members using the Joint Consultative Committee mechanism. [67056]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 25 January 1999]: I have attended several meetings of the Joint Consultative Committee since its inception.

I have also had one bilateral meeting with the Liberal Democrat spokesman on foreign affairs and defence.

Biological Weapons Convention

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Government will promote proposals for a strengthened Biological Weapons Convention by the year 2000 at the forthcoming negotiations in Geneva. [67158]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Strengthening the Biological Weapons Convention (BWC) is a key Government objective in the field of arms control. The UK is playing a leading role in the negotiations on a legally-binding Protocol where we are chairing the sessions on compliance measures. This section will be at the heart of the future verification regime. With a total of 16 weeks of negotiations in 1999, the UK will be working closely with its EU partners, and all other countries actively seeking completion of a Protocol during 2000. Consistent with the importance we attach to this work, the UK has offered to host the Signing Ceremony of the Protocol in London.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times he or his junior ministers have paid official visits to (a) the Czech Republic, (b) Poland, (c) Hungary, (d) Slovenia, (e) Estonia and (f) Cyprus since May 1997; and what was the purpose of each visit. [67699]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary undertook visits to the Czech Republic, Poland and Hungary in November 1997 and to Slovenia in November 1998.

My predecessor as Minister of State for Europe, my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson), also undertook the following visits:

Slovenia—October 1997

Estonia—November 1997

Poland—April 1998

Czech Republic—April 1998.

The purpose of each visit was to discuss matters of bilateral interest.

No FCO Ministerial visits have been made to Cyprus since 1 May 1997.

European Young Consumer Competition

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the running of the fifth European Young Consumer Competition, on the Single Currency, in the United Kingdom. [67463]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

I fully support the competition's objective of encouraging young people to become more enlightened consumers and communicators so that they can take full advantage of the benefits of the Single Market. That said, involvement in the competition is a matter for individual schools and teachers to consider.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate on the basis of current policy how many (a) men and (b) women, aged (i) 65 to 69, (ii) 70 to 79 and (iii) 80 years or above in 2050, will receive income support by that date. [65425]

Angela Eagle: The information requested is not available. Such information as is available is as follows.

Projections forward to the year 2050 are subject to a high degree of uncertainty, given the number of assumptions that need to be made in making these estimates. Estimates of the number of pensioners receiving Income Support in 2050 have been made by extrapolating results from the PENSIM model. These estimates can only give a broad indication of the likely order of magnitude of figures so far into the future, and are heavily rounded. Estimates of sub-groups of this caseload are not available.

On the basis of existing policies, estimates suggest that 1 in 3 (3.5 million) pensioners in 2050 could rely on Income Support. Even if no behavioural changes are assumed, our proposals in our new insurance contract for pensions will mean that these estimates are reduced to approximately 1 in 4 (2.5 million) pensioners receiving income from the Minimum Income Guarantee in 2050, and a lower proportion in years after 2050.

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much it would cost to raise the upper threshold of income support for those in residential or nursing care to £40,000 with a lower limit of (a) £10,000, (b) £20,000, (c) £30,000 and (d) no lower limit; [67242]

(2) how much it would cost to raise the upper threshold of income support for those in residential or nursing care to £50,000 with a lower limit of (a) £10,000, (b) £20,000, (c) £30,000, (d) £40,000 and (e) no lower limit; [67243]

(3) how much it would cost to raise the upper threshold of income support for those in residential or nursing care to £60,000 with a lower limit of (a) £10,000, (b) £20,000, (c) £30,000, (d) £40,000, (e) £50,000 and (f) no lower limit; [67244]

(4) how much it would cost to raise the upper threshold of income support for those in residential or nursing care to £70,000 with a lower limit of (a) £10,000, (b) £20,000, (c) £30,000, (d) £40,000, (e) £50,000, (f) £60,000 and (g) no lower limit. [67245]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Estimated costs to income support of changes to the capital limits for residential care

£ million

	Upper limit £40k	Upper limit £50k	Upper limit £60k	Upper limit £70k
Lower limit—£10k	25	25	25	25
Lower limit—£20k	50	50	75	75
Lower limit—£30k	50	75	100	100
Lower limit—£40k	—	100	125	125
Lower limit—£50k	—	—	150	175
Lower limit—£60k	—	—	—	200
Lower limit—none	75	125	175	200

Notes:

1. The estimates of the costs to income support of raising the capital limits for residential care should be regarded as orders of magnitude only. They are for Great Britain at 1997–98 prices, rounded to the nearest £25 million. The analysis uses information from the 1996–97 Family Resources Survey on the income and assets of single very elderly people as a proxy for information on the income and assets of residents.
2. The estimates relate to the impact on income support expenditure only—not to any linked changes that might occur to capital limits for local support in residential care.
3. If they were matched in this way, the majority of the costs of raising the capital limits for residential care would fall to local authority social services rather than income support and have significant implications for local authority charging.
4. A minority of the privately funded residents who float on to income support would be eligible for the higher preserved rights rates, by virtue of admission before April 1993.
5. The estimates assume for illustrative purposes that one in eight would receive the higher rates of income support. In practice the proportion would depend on the date of implementation of the raised capital limits.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provisions are to be made to ensure that recipients of the proposed higher level of severe disablement allowance will not be worse off as a result of paying non-dependent deductions as a consequence of losing their entitlement to income support. [66969]

Mr. Bayley: At present people severely disabled from birth or at an early age who are unable to work cannot earn the right to Incapacity Benefit. Under the proposals for reform of Severe Disablement Allowance, set out in the Consultation Paper "Support for Disabled People", people who become disabled early in life and claim benefit before the age of 20 will be entitled to Incapacity Benefit without having to satisfy the contribution conditions.

Where a person who is claiming Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit, Income Support Mortgage Interest or Jobseeker's Allowance Mortgage Interest has a non-dependent adult living in their household, a deduction is normally made from their relevant benefit in respect of that non-dependant to reflect a reasonable contribution towards household costs. These deductions are made at standard rates according to the non-dependant's age and circumstances. No special provisions apply to non-dependants who are in receipt of Incapacity Benefit. It is, of course, for the individuals concerned to decide how much, if anything, a non-dependant actually contributes.

People who become entitled to Incapacity Benefit under the new proposals will not be worse off as a result of paying an amount equivalent to non-dependent deductions as a consequence of losing their entitlement to Income Support.

As an example:

A single man aged 19 with severe learning difficulties lives with his parents who are claiming Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. As he currently receives Severe Disablement Allowance and Income Support of £61.30 a week no non-dependent deduction is made from his parents' Housing Benefit. Under our new proposals, he will receive Incapacity Benefit of £78.30 a week (at current rates) after a year on benefit which is £17.00 a week more than he currently gets. His parents will have a non-dependent deduction of £7.00 a week made from their Housing Benefit and a further deduction of £2.00 a week from their Council Tax Benefit. In this particular example, even if the young person contributes £9.00 a week towards his parents' household expenses he will still be better off by £8.00 a week.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how much of the annual cost of implementing the proposed changes to severe disablement allowance will be offset as a result of taking claimants out of income support in respect of (a) non-dependent deductions for claimants living with recipients of housing benefit, council tax benefit or housing costs allowance (b) claimants no longer receiving free prescriptions, dental or optical services and (c) claimants no longer being able to access Social Fund community care grants. [66997]

Mr. Bayley: The information on which to base an estimate is not available.

Industrial Injury Benefit

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend industrial injury benefit to the self-employed; and if he will make a statement. [67122]

Mr. Bayley: There are no current plans to extend Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit to the self-employed. I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Lewis) on 20 January 1999, Official Report, column 474.

Pensioners

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate is provided by his Department's Family Resources Survey of the number of non-taxpaying pensioners who have some dividend income and who have capital in excess of £8,000. [67001]

Mr. Timms: The number of non-taxpaying pensioner benefit units who have some dividend income and capital in excess of £8,000 for 1998–99 is 240,000.

Notes:

1. The estimate is rounded to the nearest 10,000 pensioner benefit units, although it is not necessarily accurate to that degree.

2. The estimate should be treated with caution since taxpaying status is not directly measured by the Family Resources Survey, but has been modelled to the 1998–99 tax system based on reported income, and uprated to 1998–99 levels.

3. Pensioner benefit units are defined as single people over State pension age (men aged 65 and over, women aged 60 and over) and couples (married or cohabiting) where at least one partner is above State pension age.

4. Non-taxpaying pensioner benefit units are defined as those where no individual in the benefit unit is liable to tax.

5. Dividend income is defined as dividends or interest received from stocks, shares, bonds, debentures, other securities, unit trusts, investment trusts, Personal Equity Plans (PEPs) and government gilt-edged stock.

Benefits

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion and what amount of the total welfare benefit bill for the past five years has been paid as (a) contributory and (b) non-contributory benefit. [67732]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the tables.

Social Security benefits expenditure

£ billion

Year	Contributory benefits	Non-contributory benefits	Total benefits expenditure
1993–94	39.5	42.9	82.4
1994–95	39.8	45.0	84.8
1995–96	40.7	48.1	88.8
1996–97	42.2	50.1	92.3
1997–98	43.2	50.5	93.7

Contributory and non-contributory benefits as a percentage of Social Security

Percentage

1993–94	48.0	52.0
1994–95	46.9	53.1
1995–96	45.9	54.1
1996–97	45.7	54.3
1997–98	46.1	53.9

Notes:

1. The figures for 1997–98 are consistent with those published in the Pre-Budget Report of November 1998. Figures for the earlier years are derived from the Departmental Report 1998 (Cm 3913).

2. Social Security Benefits expenditure includes additional local authority expenditure on Housing, Community Charge and Council Tax Benefits.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the total value of moneys collected from absent parents contributions to maintenance from prescribed social security benefits which have been retained by the Child Support Agency to cover the cost of assessment and collection fees in each year since the Child Support Agency was established; [66479]

(2) what is the average time taken to recognise failure by a Child Support Agency enforcement officer to obtain payment of assessment from an absent parent and to issue court proceedings to recover outstanding arrears and establish regular payments. [66480]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 26 January 1999:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the collection of fees and enforcement in relation to child support.

As there are elements of child support administration which cross the boundaries between the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency and the Great British Child Support Agency I have consulted with Mr. Gerry Keenan, the Chief Executive for the Child Support Agency (NI) and provided you with information on both Agencies. I am not able to provide all of the information in the precise format that you have requested, but have provided as much as is available.

The Child Support Agency (GB) is divided into 6 front line Business Units; an application to maintenance is dealt with by the Business Unit dealing with the geographical area in which the parent with care lives. Where a parent with care resides in Northern Ireland the case is dealt with by the Child Support Agency (NI). Where the parent with care lives in Northern Ireland and the non-resident parent lives in Great Britain the case may be referred to one of the mainland Business Units to carry out a face to face interview or to take enforcement action.

The Agencies charged fees until April 1995 when following a legislative change the charging of fees was suspended. Clients are liable to pay fees charged between April 1993 and April 1995 and they continue to be collected.

Fees were charged for both the assessment and collection services, chargeable to both the non-resident parent and the parent with care. Various categories of non-resident parents and parents with care were exempt from the payment of fees.

Contributions to maintenance are only collected from Income Support and Job Seekers Allowance (Income Based—introduced in October 1996); non-resident parents in receipt of Income Support were exempt from paying fees therefore neither the Child Support Agency (GB) or the Child Support Agency (NI) retain contributions to maintenance to cover the cost of fees.

Where arrears of maintenance arise, the Agencies take a variety of actions to secure payments. If the non-resident parent cannot pay the full amount straightaway, we try to reach an agreement with them to pay the arrears in instalments, which is added to their weekly maintenance assessment amount.

If a non-resident parent does not pay the agreed amount at the right time an Arrears Notice is sent; we will also try to contact the non-resident parent by telephone. If we reach an agreement, we would not ask the non-resident parent to pay more than 33% of their net income for child maintenance and arrears as long as they keep to the agreement. If a non-resident parent does not make or keep an agreement we can take up to 40% of their net income; if the non-resident parent is employed we will consider imposing a Deduction from Earnings Order. When a Deduction from Earnings Order is not suitable, for example where the non-resident parent is self employed and all voluntary methods have failed we then consider legal action through the courts to secure payments of child maintenance. Very often the threat of such action is enough to ensure compliance.

Throughout the debt management and enforcement process, non-resident parents are given every opportunity to make a voluntary arrangement to pay off their child maintenance debt. The majority do agree to make an arrangement and only in a very small minority of cases is legal action actually taken.

The time taken between a breakdown in maintenance payments and taking legal proceedings is not measured. During 1997/98, the number of cases that were referred to Child Support Agency (GB) enforcement teams for litigation action was 17,833; it was only necessary to apply for 2,498 liability orders of which 1,353 were granted. In the first 9 months of this year the corresponding figures are 8,265, 2,911 and 1,424 respectively.

The Child Support Agency (GB) measures its performance in securing maintenance against the target set by the Secretary of State; the target during 1997/98 was for £500 million of child maintenance to be collected or arranged for direct payment from the non-resident parent to the parent with care. The total achieved was £541 million—the portion that was collected by the Agency was £344 million.

The Child Support Agency (NI) measures its performance in securing maintenance against the target set by the Minister for Northern Ireland; the target during 1997/98 was for £11.2 million of child maintenance to be collected or arranged for direct payment from the non-resident parent to the parent with care. The total achieved was £12.3 million—the portion that was collected by the Agency was £7.6 million.

I hope this is helpful.

Back to Work Bonus

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if there is a target time limit for the payment of the Back to Work Bonus. [66824]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Back To Work Bonus is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Miss Geraldine Smith, dated 26 January 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if there is a target time limit for the payment of the Back To Work Bonus (BTWB).

The Back To Work Bonus scheme was implemented by the Benefits Agency with the introduction of Jobseeker's Allowance. There is an internal target relating to the timing of the payment of the BTWB. We aim to pay 65 per cent. of claims in 2 days and 95 per cent. in 10 days. However the emphasis is on the accuracy of payments.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

TREASURY

Local Deprivation Indicators

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which measures of local deprivation his Department and its agencies use in considering allocation of funds to local projects. [66722]

Mr. Milburn: The Departments for which the Chancellor is responsible are not in general involved in allocating funds to local projects.

Exceptions to this are the funds allocated through the Invest to Save Budget and the Capital Modernisation Fund, announced in the Comprehensive Spending Review. These funds are allocated by the Treasury on a competitive basis to projects proposed by departments, taking account of a range of published criteria. In addition, the Treasury Private Finance Initiative (PFI) Taskforce has a leading role in the Project Review Group that allocates support for local authority PFI projects.

In each case, local deprivation is taken into account for appropriate types of project, but no specific measure of local deprivation is used.

Building Societies

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his Department's responsibilities in relation to building societies; and which Ministers have dealt with those responsibilities during the period since 1 May 1997. [67330]

Ms Hewitt: The Treasury is responsible for policy relating to the Building Societies Acts. I and my predecessor as Economic Secretary, my right hon. Friend the Member for Airdrie and Shotts (Mrs. Liddell), have dealt with this area since May 1997. Prudential supervision of societies is a matter for the Building Societies Commission.

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the size of the Treasury grant paid to the National Insurance Fund in each of the last five years. [67729]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

The information is in the table.

Treasury grant payments into the National Insurance Fund 1993–94 to 1997–98

£ million

Year	Amount
1993–94	7,589
1994–95	6,280
1995–96	3,575
1996–97	1,900
1997–98	940

Estonia

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the Estonian contribution for participation in the (a) Kaleidoscope, (b) Ariane and (c) Raphael Programmes; what was the cost of negotiating the level of the contribution; and if he will make a statement on the nature of United Kingdom participation in these negotiations. [66348]

Janet Anderson: I have been asked to reply.

I welcome the fact that Estonia will be participating in the EU's cultural funding programmes for 1999 as part of its preparations for EU membership. Participation in these, and other, programmes is now open to the candidate countries in the context of the pre-accession strategy.

The precise level of Estonia's contribution for participation will be determined by the European Commission in consultation with the relevant programme management committees.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent per student out of the Local Management of Schools allocations for primary and secondary students up to 16 years in each local education authority in the years (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [67298]

Ms Estelle Morris: I have placed in the Library a table which gives, for each local education authority in England, for 1997–98 and 1998–99, the average of the budget share per pupil separately for primary, and for all pupils counted as being in secondary schools.

Education Action Zones

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those education action zones which have no school currently or previously in special measures. [67293]

Ms Estelle Morris: As of 20 January 1999, seven Education Action Zones have no school currently or previously in special measures. These are:

Birmingham (Aston Nechells)
Hereford
Middlesbrough
New Addington
Newcastle
North Somerset
Leigh (Wigan).

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each education action zone the resources provided from other Government initiatives. [67290]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not yet available. It will be provided in the audited financial statements which each zone is required to provide by the end of the year.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total amount spent by his Department on central administration of education action zones; and what is this amount as a proportion of the total departmental expenditure on education action zones. [67292]

Ms Estelle Morris: The running cost of the central administration team is budgeted at £500,000 for the financial year 1998–99. This represents 4 per cent. of the total Departmental programme budget over the same period for EAZs.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of the first round of 25 education action zones have applied to vary any of the details of their original bids; and if he will set out the details of such variations. [67469]

Ms Estelle Morris: None so far. The detailed action plans of each EAZ must be submitted to the Secretary of State by 31 March 1999.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what each education action zone is proposing to spend as a proportion of its total budget on (a) administration, (b) project co-ordination and management not included in (a) and (c) salaries not included in (a) or (b). [67291]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not currently available. It will be included in the audited financial statement which each zone must produce by the end of the year.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each education action zone the amount of private sector contribution that has been given in (a) cash and (b) kind in each case, broken down (b) by type of help provided. [67294]

Ms Estelle Morris: Each of the first 25 Education Action Zones must raise £250,000 from the private sector in the first year, whether in cash or kind. They are well on the way to achieving this. I will publish a complete set of information as soon as it is available.

Literacy Hour

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) carried out on the effect of the literacy hour on reading standards amongst primary school pupils. [66978]

Ms Estelle Morris: Recently published evaluations of the pilot National Literacy Project, by OFSTED and the NFER, show that the Literacy Hour is effective in raising standards. Children's reading test scores improved by about 8 to 12 months above what would normally be expected, in less than two years.

Schools began implementing the National Literacy Strategy in September 1998. The DfEE's formal evaluation of the strategy consists of visits by OFSTED to a representative national sample of schools, literacy tests developed by QCA for pupils attending these schools, and an overview evaluation by an international team led by Michael Fullan of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, University of Toronto.

Millennium Volunteers Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will make a statement on the millennium volunteers programme; [67236]

(2) what plans he has to extend the millennium volunteers scheme to Leicester; [67237]

(3) if he will list the (a) areas and (b) projects which have been involved in the millennium volunteers programme to date. [67238]

Ms Hodge: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I launched Millennium Volunteers on 21 January. We announced that the programme will have a budget of £47.75 million; £12.75 from the windfall levy and an additional £35 million for the period 1999–2000 to 2001–02 which has been secured through the Comprehensive Spending Review. We have also published guidance inviting organisations to bid for funds to run Millennium Volunteers in England. It will be open to organisations in Leicester to make applications for funding if they wish to. There are thirteen Millennium Volunteers demonstration projects; eleven have already contracted with us and we are in discussion with two more. The areas and organisations managing the projects are:

Area	Organisation	Contracted/in discussion
Inner city areas of Bradford and Shipley	Bradford Council for Voluntary Service	In discussion
Cambridge	Youth Action Cambridge	Contracted
Cambridgeshire	Cambridgeshire Association of Youth Clubs	Contracted
Exeter	British Trust for Conservation Volunteers	Contracted
Herefordshire	Hereford and Worcester Rural Community Council	Contracted
Liverpool	John Moores University	Contracted
London Borough of Southwark	Community Service Volunteers	Contracted
London Borough of Tower Hamlets	Voluntary Action Tower Hamlets	Contracted
Greater Manchester	Prince's Trust Volunteers	Contracted
Newcastle	The National Trust	Contracted
Nottingham	City of Nottingham	Contracted
Sunderland	Community Service Volunteers	Contracted
Hastings and Rother	Sussex Police	In discussion

University Entrants

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the proportions of pupils from (a) comprehensive and (b) private schools who went on to university education in each of the last four years. [67141]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The information is not available in the form requested. The table gives the prior educational establishment of students who accepted full-time and sandwich undergraduate places through the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS).

New Deal (Disabled People)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have found work as a result of the New Deal for the Disabled. [67259]

Ms Hodge: Early results indicate that so far over 100 people with disabilities have found work as a result of the New Deal for Disabled People.

CABINET OFFICE

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67851]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Cabinet Office is about to issue revised guidance to departments on the arrangements for publishing White and Green Papers. This will highlight that, when considering the publishing arrangements for such documents, the information is accessible to people who might otherwise not be able to receive it in printed form. There are a number of options for making such documents available to those who are visually impaired, including braille, large print, audio formats and on floppy disk in plain text format. We will ensure that for all future White and Green Papers produced within the Cabinet Office that, when requested, we will be able to provide floppy disk versions to the visually impaired.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will assess the impact of the statement of Archbishop O'Brien of the Archdiocese for US Military Services on moral law on the bombing of Iraq, a copy of which has been sent to him. [67624]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 January 1999]: I have read Archbishop O'Brien's statement with interest. I am satisfied that the military action against Iraq was necessary on this occasion, had a sound legal basis and achieved its objectives. I believe the region and the international community is safer as a result.

Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, columns 484–85, on the review of the work of the JCCC, when he expects the review to be completed. [67685]

The Prime Minister: No date has been set for completion of the review.

European Commission (Censure Vote)

Mr. Howard: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, columns 907–08, on what basis he stated that half the Tory Group in Europe voted with his party in the censure vote on the European Commission in the European Parliament. [67902]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 January 1999]: On the basis that over half of the European People's Party (the group with which the Conservatives associate themselves) in the European Parliament voted with the Socialist Group against the motion of censure on 14 January.

Fraud Prosecutions

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's policy with regard to the prosecution of those who commit business and personal fraud. [67319]

The Prime Minister: The Government have, for the first time, established overarching aims for the criminal justice system which include reducing crime and the fear of crime, and their social and economic costs. Individual Departments set their own aims and objectives within that framework, and that of the Serious Fraud Office is to contribute to the reduction of fraud and the cost of fraud and the maintenance of confidence in the United Kingdom's business and financial institutions. It seeks to achieve this through the investigation and prosecution of suitable cases as quickly as individual circumstances allow.

Fraud takes many forms and other specialist agencies (e.g. Customs and Excise, Inland Revenue and the Benefits Agency) as well as the police devote a significant portion of their resources to combating it through investigation and prosecution.

Ministerial Disputes

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the current procedures for resolving disputes between Ministers in his Government. [67321]

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet and its Committees provide a mechanism for reaching agreement between Ministers on issues which cannot otherwise be resolved.

Engagements

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 27 January. [66296]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 27 January. [67398]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will have further such meetings later today.

Cyprus

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Prime Minister how many times he has paid official visits to Cyprus since May 1997; and what was the purpose of each visit. [67702]

The Prime Minister: I have not visited Cyprus since 1 May 1997.

Chequers

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his policy on whom he invites to Chequers for official engagements. [67322]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, column 858.

Ministerial Conduct

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement on his policy towards Ministers who are found to have misled the public; [67328]

(2) if he will make a statement on his policy towards Ministers who are found to have misled him. [67329]

The Prime Minister: My policy on the conduct of Ministers is set out clearly in the Ministerial Code.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Organic Produce

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the percentage of food consumed in the United Kingdom which is organically grown; and what percentage of this food is grown (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in the rest of the European Union and (c) in the rest of the world; and if he will make a statement. [67255]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 January 1999]: Sales of organic food accounted for 2 per cent. of UK food sales in 1997, the latest year for which data are available. It is estimated that imported organic produce accounted for around 70 per cent. of sales, of which the majority originated in the European Union.

My right hon. Friend the Minister recently re-affirmed this Government's support for the organic sector in a speech at the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester. Funding for research and development is set to increase from £1.5 to £2.1 million in 1999–2000. More resources will be given to the Organic Conversion Information Service and payments to farmers wishing to convert to organic production methods will be almost doubled.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to respond to the second report of the House of Lords European Communities Committee on EC Regulations of Genetic Modification in Agriculture [HL11]; and if he will make a statement on measures to improve information on GM food for consumers. [67397]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The Government will respond to the second report of the House of Lords European Communities Committee on EC Regulations of Genetic Modification in Agriculture within the two months prescribed limit.

The Government remain committed to providing clear information so that consumers can make an informed choice about genetically modified (GM) foods. EC legislation agreed last year requiring all food containing ingredients derived from GM soya or maize to be clearly labelled sets an important precedent for the labelling of all GM foods.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the maximum detectable percentage of GM material allowed in finished food produced which permits that food to be labelled as free from GMOs. [67590]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1999]: There is no legal requirement for foods containing GM material below a certain limit to be labelled as free from GMOs. However, the EC Regulation on labelling of GM soya and maize (1139/98) does recognise the need to consider a de-minimis threshold to avoid the situation where low levels of accidental mixing would require a consignment otherwise free of GM material to be labelled as genetically modified. The Government will continue to press the European Commission to reach a conclusion on this issue.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate he has made of the percentage of crops under cultivation which are genetically modified; [67589]

(2) what is the current acreage of GM crops under cultivation. [67596]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1999]: There are currently no GM crops being grown commercially in the UK.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much genetically modified (a) maize, (b) soya and (c) canola was imported for (i) seed, (ii) animal feed and (iii) human consumption in the last year for which figures are available. [67208]

Mr. Rooker: Import figures for maize, soya and canola can be found in H.M. Customs and Excise Business Monitors in the Library of the House. They do not, however, contain any separate breakdown for genetically modified crops.

Individual import consignments of maize, soya and canola may be used for a variety of purposes, including directly as animal feed, for human consumption or for industrial use. For example, when crushing oilseeds for human consumption, by-products can be used for animal feed.

Climate Change

Mr. Soames: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the potential effects of climate change on British agriculture. [67280]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 January 1999]: My Ministry has funded a substantial programme of research on Climate Change Impacts on Agriculture, which between 1990 and 1997 cost a total of £4.4 million. This work has provided the basis for a booklet aimed at the agricultural industry, which will be published later this year. The booklet will give an indication of how climatic and market conditions may change, and the areas in which farmers may need to consider adapting their activities, as well as providing practical pointers on how farmers might chose to adapt.

The Government have recently established the UK Climate Impacts Programme to take a broader, integrated approach to research on the effects of climate change. MAFF is the major funder of a project being developed under the programme to look simultaneously at the effects of climate change on water resources, agriculture, coastal resources and wildlife in two regions, East Anglia and the north-west. MAFF is also funding a study into the timescale of farm level response and adaptation to climate change in England and Wales.

Trade Balances

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the agricultural and horticultural trade balances (a) in the last year for which figures are available and (b) in the previous five years. [67772]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The table shows the UK balance of trade for agricultural goods (food, feed and drink) and horticultural products (fruit and vegetables) for each year from 1994 to 1998. The values shown are at 1998 prices (deflated by the Retail Prices Index).

£ million

	Food, feed and drink	Fruit and vegetables
1994	−6,543	3,444
1995	−6,865	−3,817
1996	−8,221	−4,111
1997	−7,494	−3,747
1998 (forecast)	−7,805	−3,758

Egg Production (Salmonella)

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of egg production was contaminated with salmonella in the last year for which figures are available. [67608]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 January 1999]: A Department of Health funded survey undertaken in 1995–96 indicated that, at retail level, about 1 in 600 UK-produced eggs (0.17 per cent.) were contaminated with salmonella.

Pesticides

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures his Department has for monitoring the use of pesticides in food produce entering the UK. [67554]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The Government run a surveillance programme for the presence of pesticide residues in food. This is overseen by the Working Party on Pesticide Residues. Around 2,000 to 3,000 samples of both UK produced and imported produce are analysed for a wide range of pesticides. The results of this analysis are published in full in an annual report.

Pesticides Tax

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the report on the impact of a pesticides tax from which the Minister of State quoted during his oral statement on horticulture on 20 January 1999, Official Report, columns 863–65. [67454]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The report on the potential impact of a pesticides tax to which I referred was undertaken by ADAS for the British Agrochemicals Association and the National Farmers' Union. Publication is therefore a matter for these organisations.

Meat Inspectors

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the proposed strike by meat inspectors and its effects on butchers and catering outlets in the UK. [67555]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The decision by UNISON to consider strike action by its Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) members at the present time is very disappointing. MHS staff have a vital role to play in ensuring the highest hygiene and animal welfare standards are applied within plants. The MHS pay offer is fair and equitable.

After negotiations, the MHS formally offered UNISON a pay offer with a total value of 4 per cent. in August 1998. Negotiations continued and UNISON requested an offer of 4.55 per cent. citing the total package settlement to core-MAFF staff of 4.7 per cent.

In fact the actual cost of the core-MAFF pay aware to staff was 4.2 per cent, with 0.5 per cent. included for one-off structural changes. The range of awards was from 0 per cent. to 6.2 per cent. depending on performance. Unlike the rest of MAFF, performance related pay (PRP) structures do not apply in the MHS. The MHS's total value offer is on par with the current average civil service settlement of 4 per cent. It would not be possible to justify a higher offer for MHS staff, particularly with no PRP element.

UNISON commenced a formal ballot of its members on industrial action on 6 January. The ballot involved 579 responses, with 352 votes for industrial action and 225 against, with 2 returns invalid. UNISON are now required to give the MHS 7 days' written notice of any industrial action.

Contingency Plans have been drawn up to minimise the effect of any industrial action and MHS managers are in contact with plant operators to make all necessary arrangements. The action taken by the MHS to minimise disruption should help to ensure an adequate supply of meat for butchers and catering outlets. Plant operators are being reminded of their obligations under the Food Safety Act 1990 and Meat Hygiene/Specified Risk Material and Animal Welfare Regulations.

Future of Agriculture (Conference)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the proceedings of his recent conference on the future of agriculture. [67279]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The texts of speaking notes and speeches from the recent conferences on proposals to reform the Common Agricultural Policy have been made available on the Internet at the following address: http://www.maff.gov.uk/farm/agendtwo/agendtwo.htm.

Veterinary Standards

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place a copy of the Bendixon/Dexter report on standards of veterinary services in the EU in the Library; and if he will make a statement on veterinary standards in the qualifying countries as proposed in the Kennedy report on quarantine and rabies. [67408]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The Bendixon/Dexter report was produced for the European Commission between 1990 and 1992. A full report on the veterinary service in each Member State was produced, but sent only to the Member State concerned. A summary report was produced which presented a broad view of the findings and recommendations regarding the structure, resources and activities of veterinary services throughout the Community. Only a Synthesis Report was circulated to the Member States, and I will place photo-copies of this in the Libraries of the House, but it is, by now, out of date.

Veterinary standards in EU and EEA countries have been assessed by the European Commission and found to be of an appropriate standard for the purposes of intra-Community trade in animals and animal products.

My officials are examining which islands meet the definition of rabies freedom set by the Office International des Epizooties.

Genetically Modified Material

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the traceability of GM material used in food production. [67481]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 January 1999]: Under World Trade Organisation rules it is not possible to require GM material used in food production to be segregated as a condition of import. However, the Government have encouraged the provision of consumer choice by publishing a list of 59 suppliers offering traceable non-GM material. All foods which contain GM ingredients must be clearly labelled under EC Regulations.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the relationship between agricultural incomes and incomes in the general economy. [67771]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1999]: There is very little relationship in the short term between agricultural incomes and incomes in the rest of the UK economy. Although agriculture is subject to some of the influences which impact on the economy as a whole (eg productivity changes, world and domestic demand, and exchange rates), it is also subject to other influences which have a greater impact on the sector (eg the Common Agricultural Policy, weather and world commodity prices). As a single sector, agricultural income is more volatile than that of the UK economy as a whole. Agriculture currently accounts for about 1 per cent. of national GDP and about 2 per cent. of UK employment.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present levels of income in (a) farming, (b) pig production and (c) other livestock production. [67770]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1999]: Figures for 1998–99 will be published on 28 January. However, it is clear that net farm incomes for all farm types except general cropping are expected to fall substantially in 1998–99.

Local Deprivation Indicator

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which measures of local deprivation his Department and its agencies use in considering allocation of funds to local projects. [66715]

Mr. Morley: MAFF funds local projects through the English Objective 1 and 5b Structural Funds Programmes and the English LEADER II Community Initiative Programme. The socio-economic parameters taken into account in designating Objective 1 and 5b areas included low levels of agricultural income, low population density and location in less favoured areas. Measures of local deprivation are not used by this Department or its Agencies when considering the allocation of funds to specific local projects within the Objective 1 and 5b areas.

Young Farmers (Assistance)

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance is provided to young farmers to obtain their own farm holding. [66871]

Mr. Rooker: The Government provide no specific assistance to help young farmers to obtain their own farm. However, in certain cases, loans can be guaranteed under the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme. In addition, the changes introduced by the Agricultural Tenancies Act 1995 will make it easier for young farmers to gain tenancies because landowners will be encouraged to enter the rented sector.

Objective 5b Status

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the six areas designated to receive assistance under the English Objective 5b Structural Fund Programme. [66901]

Mr. Morley: In England the six areas designated by the European Commission to receive assistance under the Objective 5b Structural Funds Programme are:

The South West—Cornwall, the Isles of Scilly and parts of Devon and Somerset;

The Marches—most of Shropshire and parts of Hereford and Worcester;

The Northern Uplands—parts of Lancashire, North Yorks, Durham, Cumbria and Northumberland;

Lincolnshire—excluding the City of Lincoln and other mainly urban areas;

East Anglia—the Fens, rural Norfolk and the Waveney Valley; and Midlands Uplands—the Peak District of Staffordshire and Derbyshire.

Tobacco (EU Subsidies)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much the total cost of the subsidy for tobacco producers is in the European Union in the current financial year. [66902]

Mr. Rooker: The amount provided for tobacco expenditure in the 1999 FEOGA budget year is 980 million euro (£687 million[1]).

Note:

[1] Using an exchange rate of £1 = 1.4258 euro.

Distributed Food (Intervention Stocks)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the categories of persons eligible for distributed food, by country of distribution, sourced from intervention stocks designated for most deprived persons in the community according to 98/657/EC. [66346]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested by the right hon. Member is not available.

Quarantine

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the organisations that have responded to the Kennedy report on the reform of quarantine and (b) the organisations and individuals he will be consulting before he announces his decisions on the new regime. [67201]

Mr. Rooker: The organisations that responded are set out in the list. I have no plans to launch a further consultation at this stage, but I will involve those affected as appropriate.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which countries will qualify for privileged entry arrangements under the Kennedy report on the reform of quarantine; and how many pet animals were imported from these countries in (a) 1998, (b) 1997, (c) 1996. [67202]

Mr. Rooker: The Kennedy Group recommended that cats, dogs and non-carnivores from EU and EEA Member States and rabies-free islands should qualify for exemption from quarantine, subject to their meeting the conditions for exemption. My officials are examining which islands meet the definition of rabies freedom set by the Office International des Epizooties.

Import figures from EU and EEA Member States were:

Year	No. of domestic animals imported into quarantine [1]
1996	3,274
1997	2,968
1998	2,342

Bovine TB

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is currently funding into formulating a new TB vaccine for cattle. [67288]

Mr. Rooker: The Krebs report concluded that the development of a vaccine for cattle was the best long-term prospect for the control of bovine TB, but saw a badger vaccine as an alternative option if cattle vaccine requirements cannot be met. Following the publication of the report, we have reviewed our research requirements for bovine TB, and in April published a document inviting proposals. These included work to develop a cattle vaccine and to take forward work on a badger vaccine, which started in 1994. Contracts worth over £1.4 million per annum are being finalised on five projects relating to vaccine development. Nearly all of this expenditure is directed at projects relating to the development and testing of cattle vaccines.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce routine testing for TB in all cattle. [67271]

Mr. Rooker: Routine testing of the National Herd is undertaken in accordance with Directive 64/432, as amended, and normally exempts certain groups of cattle, mainly young stock or fattening herds in which no breeding takes place. When it is considered necessary, on animal or public health grounds, all cattle are included in routine tests.

Food Standards

Ms Keeble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish (a) the draft Food Standards Bill and (b) his proposals for funding the Food Standards Agency. [68082]

Mr. Nick Brown: I have today published the draft Food Standards Bill for public consultation, along with a consultation paper setting out our proposals for meeting by new costs of the Food Standards Agency through a levy on certain food premises. I have placed copies of both documents in the library of the House.

The draft Bill moves us closer to fulfilling another important manifesto commitment—the setting up of an independent Food Standards Agency with the aim of protecting public health in relation to food. The Agency will play a major role in strengthening consumer confidence.

It provides for a responsible, open and authoritative body charged with protecting public health in relation to food and with powers to act throughout the food chain. The Agency will work with all interested parties to develop soundly based, balanced policies that command the public's confidence. It will discharge a range of important functions in support of its goal, advising Ministers and the new devolved authorities in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and helping all its stakeholders to meet the challenge of safe food.

The Bill provides for the Food Standards Agency to be a UK body. The Government will consult with the new devolved authorities to establish whether they are content to proceed with legislation on a UK basis in the way proposed in the draft Bill.

We want our proposals to be subject to full scrutiny, so that we can get it right from the start. The consultation that begins today seeks comments from all interested parties over the next eight weeks. The draft Bill will also be scrutinised by a Select Committee of Members of this House constituted for this purpose. We will refine our proposals in the light of the comments we have invited. If legislative time permits, we hope to be in a position to introduce the Bill during this session of Parliament.

We have already made considerable progress in strengthening the present arrangements in preparation for the Agency. The challenge now is to ensure that the changes we propose meet the robust standard that consumers and businesses alike can expect.

Organic Farming

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to protect organic farming from possible effects of biotechnology. [66681]

Mr. Rooker: Our approach is to ensure that all justified concerns about genetically modified (GM) crops are properly addressed. This applies particularly to the concerns raised by the organic farming sector. We have made clear to the industry group SCIMAC, which is drawing up guidelines on the use of GM crops that they need to ensure that these contain adequate safeguards to protect organic farming.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cable Television

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to reply to Wirral Metropolitan Council's request to review the licence given to Cable and Wireless to provide cable television services in the Wirral. [66653]

Mr. Wills: Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions nor my Department has received a request from Wirral Metropolitan Council to review the licence granted on 16 January 1991 to Britannia Cablesystems (Wirral) Limited, (a subsidiary of Cable and Wireless Communications plc).

Telecommunications (Call Charging)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to ensure that telecommunications companies advertise the rate which they are charging on telephone numbers found in advertisements and say whether callers are being charged whilst held in a queue; and if he will make a statement. [66955]

Mr. Wills: The regulation of telecoms operators is a matter for Oftel. Oftel requires all operators to publish their tariffs. In addition, the Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services (ICSTIS) has a Code of Practice under which the costs of calls to Premium Rate Services must be given in advertisements.

Information given to callers by queuing systems is a matter for businesses running those systems, not the telecoms operators, and Oftel has no powers to regulate how such end users operate their systems. However, Oftel has encouraged the drawing up of a Code of Practice for such businesses which answer calls from the public. This Code recommends that messages on call queuing systems should tell callers when their call has been answered. The callers should then realise that the call is being charged.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to restrict the prices charged by telecommunications companies for their premium rate calls. [66956]

Mr. Wills: The Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services (ICSTIS) has responsibility for Premium Rate Services (PRS) in its capacity as the regulator for the Premium Rate Industry. It publishes and enforces a Code of Practice which has provisions limiting the time spent by callers on these services. This has the effect of limiting the cost of calls, and some services are required to be terminated automatically after a given period. The Code also has provisions limiting the total amount of money spent on certain services.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the regulation of the telecommunications industry's call charges. [66954]

Mr. Wills: Oftel sets and is responsible for enforcing the current price controls on the telecommunications industry.

Competition in the telecommunications industry continues to develop and, while it does, Oftel directly regulates the prices of BT, the dominant provider of telecoms services in the UK. In relation to residential consumers and small businesses, BT is required to reduce its main prices by 4.5 per cent. below the rate of inflation, and to focus this control on protecting the first 80 per cent. of residential customers by bill size. Thus consumers who are on a lower income are protected more formally than those higher spending customers who are more likely to have benefited significantly from deep price cuts in international calls. This price control will remain in place until July 2001.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what transitional support will be available to rural areas upon losing Objective 5b status. [67120]

Mr. Wills: The Commission have proposed transitional periods of four years for areas losing Objective 2 and 5b funding. Current Objective 5b covers rural areas. The Government are pressing for equal transitional periods of six years for ex-Objective 2 and 5b areas as for Objective 1. The transitional arrangements for regions losing Objective 5b status will not be known until the new Structural Funds regulations are agreed.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list his Department's responsibilities and policies in relation to genetically-modified crops and the departments with which he liaises on this issue. [67665]

Mr. Battle: DTI has no direct responsibility for policy relating to genetically modified crops.

The Government's over-riding priority is protection of human health and the environment. They also seek to promote conditions which ensure that the UK derives the maximum quality of life and economic benefits from biotechnology. The DTI has responsibility for policy on science and technology. DTI also has responsibility for those industry sectors sponsored by the Department whose competitiveness may be enhanced through biotechnology. In addition, DTI has the lead role in Government on trade issues.

Policy on biotechnology, including genetically modified crops, is co-ordinated by the Ministerial Group on Biotechnology, as announced by the Prime Minister on 21 October 1998, Official Report, columns 1134–35, which is chaired by the Minister for the Cabinet Office. In addition, officials across Government are in regular contact on biotechnology issues.

Electricity Supply Market

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what measures the Government are taking to ensure that the new entrants to the electricity supply market will promote energy efficiency in the domestic sector; [67963]

(2) what measures the Government are taking to ensure that the liberalised energy market delivers higher energy efficiency in the domestic sector. [67964]

Mr. Battle: In the response to consultation on the Green Paper "A Fair Deal for Consumers, Modernising the Framework for Utility Regulation", the Government made it clear that Ministers would issue Statutory Guidance on the social and environmental objectives relevant to regulation for each utility sector. Regulators will be placed under a duty to have regard to such guidance in the exercise of their statutory functions. In addition, the Government are exploring, with the energy industry and others, the possibility of using a new standards of performance scheme to promote energy efficiency, and the options for how standards could work in the context of the liberalised energy markets.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with ministers of the German Government concerning the termination of contracts with BNFL for the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel; and if he will make a statement. [67706]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 27 January 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 547.

Fleetwood Power Ltd.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on Fleetwood Power Ltd's application to build a new gas-fired power station. [68572]

Mr. Byers: I have decided, after careful consideration of all the relevant factors, that Fleetwood Power's application for a 1,000 MW combined cycle gas turbine power station at Fleetwood should not be granted. The application will be put on hold unless an interested party satisfies me that it should be determined at this stage.

I have taken this decision in accordance with the policy set out in the White Paper entitled "Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government response to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee" (Cm 4071).

The White Paper stated the Government's commitment to electricity market reforms, including reform of the electricity trading arrangements and that until such reforms were substantially completed there would be a stricter power station consents policy with a presumption against the building of new gas-fired generating capacity.

Decisions on other applications under consideration will be announced in due course.

Copies of the Press Notice and the decision letter are being placed in the Library of the House.

Electricity Security (Report)

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made on implementing the recommendations on electricity system security and stability made by the consultants Merz and McLellan in the White Paper, "Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government Response to the Fourth and Fifth reports of the Trade and Industry Committee", published in October 1998. [68539]

Mr. Battle: In the White Paper, the Government proposed a two-tier approach: an open consultancy group open to all interested parties, and a smaller steering group which would carry out most of the detailed work allocation and progress chasing. The steering group met on 21 December 1998, to discuss its terms of reference, which are set out, and to consider the way forward. The meeting was chaired by my Department: the members of the Steering Group are also listed.

Terms of reference of Steering Group on Electricity Security and Stability Issues:

"To monitor the carrying out of the Merz and McLellan recommendations in relation to the security and stability of the England and Wales Electricity Grid as published in the White Paper "Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation".

To report from time to time to an open consultancy group on progress with dealing with these issues.

To report from time to time to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on progress".

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the quantities of (a) low, (b) intermediate and (c) high level radioactive waste which will arise from the reprocessing of Swiss irradiated oxide nuclear fuel at Sellafield; what negotiations have been held to date with Swiss authorities concerning the repatriation of the waste; and if Switzerland has indicated whether it would accept its waste to be returned following the application of substitution. [67708]

Mr. Battle: BNFL has signed contracts with all four Swiss utilities for the reprocessing of a total of 422 tonnes of spent nuclear fuel. Under the terms of those contracts BNFL has had discussions with each company on the return of wastes, including substitution. I understand that, although Switzerland is still pursuing the development of deep waste disposal facilities, it has almost completed an interim storage facility capable of accepting the wastes returned under the terms of the above mentioned contracts, whether as a result of substitution or not.

Dounreay

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the report of the Safeguards Office study of the nuclear materials accountancy aspects of the UKAEA report, Dounreay Shaft Inventory will be made public. [68538]

Mr. Battle: The Government have today published in full the Safeguards Office review of the nuclear materials accountancy aspects of UKAEA's Dounreay Shaft Inventory report.

The main findings of the review are as follows. No evidence was found to support suggestions that have been made following the publication of the UKAEA's Dounreay Shaft Inventory (DSI) report that high enriched uranium has been lost from Dounreay, i.e. that it has been stolen, diverted for military purposes or somehow removed from the site using an unidentified route.

The false impression given by the DSI report that there had been a loss of 170kg U-235 over the period 1 April 1965 to 30 September 1968 was the result of a misinterpretation of 30-year old UKAEA records, arising from a misunderstanding of the nuclear materials accountancy terminology in use at that time.

If the nuclear material inventories over this period had been taken according to modern nuclear materials accountancy practices, the material unaccounted for (MUF) would have been significantly less than 86 kg U-235. Even a MUF of 86kg U-235, at less than 1 per cent. of the amount of material processed at Dounreay over the period, would be considered acceptable against present day international standards of nuclear materials accountancy.

Review of the DSI report by nuclear materials accountancy specialists would have provided explanations for and clarifications of information contained in early UKAEA nuclear materials accountancy reports, and thus could have helped avoid the understandable concerns raised by the report as published.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure in his Department since May 1997 on (a) public opinion research, (b) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (c) direct mail. [63917]

Mr. Byers: Expenditure from centrally-managed budgets on advertising and direct mail where separately identifiable has been £2.18m and £56k respectively. It is not possible to identify a separate figure for public opinion research.

PRIME MINISTER

Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what classification is given to the minutes of meetings of the JCC; and if copies are circulated to Liberal Democrat hon. Members of the JCC. [67474]

The Prime Minister: Minutes of the JCC are classified according to their content.

Members of the Committee of course receive the minutes of the meetings of the Committee.

Loans (Misleading Information)

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Prime Minister what the Government's policy is with regard to employees who are found to have made false or misleading declarations on (a) internal documents and (b) external documents when seeking loans. [67286]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 January 1999]: The Theft Acts 1968 and 1978 apply to employees and other persons alike.

Overseas Holidays (Costs)

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Prime Minister what total costs borne by the public purse have been for security, administration and other costs related to his overseas holidays since 1 May 1997. [67323]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 January 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to his right hon. Friend the Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 9 February 1998, Official Report, column 15.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Queen's Counsel (Retirement Age)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will set a retirement age for QCs; and if he will make a statement. [67656]

Mr. Hoon: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has no jurisdiction regarding the age at which Queen's Counsel retire. He has no plans to make a statement.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67842]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department has no plans to make White or Green Papers available on floppy disks but all Departmental White and Green Papers are published on the LCD Internet website which allows the visually impaired to increase text size.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Caesarean Births

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list, for each of the last 10 years, the percentage of live births delivered by caesarean section within each health authority in Northern Ireland. [67704]

Mr. McFall: The percentage of live births delivered by caesarean section in each Health and Social Services Board area in the years 1992 to 1997 are as follows:

Health Board	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Eastern	12.0	10.2	14.8	17.8	18.5	20.9
Northern	11.6	12.9	14.8	17.2	16.7	19.6
Southern	12.9	15.5	15.0	16.6	17.4	19.2
Western	13.0	12.4	13.2	13.3	14.1	15.9

Pensioners (Stoke-on-Trent)

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of (a) pensioners, (b) single pensioners and (c) pensioners in couples in Stoke-on-Trent; and what estimate he has made of the number of (i) single pensioners and (ii) pensioners in couples in Stoke-on-Trent who will qualify for the minimum pension guarantee. [67101]

Mr. Timms: Figures for the number of pensioners are not available at Local Authority level.

As at May 1998 (the latest figure) there were 9,100 pensioner benefit units in receipt of Income Support in Stoke-on-Trent of which 7,800 were single pensioners and 1,300 were couples.

Estimates suggest that approximately 1.5 million pensioners nationally will receive payments from the Minimum Income Guarantee when it is introduced in April 1999. Some 65,000 people not already entitled to Income Support are expected to qualify for the Minimum Income Guarantee. The figures are not available by Local Authority area.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what the target times are for the CSA to deal with applications for compensation; and what are the actual times; [67228]

(2) how many applications for compensation, received by the Child Support Agency before 1 May 1998, are still awaiting determination; [67131]

(3) what is the average time taken for the CSA to determine applications for compensation; [67227]

(4) how many applications for compensation received by the Child Support Agency in the last two years have been determined within 30 days. [67132]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 27 January 1999:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about applications to the Child Support Agency for compensation, normally referred to as special payments.

I am not able to provide all of the information in the precise format that you have requested, but have provided as much as is available.

A special payment is considered where a clear and unambiguous error by the Agency has resulted in an actual financial loss to the client which is not recoverable through other means. Each case is carefully considered on its individual merits and depending on the complexity of the case, the length of time required to reach a decision can vary considerably.

We have a discrete unit to deal with applications for special payments. This ensures that each case receives individual attention and helps achieve fairness and an appropriate standard of consistency in an essentially discretionary scheme.

The difficulties that we faced as an Agency during our first two years of operations are well documented. We built up a substantial backlog of cases awaiting maintenance assessment, and the accuracy of the assessments we completed was not up to the standard we would hope to achieve. Tackling the backlog of cases awaiting a maintenance assessment and bringing cases up to date has been a major priority for us this year, and the result of this has been an increase in the number of applications for special payments. We recognise that the length of time taken to deal with special payments in some instances has been protracted and we have taken steps to address this over the last twelve months.

In December 1997 we reorganised the way we handle special payments and streamlined procedures with the aim of resolving special payments more speedily. We set an internal target to clear applications to special payments within 30 working days of receipt. Prior to establishing the new unit, applications were taking in excess of 90 working days to be dealt with. However as we began to clear our backlog of cases the number of applications for special payments rose significantly. From January 1997 to November 1997 we received 2,253 applications and from December 1997 to December 1998 we received 8,080 applications. Initially we were not able to meet the target we had set ourselves of clearance within 30 working days. Between April 1998 and June 1998 the average clearance time was 51 working days. More recently we have improved on our performance and the average clearance time for new applications between October 1998 and December 1998 was 8 working days.

The number of applications which we received before 1st May 1998 and which are at various stages of action is 410. We expect to have cleared these applications by the end of 1998/99.

We acknowledge that in the past our basic levels of customer service have been unacceptable and we are sorry that our failings may on occasion have caused inconvenience, frustration, distress and financial hardship.

We are very conscious of the importance of applications for compensation but the number of applications is small compared with our overall caseload of over 827,000 live and assessed cases. It has risen as a result of the increases in the Agency's current workloads and of our recent actions to clear the backlog of maintenance applications which had accumulated in the Agency during its first 2–3 years. In 1997/98 the Agency cleared 595,000 maintenance applications compared with 357,000 in 1996/97 and reduced the number of maintenance applications over 52 weeks old from 225,000 to 110,000. We recognise that by improving our underlying service and efficiency we can avoid the need for such applications. We expect to clear the rest of the backlog of maintenance applications over 52 weeks old by the end of 1998/99.

To improve our customer service in other areas we have reviewed the way that we handle complaints and we have increased resources for our Client Helplines and the National Enquiry Line. Also we have extended our hours of opening to cover 8.00am to 8.00pm Monday to Friday and 9.00am to 5.00pm on Saturdays and carried out trials to greatly improve and increase clients' opportunities to secure a face to face service. Through these measures our aim is to deal with clients' problems at an early stage and prevent problems escalating.

We recognise and have started to address the problems we have in delivering an acceptable level of customer service. Where we discover we have made mistakes or caused delay we will apologise to our clients and do everything we can to put things right as quickly as possible. I recognise that we have a long way to go to remedy our problems fully, but I am confident that our clients will continue to see improvements in the service they receive by the end of 1998/99 and beyond.

I hope this is helpful.

Noise-induced Hearing Loss

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many letters he has received since May 1997 from (a) hon. Members and (b) others on the war disablement pension paid to ex-service men and women suffering from noise induced hearing loss. [67564]

Mr. Bayley: Records have been kept since 9 October 1998. Since then 74 letters from hon. Members and 6 letters from other sources have been received.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of abolishing the 20 per cent. threshold for war disablement pensions and gratuities paid to ex-service men and women suffering from noise-induced hearing loss. [67567]

Mr. Bayley: The cost would be approximately £250 million.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many ex-service men and women suffering from noise-induced hearing loss have been refused a war disablement pension or gratuity due to their level of disablement being assessed to be below the 20 per cent. threshold in each of the last 10 years. [67478]

Mr. Bayley: A War Disablement Pension may be awarded for disablement due to service assessed at 20 per cent. or more. In general a gratuity may be awarded for disablement assessed at less than 20 per cent. However, since 1993, no award has been payable in respect of noise-induced sensorineural hearing loss due to service assessed at less than 20 per cent. This change aligned the War Disablement Pension scheme rules with those under the Industrial Injuries scheme for occupational deafness.

The number of first claims for noise-induced sensorineural hearing loss, since 1993, with assessments of less than 20 per cent. and where, therefore, no gratuity was payable

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons funding has not been made available to allow further research into noise-induced hearing loss in respect of war pension claimants; and if he will make a statement. [67361]

Mr. Bayley: There is a long standing and proven mechanism in place under the War Pension Scheme to monitor any published scientific evidence which might affect entitlement to a War Pension. The Department does not, therefore, normally fund medical research in this area.

For noise induced sensorineural hearing loss this process was validated by the expert review of the evidence in 1998, which came to the same conclusions as previously reached by the war pensions medical adviser.

NIRS2 Computer System

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people received overpayments as a result of the loss of contribution records following the shut down of the NIRS2 computer system; what is the total cost of these overpayments; and what action he proposes in respect of recouping these overpayments; [67638]

(2) how many people whose national insurance contribution records were lost as a result of the shut down of the NIRS2 computer system, have not yet received those payments due to them which are reliant on contribution records; and what is the total amount in payments which is outstanding. [67637]

Mr. Timms: During the NIRS2 Migration period, the period from 19 June 1998 to 13 July 1998 during which the transfer of information from NIRS1 to NIRS2 was completed, no contribution records were lost and therefore no payments are due or outstanding as a consequence.

It is too early to give an indication of the number of individuals who have been overpaid benefit as a result of the problems with the introduction of NIRS2. However, all claims on which interim or emergency payments have been made will be subject to review once NIRS2 is fully operational which is expected to be April 1999. All overpayments will be considered on their own merits according to the Department's standard procedures.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what date the NIRS2 computer will be fully operational; by what date all contribution records will be restored; and by what date payments reliant on contribution records will be brought up to date. [67639]

Mr. Timms: The contractor has advised that the NIRS2 system is expected to be fully operational by April 1999. No contribution records have been lost and as a consequence there is no requirement to restore contribution records.

Those Age Related Rebate payments that are dependent upon information held on contribution records are expected to be brought up to date by April 1999.

Contributory Benefits that are paid as a result of information held on National Insurance accounts are expected to be reviewed within a six month period once all the necessary 1997–98 information is held on NIRS2. The Benefits Agency expects to commence work on these reviews in April 1999.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Benefit Integrity Project will cease operation; and if he will make a statement. [68603]

Mr. Darling: The Benefit Integrity Project will end on 31 March 1999, to be replaced by a new and fairer system. No new cases will be selected for the project after this date. Cases where action has already started will continue to be processed through the remaining stages of adjudication, including review and appeal, in the normal way.

We are determined to ensure that people are receiving the correct amount of benefit. However, there is currently no automatic review mechanism within Disability Living Allowance (DLA). Therefore, from April a new system of periodic review will be introduced. It will incorporate the lessons already learned and will be continually evaluated and refined as it develops. Staff involved in the new processes will receive full training before commencing this new work.

Initially, the new system will exclude DLA recipients whose cases were examined by the Benefit Integrity Project. People with a fixed period award due to end within the next three years will also be excluded. The review process will involve gathering information by postal inquiry and home visits; these methods of approach will be applied across a range of people on all rates and components of DLA contacted to help identify the best means of approach in individual cases. The process will be evaluated after six months of operation and the findings used to continue to improve the process to make it more sensitive to the circumstances of the individual contacted. In addition, we will be testing new ways of gathering evidence in connection with DLA claims. This, plus information from the new review activity, will be used to help shape an active modern service for the future.

We are already talking to disability groups about ways to ensure the new system is sensitive to people's circumstances, and that it is both fair and effective.

Widows' Pensions

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether those widows now over the age of 45 who were widowed before the age of 45 will continue to receive the widow's pension at age 60 following the implementation of his reform proposals; and what will be the basis of the calculation of their pension entitlement. [67674]

Angela Eagle: The proposals set out in the consultation document, "Support in Bereavement", would have no effect on current widows.

A woman who was widowed before age 45 and who is receiving a Widow's Pension on reaching age 60, either because she qualified for a Widow's Pension when her Widowed Mother's Allowance ceased or because she was widowed before April 1988, will be able to continue to receive it up to age 65. Alternatively, she can claim Retirement Pension, in which case her Widow's Pension will be carried forward and paid as Category B pension. It may be paid in combination with any Category A pension to which she is entitled on her own contribution record. But in these cases, the basic pension cannot be more than the full rate for a single person and the SERPS cannot be more than the maximum payable to a single person reaching pension age.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Servants' Travel

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what were the flight number, date, time and place of departure and destination, class travelled, cost and purpose of each flight by senior civil servants in the course of their duties, including attendance at foreign conferences, symposiums and other meetings, between 1 May 1998 and the present; and what were the total costs of the flights of each of the 10 senior civil servants whose flights cost the most between 1 May 1998 and the present. [67263]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This information is not held centrally for all Departments and could be obtained to only disproportionate cost.

Buying Agency

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what targets he has set for the Buying Agency for 1999. [68541]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have set the Agency the following targets for 1999.

Financial: To generate a return on capital employed of 8 per cent. (excluding costs of restructuring).

Productivity: To reduce the cost per pound of savings by 2.5 per cent. on 1998 outturn.

Customer Satisfaction: To raise customer satisfaction by 5 percentage points over the year.

People's Panel

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he intends to publish results from the second wave of research using the People's Panel; and if he will make a statement. [68540]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Government are to publish a White Paper at Easter setting out their vision for public services into the next millennium. The People's Panel has an important part to play in this initiative. By listening to, and learning from, people's views, the Government will be better able to provide the services that people want.

The second wave of results from the People's Panel covers pubic attitudes to a wide range of public services, with a particular focus on transport, local democracy and complaints handling. I will, tomorrow, place in the Library of the House a copy of the results from this second wave of research.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Local Radio

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects to announce the results of his consultation on the restrictions on participation in companies holding local radio multiplex licences; and if he will make a statement. [68537]

Janet Anderson: The Government consulted on proposed changes to the restrictions on shareholdings in companies which hold local multiplex licences last November. Having reviewed the responses, we accept that there is a clear case for changing the limits at paragraph 11(4) of part III of Schedule 2 to the Broadcasting Act 1990 (as amended).

Although we still need restrictions in the interests of plurality of ownership, and the diversity of content which such plurality can bring, we accept that larger radio groups must be allowed more freedom to invest across the country if digital is to be a success. We must also ensure that local companies have the opportunity to invest in companies or consortia holding local multiplex licences.

The Government therefore intend to lay an order under paragraph 11(5) of part III of Schedule 2 to the 1990 Act (as amended) before Easter. This will allow investors to hold unlimited shareholdings in up to five companies or consortia holding digital licences. In addition we intend to increase the percentage limit on holdings over and above that limit from 10 per cent. to 20 per cent.

We believe that these changes will address the needs of all parts of the radio industry—both larger radio groups and those companies wishing to make small but meaningful investments in a wide range of digital licences. We will look very closely at the effects of the revised restrictions as more multiplex licences are advertised by the Radio Authority.

Listed Buildings (Ecclesiastical Exemption)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the ecclesiastical exemption from listed building and conservation area controls. [68601]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My Department and that of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales have now completed a programme of discussions with denominations and other organisations to consider the recommendations in Mr. John Newman's review of the exemption. I am today placing in the Libraries of the House a document which gives details of the changes in denominations' procedures agreed in the course of the discussions. Copies will be circulated to interested bodies.

Against this background my right hon. Friend and I are satisfied that the six denominations which currently enjoy the ecclesiastical exemption should retain it for the time being. This includes the Baptist Union, which Mr. Newman recommended should be the subject of a further review after a year and whose internal procedures have therefore been re-examined by the two Departments. We would envisage a further review of the exemption regime as a whole during the life of this Parliament. Meanwhile we look to the denominations to keep up the momentum of change as required and expect to see substantive progress in all areas where the need for further work has been identified.

We have also reviewed the position regarding the various categories of building (such as those within Church of England peculiars) which at the time of the 1994 reform were outside the scope of the relevant denomination's own procedures and which retained exemption on an interim basis pending satisfactory long-term arrangements. Action is in hand within the denominations to establish such arrangements and the Government want to see these brought fully into effect as a matter of urgency. The Government aim shortly to consult on a draft amendment to the Ecclesiastical Exemption (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Order 1994, the effect of which will be to remove the exemption from any ecclesiastical building not fully covered by an appropriate control procedure and place it under normal secular controls.

The booklet "The Ecclesiastical Exemption—What it is and how it works" will be revised to take account of these developments and reissued during 1999.

HEALTH

Weighted Capitation Formula

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each health authority the average wage according to the market forces staff factor of the weighted capitation formula. [66095]

Mr. Denham: The table gives average wages for health authorities compiled from the source data used to calculate the staff market forces factor.

In calculating the staff market forces factor, the data are adjusted in two ways. First, to isolate the effect of geographical location from other factors, for example gender and occupation; and secondly, to reflect the location of the National Health Service trusts from which the health authorities commission their services.

There is to be a wide ranging review of the formula used to make cash allocations to health authorities and primary care groups.

2. The three year average is used to be consistent with the convention used when calculating the staff market forces factor.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67840]

Mr. Hutton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296.

As the Department responsible for health issues, we aim to make our documents available to the widest possible audiences. The Green Paper, "Our Healthier Nation", included versions in Braille, audio tape and large print and the Social Services White Paper versions in Braille and audio tape.

Texts of Green and White Papers are also available on The Stationery Office website, which many people with less severe visual impairments find very convenient, since they can adjust their own browser software to as large a type as they require.

It has not been our usual practice to offer texts on floppy disks because there has not been significant demand. Availability of texts via the internet may now be satisfying that demand but, if we receive an ad-hoc request for a text on disk, we are happy to produce and supply it.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to review the list of exemptions from prescription charges; [66066]

(2) what plans he has to review the operation of exemptions from prescription charges; and if he will make a statement. [66067]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The current prescription charge exemption arrangements were reviewed as part of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review. Following the Review, all current prescription charge exemptions will be protected for the rest of the Parliament and existing patient charges will rise by no more than the rate of inflation over the next three years.

Caesarean Births

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each of the last 10 years, the percentage of live births delivered by caesarean section within each health authority in England. [67673]

Mr. Hutton: Information about emergency and total caesarean deliveries by hospital/trust for 1989–90 to 1994–95 is contained in table 31 of the Statistical bulletin "NHS Maternity Statistics 1989–90 to 1994–95". Copies of the bulletin are available in the Library. It is planned to publish a further bulletin with more up to date information in spring 1999. Information about live births delivered by caesarean section within each health authority could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NHS Budget

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the total NHS budget (a) in 1996–97 and (b) 2000–01, in 1998–99 prices. [66525]

Mr. Denham: The total National Health Service budget in 1998–99 prices for the years 1996–97 and 2000–01 is contained in the table.

Royal Hospital, Haslar

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have taken place between the Ministry of Defence and the NHS on the planned closure of the Royal Hospital, Haslar; and what plans he has to ensure the maintenance of hospital provision on the Gosport Peninsular. [68073]

Mr. Denham: Following the Strategic Defence Review, the Ministry of Defence decided to close Royal Hospital, Haslar. The local health authority will now be exploring with Royal Hospital, Haslar and colleagues in the Defence Secondary Care Agency the options for the provision of the most effective healthcare for the local population. In the meantime the Ministry of Defence has made a commitment to maintain the service currently provided by Royal Hospital, Haslar until 2002 at the earliest.

Correspondence

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Solihull to ministers in his Department dated 19 November and 16 September 1998. [67975]

Ms Jowell: My noble Friend, the Baroness Hayman, replied to the hon. Member on 26 January 1999.

DEFENCE

Defence Military Assistance Fund (Indonesia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) of 16 December 1998, Official Report, columns 526–28, if he will provide a breakdown of the expenditure under the Defence Military Assistance Fund relating to Indonesia in each of the last three years, indicating separately the amounts used to support defence sales. [66623]

Mr. George Robertson: The total committed expenditure for Indonesia under the Defence Military Assistance Fund, DMAF, for the last two years, and the cost of assistance waived under its predecessors, the Defence Policy Fund and the Defence Sales Fund, is as follows:

£691,880 total, of which £583,000 was committed to support of defence exports

1996–1997

£1,675,280, of which £1,629,080 was committed to support of defence exports

1997–1998

£62,400, of which £19,700 was committed to support of defence exports.

Portsmouth Dockyard (Service Personnel)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel, and at what ranks, are currently attached to (a) HMS Ark Royal and (b) HMS Intrepid in Portsmouth Dockyard; and at what annual cost per ship. [67248]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 27 January 1999, Official Report, columns 265–66.

Chapelcross and Calder Hall Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his forecast for the longevity of the tritium production facility at Chapelcross; [67210]

(2) what discussions his Department has had with BNFL about extending the life of the Chapelcross and Calder Hall reactors; and if he will make a statement. [67209]

Mr. Spellar: The productive life of Chapelcross is a matter for BNFL, subject to its meeting the relevant regulatory requirements of the independent regulator, the Health and Safety Executive HSE. I understand, however, that in 1996 the HSE's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate agreed that the reactors could continue to operate for another ten years from 1998, up to a potential age of 50. This agreement was subject to satisfactory results from the normal programme of inspections and some work being undertaken to plant and procedures which was already planned and being implemented.

The Ministry of Defence is currently in the very early stages of discussions with BNFL about the prospects for a further extension of the life of Chapelcross beyond the period quoted.

The Ministry of Defence has had no links with Calder Hall since it was put under IAEA Safeguards in August 1996.

CS Gas

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the report arising out of the review into CS gas holdings. [67649]

Mr. Spellar: The review includes a substantial amount of material the disclosure of which would be harmful to defence, national security or international relations. I am, therefore, withholding the review material in accordance with the terms of Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

CR Gas

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 657, regarding CR gas, if he will list the (a) dates and (b) circumstances of each occasion on which the possible use of CR gas by the armed forces was authorised following a request for assistance for law enforcement purposes from the civil power. [67629]

Mr. Spellar: The use of CR gas has been authorised on two instances in the past two years where the Armed Forces have responded to a request for assistance for law enforcement purposes from the civil power. I am withholding the details of the circumstances in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

CDB Technical Notes (Unclassified Reports)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list of the unclassified reports in the CDB Technical Notes series. [67600]

Mr. Spellar: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to the CDB Technical Notes series which was started in April 1995 when the then Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment became part of DERA. Since that date 13 unclassified technical reports have been produced.

I have made arrangements for a list of the titles to be placed in the Library of the House.

Air Strikes (Iraq)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if depleted uranium shells were used in the air strikes by Britain and the USA on Iraq in December. [67453]

Mr. George Robertson: No depleted uranium based ammunition was used by US or UK forces during Operation Desert Fox.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67837]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office, yesterday, 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296.

In my Department we currently aim to meet requests on demand for the production of departmental documents in alternative formats such as floppy disk for the benefit of those with a visual impairment whenever it is reasonable to do so.

Territorial Army

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the operating costs for 101 Battalion REME based at Queensferry for the next five years. [68153]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 656.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the interval of time between the decision to move 101 Battalion REME from Chorley Barracks to Queensferry and the announcement of the future structure of the Territorial Army on 17 November 1998. [68112]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 164.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 December 1998, Official Report, column 450, what definition of South Lancashire his Department uses. [68159]

Mr. Doug Henderson: For the purpose of the question to which my hon. Friend refers, the definition used was the area of the county covered by the Lancashire South European Constituency.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the cost of the transfer of computer equipment from Chorley to Queensferry 101 Battalion Headquarters. [68155]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No such details are available at this time.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the additional travelling costs that will be incurred by detachments travelling to Queensferry instead of Chorley when the 101 Battalion is transferred. [68156]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We anticipate that any increase in travelling costs incurred by units in Manchester and Grangemouth travelling to Queensferry, will be offset by reductions in such cost incurred by units travelling from Prestatyn and Coventry.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Cadet Force in Chorley. [68158]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department is still assessing the options for the Cadet Force in Chorley. I can confirm that any Cadets, whose current accommodation is affected by the restructuring of the Territorial Army, will not be obliged to move until suitable alternative accommodation has been provided.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Territorial Army centres which he had planned to close or transfer as part of the Strategic Defence Review but which will now remain open; and if he will make a statement. [68072]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Of the Territorial Army Centres that we announced on 17 November 1998 were to close or transfer as part of the Strategic Defence Review none are now to remain open.

101 Battalion REME (Chorley)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 656, on REME (Chorley), if he will set out the basis of his estimate of 25 per cent. saving in operating the 101 Battalion REME out of Queensferry instead of Chorley. [68154]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The assessment has been made on the basis of a comparison of the estimated running and maintenance costs of the two sites.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times Exemption 2 in the Code of Practice on access to Government information was used by his Department in replying to parliamentary questions to justify withholding information in the last 12 months. [68160]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Of 2,731 questions answered by all Ministers in this Department in the year ending 22 January 1999, some or all of the information requested was withheld under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (Internal discussions and advice) on 13 occasions.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Road Safety (Mobile Telephones)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of accidents caused by drivers being distracted by mobile telephones in each of the last five years. [65487]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Information on the number of accidents caused by drivers or other road users being distracted by mobile phones is not collected because of the difficulty of establishing exactly when a road traffic accident took place and whether a mobile phone was in use at the time. However, my Department is aware of a number of media reports over the last few years of road fatalities where the use of a mobile phone was alleged to be a factor.

We continue to warn of the dangers of using a mobile phone while driving. The Transport Research Laboratory report "The use of mobile phones while Driving: a review" shows that hand held mobile phones are inappropriate for use while driving and even hands-free mobile phones cause distraction from the driving task.

Local Deprivation Indicators

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which measures of local deprivation his Department and its agencies use in considering allocation of funds to local projects. [66717]

Mr. Meale: My Department allocates funds for a range of local projects, but usually through third parties such as local authorities. In making allocations to local level we use local deprivation indices appropriate to the expenditure concerned. The main ones are:

Housing—the annual allocation of housing capital resources to local authorities (apart from private sector renewal and disabled facilities grants) and registered social landlords uses Needs Indices which involve an element of targeting to areas of high deprivation as measured by the Index of Local Conditions.

Regeneration—the 1998 Index of Local Deprivation is used to target regeneration funds on the most deprived areas in England.

Rural Regeneration—funding provided through the rural regeneration programmes currently operated by the Rural Development Commission is targeted on the priority Rural Development Areas. These areas were designated in 1994 using a specific set of indicators to identify the key economic and social problems facing rural communities in England.

Local Government—the allocation of revenue support grants to local authorities is governed by formulae which include a number of measures of social and economic deprivation. The details are set out in The Local Government Finance Reports for each year, as approved by the House.

European Structural Funds—the Department manages the English Objective 1,2 and 5b Structural Funds Programmes. The programme areas eligible to receive Structural Funds are determined by socio-economic factors which include measures of deprivation. However, measures of local deprivation are not used by this Department when considering the allocation of funds to specific local projects within Objective 1, 2 and 5b areas.

Lorries (Illegal Operation)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to paragraph 1.43 of the White Paper, "A New Deal for Transport", what additional measures he proposes for the impounding of illegally operating lorries. [67615]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 25 January 1999]: We remain committed to introducing a scheme for the impounding of illegally operated heavy goods vehicles. The consultation exercise carried out last year showed that there was overwhelming support for such a scheme. We believe that detaining illegally operated heavy goods vehicles would provide an effective sanction against unlicensed operators by preventing them from continuing to operate and by acting as a deterrent to discourage other hauliers from ignoring the laws on operator licensing.

Pesticides Tax (Hazard Scoring)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress on hazard scoring with regard to the taxing of pesticides. [67715]

Mr. Meale: The Government have been exploring the possibility of introducing a pesticide tax as a component of its pesticide minimisation policy. As part of this work, consideration has been given to the relative environmental hazard of the active ingredients contained in different pesticides.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many man hours are spent by officials at the Health and Safety Executive on monitoring and enforcing the regulations and guidelines covering genetically modified organisms; what estimate he has made of the expected growth in this amount of working time should the United Kingdom allow the expansion to commercial growing; and what is his estimate of the costs involved. [67753]

Mr. Meale: The regulations and guidelines in Great Britain covering genetically modified organisms can be divided into those covering deliberate releases (typically the controlled growing of crops on designated sites) and those covering contained use (typically developmental work involving organisms, animals and plants in laboratories or glass houses).

The Health and Safety Executive inspects and enforces the regulations covering the deliberate release of genetically modified organisms under an agency agreement with the Department of the Environment, Transport and Regions (DETR). In the current working year, 888 hours (120 days or 0.57 person/years) are allocated for inspection and enforcement.

For contained use, in the current year, 1,665 hours (225 days or 1.07 person/years) are allocated for inspection and enforcement. Contained use work will not be affected by any expansion in commercial growing.

If the UK proceeds to commercial cultivation of genetically modified crops, the resources will be increased proportionally to take into account any additional inspection and enforcement duties.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list his Department's responsibilities and policies in relation to genetically-modified crops and the departments with which he liaises on this issue. [67664]

Mr. Meale: DETR has responsibility in England for all issues concerned with genetically modified organisms (GMOs) which may affect the environment and is responsible for reviewing all environmental risk assessments in respect of GM crops.

DETR has lead responsibility for the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992, as amended, which in conjunction with Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the European Communities Act 1972, give effect to Council Directive 90/220/EEC on the deliberate release into the environment of genetically Modified Organisms, as amended by Commission Directive 97/35/EC.

DETR is lead competent authority for the purposes of EC Directive 90/220/EEC and in the wider international field has lead responsibility for taking forward the UK line in the negotiation of a Biosafety Protocol under the Convention on Biological Diversity.

The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE's) specialist inspectors enforce those sections of Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, and associated Regulations, which concern deliberate release of GMOs into the environment. The enforcement is undertaken on behalf of the Secretary of State and is under the terms of an Agency Agreement.

The human safety aspects of the contained use of genetically modified crops are covered by the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992, as amended. HSE is responsible for and enforces those Regulations. Environmental aspects are covered by Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and associated Regulations—the Genetically Modified Organisms (Risk Assessment) (Records and Exemptions) Regulations 1996, as amended in 1997—for which DETR is responsible. HSE specialist inspectors enforce that legislation on behalf of DETR under an Agency Agreement.

Arrangements between Departments on the control and regulation of the contained use and deliberate release of GMOs is covered by a Memorandum of Understanding between DETR, HSE, MAFF, Scottish Office and Welsh Office and by an agreement between DETR and DOE(NI). Policy on biotechnology, including genetically modified crops, is co-ordinated by the Ministerial Group on Biotechnology, as announced by the Prime Minister on 21 October 1998, Official Report, columns 1134–35, which is chaired by the Minister for the Cabinet Office. In addition, officials across Government are in regular contact on biotechnology issues.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the terms of reference of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment were last reviewed. [68061]

Mr. Meale: The terms of reference of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) have not changed since the committee was established in 1993. The remit of the committee was last reviewed and changed in October 1998 when the Secretary of State asked ACRE in future to advise not only on the direct and indirect effects of genetically modified organisms in the environment but on the possible changes in agronomic practice and subsequent effects on biodiversity.

Road Accidents (Motorway Tuition)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the effect on the number of accidents and injuries of making compulsory some form of motorway tuition; and if he will make a statement. [67736]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since it would not be practicable to make motorway tuition compulsory because many learner drivers are not within reasonable distance of a motorway, we have made no detailed assessment of the likely impact. However, Transport Research Laboratory research[1] based on a large sample of drivers who passed their test in 1988 and 1989 estimates that the accident rate for male drivers in their first three years of driving is about four accidents per million miles on motorways compared to over 18 on major roads away from town centres and over 24 on quiet country or rural roads.

Changes to the practical driving test have been announced which will take effect in the Spring. The test will be longer to allow candidates to be assessed in situations more representative of modern driving conditions, including higher-speed roads. That will mean that their training will have to equip them to meet those conditions.

Ministerial Travel

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the occasions on which he has taken an RAF flight since May 1997; and for what purpose; [67413]

(2) if he will list the occasions on which he has used a helicopter at public expense since May 1997; and for what purpose. [67415]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 25 January 1999]: I refer to the answers given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London, on 19 November 1998, Official Report, columns 838–39, and 27 November 1998, Official Report, column 41. The RAF flights undertaken by me personally were those on 3 May and 23 July 1997 and 22 January, 23 March, 16 and 22 August and 26 September 1998. Of those, the flight on 3 May 1997 was made by helicopter, as were parts of the journeys from Belfast to Omagh and return on 16 and 22 August 1998. In addition I have made helicopter trips on 14 July 1998 to the opening of Capital One Bank in Nottingham, and on 7 October 1998 on a tour of emergency towing vessels as part of the launch of the Maritime and Coastguard Agency.

Packaging Waste

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the financial cost to the packing industry of complying with EU law relating to recoverable packaging waste. [67682]

Mr. Meale: An assessment of the cost implications of the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997, which implement the EC Directive on Packaging and Packaging Waste (94/62/EC) was published when the Regulations came into force in March 1997. This assessment will be updated when measures to amend the Regulations are introduced in due course.

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of his review of the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) regulations 1997. [68346]

Mr. Meacher: I have considered the conclusions of the Advisory Committee on Packaging as set out in Sir Peter Parker's letters to me of 24 June and 22 December 1998, together with the other representations that were made to me in the course of the review. Subject to Parliamentary approval and, in the case of certain matters, the conclusion of the period for consulting European Union colleagues, I propose to make a number of changes to the Regulations as follows. As these changes are intended to take effect this year, I will introduce measures as soon as possible.

(i) The recovery and recycling targets will be increased in 1999 and 2000 as follows:

Percentage

	1999	2000
Recovery	43	45
Material-specific recycling	10	13

Recovery and recycling targets for 2001 will remain unchanged for now, at 52 per cent. recovery and 16 per cent. recycling, in effect, the Directive targets. I will keep these under review in light of further information, including the development of the new Waste Strategy for England and Wales, further work by the Department on packaging data and data returns from businesses and compliance schemes to the Agencies in 1999.

(ii) The Regulations provide that the financial turnover threshold falls from the present £5 million to £1 million in 2000. However, I have concluded that businesses with a financial turnover of between £1 million and £2 million are unlikely to be handling significant quantities of packaging and so, in 2000, only those businesses who have a financial turnover of more than £2 million will come within the scope of the Regulations.

(iii) Currently, the Regulations provide for "wholesalers" to take on the selling obligation for the small retailers that they supply. The Advisory Committee noted that removing this obligation would significantly simplify the obligation on wholesaling businesses, who, in any case, have obligations for the activities they perform on packaging. I consider that the removal of the "wholesaler" obligation is likely to be beneficial provided other incentives are in place to promote the collection and recycling of the packaging passing through small shops and I therefore propose to remove the "wholesaler obligation" from the Regulations.

(iv) I agree with the Advisory Committee that there is considerable potential for increased involvement of consumers in business efforts to increase the amount of packaging waste recovered, to supplement the initiatives of local authorities, voluntary groups and other organisations. I note that some obligated businesses are better placed to ensure that consumers are informed than others, while other businesses have little or no contact with the consumer. It will therefore be a requirement on obligated businesses whose main activity is "selling" to provide information to consumers about the role they can play in increasing recovery and recycling of packaging waste, and in encouraging greater re-use of packaging. A similar requirement will be placed on compliance schemes.

(v) The packaging Regulations are also intended to reduce the amount of packaging used in order to avoid creating waste as far as possible. I attach great importance to further progress on minimisation and want to see what industry can do on a voluntary basis to develop indicators against which performance can be measured.

(vi) A rigorous monitoring and enforcement policy on the part of the Agencies is essential if the mandatory Directive targets are to be met in 2001. The Regulations are based on an approach which shares the burden between the different players in the packaging chain and depends on effective "free rider" deterrence. Currently some 8,900 businesses are covered by registration and this number will rise in 2000 when the turnover threshold test falls. If least-cost compliance is going to be achieved, business needs to be sure that all those who have legal obligations under the Regulations will register and comply with their full obligations. To this end, the Agency fee will rise to £900 with effect from 1999. I welcome the efforts made by the Agencies to strengthen enforcement programmes and I understand that the Agency has started taking proceedings against a number of companies who failed to register in 1998. With effect from this year I will be asking the Agencies to publish their monitoring programmes and report half yearly on number, size and sector of businesses checked for registration, for data provision, and for compliance with the recovery and recycling obligations. I also want to see a report on the allocation of Agency fee income to activities in this area. To help the Agencies in their monitoring duties, I intend that compliance schemes will be given a deadline of 15 April for the full provision of data relating to all their members, and 30 June for the provision of updated operational plans. The registration deadline for individual businesses and compliance schemes will be 7 April each year.

(vii) I am aware of the challenging nature of the data requirement but I note that business is itself keen to have as accurate as possible a base-line figure for the tonnage of packaging in the waste stream against which to plan. My Department's provisional estimate of packaging in the waste stream is approximately 8.5 million tonnes, rising to some 9.7 million tonnes once wood and other packaging materials are included. The more accurate the data provided by obligated parties, the more effective will be the efforts to plan for increasing recovery of packaging waste and meeting targets in 2001. An improved data form is proposed for immediate use, and with a view to easing the data requirement on businesses obligated in 2000 for the first time, the Department has commissioned work to develop "off-the-shelf" data forms for these smaller firms who will have the option of using these forms or collecting and providing data themselves. I am prepared to consider further whether there are alternative ways of collecting data that would meet all Directive requirements and enable business to plan confidently for continued compliance with the Directive targets.

(viii) I have seen the Advisory Committee's recommendation that business concerns about hardship needed to be addressed and their advice that businesses in some sectors could face significant net costs of compliance, particularly if they are not able to pass costs on; that particular concerns had been demonstrated by the convertor sector; and that some interim changes should be made to the percentage activity obligations. The changes the Committee is recommending are a 2 per cent. reduction in the convertor activity obligation (from 11 per cent. to 9 per cent.); a 1 per cent. increase in the activity obligations of packer/fillers (from 36 per cent. to 37 per cent.) and retailers (from 47 per cent. to 48 per cent.).

The Committee has also recommended that a cross-sectoral, independent audit of net compliance costs of all sectors should be carried out in 1999. I welcome the Packaging Federation's support for both these proposals. I am inclined to accept the Committee's recommendations on these points but it will first be necessary to consult more widely on the proposed changes and the Department will be setting this in hand as early as possible.

(ix) I remain concerned that not enough is being done to ensure that sufficient household packaging waste will be available to contribute, as it will have to, to the achievement of the Directive targets in 2001. However, I have noted the advice of the Advisory Committee on this point and the views of the Environment Agency and others. Although separate targets for household waste were proposed in our consultation paper, I do not propose to introduce separate targets for household waste this year. I will be giving further consideration to ways of increasing recovery of packaging waste from the household waste stream.

I am also proposing to make some "technical" amendments to the Regulations to clarify or simplify existing provisions or deal with unintended omissions. I also intend to provide the option for those businesses investing in identifiable re-use systems to spread the cost of their obligations.

I will also made a separate statement shortly about the Packaging Waste Recovery Note (PRN) system.

Lorry and Bus Company Licences

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the offices at which work related to the licensing of lorry and bus companies (a) currently takes place and (b) took place prior to 1996. [67452]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In respect to Wales prior to April 1996, administrative support for the Traffic Commissioner for South Wales, the licensing authority for operators of buses, coaches and heavy lorries, was provided by staff from the Department of Transport based in Cardiff. The northern counties of Wales are currently the responsibility of the Traffic Commissioner for the North Western Traffic Area, then supported by an office in Manchester. Administrative services are now provided by offices in Birmingham and Leeds respectively. My noble Friend the Minister for Roads and Road Safety has today announced that, subject to Parliamentary approval, a new traffic area for Wales will be established with effect from 1 April 1999. The new traffic area will be administered from Birmingham, although the Traffic Commissioner will continue to hold his public inquiries in Wales as appropriate.

Road Bridges

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what amount has been spent to date on bridge strengthening to implement EU Directive 85/3/EEC; and how much he estimates will be spent to complete implementation, expressed in each case at November 1987 prices. [67595]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 January 1999]: On Highways Agency bridges, the estimated expenditure to 31 March 1999 on the current assessment and strengthening programme is £200m at November 1987 prices. The estimated cost to complete the work is £83m.

The Directive requires strengthening to take place only on routes of strategic importance for HGVs. We are not able to separate expenditure by local authorities for these purposes from more general expenditure on bridge works.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the total costs to highway authorities as a result of bridge strengthening works undertaken to implement EU Directive 85/3/EEC, excluding moneys provided to highway authorities from central Government under TPP allocations. [67593]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 January 1999]: I refer to the previous answer, which provides details of Highways Agency costs to implement bridge strengthening in 1987 prices. We cannot identify local authorities expenditure required for implementation of Directive 85/3/EEC. Not all bridge strengthening work being undertaken by local authorities is a requirement of the Directive.

The assessment programme has provided for a review of the condition and load bearing capability of all local authority bridges in England. Although a proportion of the works planned by authorities are on routes of the greatest strategic importance for HGVs, other works have been identified which authorities wish to undertake to meet the need of their local communities. Authorities also have discretion within their annual capital settlement to adjust the funding given between that for bridge works and that structural maintenance of principal roads.

Motorway Network

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many miles of motorway were open at the end of (a) 1979 and (b) 1997. [68125]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information that the hon. Gentleman seeks is available only for financial years, not calender years. On 1 April 1979, there were 1,339 miles of motorway open in England, and on 1 April 1997, the corresponding figure was 1,759 miles. The figures include both trunk road motorways and those for which the local highway authority is responsible.

Radioactive Emissions (OSPAR Meeting)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of the OSPAR meeting on radioactive emissions held in Dublin this month; and if he will place in the Library copies of the United Kingdom and other submissions made to the meeting. [67703]

Mr. Meale: The OSPAR technical working group on radioactive substances met in Dublin from 19 to 22 January. It made progress on a range of issues related to radioactive substances in the marine environment of the north-east Atlantic. Copies of UK papers submitted to the meeting have been placed in the Library. It would be for other OSPAR Contracting Parties to make available copies of their papers. A summary record of the meeting will shortly be available from the OSPAR Secretariat, New Court, 48 Carey Street, London WC2A 2JQ.

Nuclear Fuel Reprocessing

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with ministers of the German Government concerning the termination of contracts with BNFL for the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel; and if he will make a statement. [67705]

Mr. Meale: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment met Jürgen Trittin, the German Environment Minister, on 20 January to discuss the Environmental Council Programme during the German Presidency of the EU. There was no substantive discussion about the termination of reprocessing contracts between German Utilities and BNFL. Such discussions were held earlier that day between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, and Herr Trittin. I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 547.

Sellafield

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to make a response to the Environment Agency's proposed decision on the BNFL Mixed Oxide Fuel Plant. [67707]

Mr. Meale: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 11 November 1998, Official Report, column 189.

Crossrail

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement on his policy towards the Crossrail project; [67973]

(2) when his predecessor asked Railtrack to prepare a report on the Crossrail project; and when he expects to receive this report. [67974]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In response to a written Parliamentary Question the then Secretary of State for Transport told the House on 2 April 1996, Official Report, columns 129–30, that he had invited the Chairman of Railtrack to consider the Crossrail project with his Board. Railtrack has not responded to this invitation.

The Government's priority is to upgrade the existing Underground: the Public Private partnership will achieve that. It will be for the Mayor to take decisions on the future of the project as part of his or her integrated transport strategy for London, in the light of his or her priorities and the funds available. Meanwhile, the Crossrail route remains safeguarded.

West Midlands Regional Development Agency

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to expand membership of the West Midlands Regional Development Agency to include a representative from (a) Worcestershire and (b) the business community of the region; and if he will make a statement. [68109]

Mr. Meale: We have in mind to appoint another member to the West Midlands RDA and hope to make an announcement shortly.

Congestion and Parking Charges

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if all revenues raised from congestion charging or private non-residential parking charges will be ring-fenced and re-invested in transport. [66526]

Dr. Reid: The Government's proposal, set out in its consultation document, "Breaking the Logjam" is that 100 per cent. of the net revenues in pilot charging schemes will be retained by local authorities for at least 10 years for spending only on transport-related projects. They will be obliged to set up ring-fenced accounts for this purpose. The Government will have to approve all pilot schemes and will ensure that the proposed spending of the revenues in each scheme represents value for money.

Eurostar Services

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1998, Official Report, column 135, if he has commissioned an independent review of alternative proposals for regional Eurostar services; and if he will make a statement. [68573]

Mr. Prescott: I have today announced a competition to seek a consultant to undertake a review of alternative proposals for regional Eurostar services. In addition to addressing itself in particular to the study completed by Inter-Capital and Regional Rail Ltd., and the alternative proposals put forward by the Virgin Group, the review will include a thorough examination of a broad range of key elements including the points to be served, infrastructure requirements in terms of both rolling stock and track, wider social and economic benefits to the regions of having such services, and the case for carrying domestic passengers. These terms of reference have been informed by the recent report of the Transport Sub-Committee, for which I am grateful. I have asked for a thorough report to be presented to Government as soon as practicable. It is likely to take some months.

Thameslink 2000

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Railtrack's application for an order under the Transport and Works Act 1992 in respect of the Thameslink 2000 Project. [68604]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have been advised by Railtrack that they intend making a supplementary Order application which will revise the scope of the proposed works at a number of locations, in particular at Farringdon and London Bridge. These changes arise from Railtrack's consideration of objections made to the original application. The supplementary application is expected to be made by the end of September. To allow time for objections to this application to be taken into account, the Secretary of State has decided to defer until 9 December 1999 the date by which he must give notice of an intention to hold a public inquiry into the proposed Railtrack (Thameslink 2000) Order. We will take a decision before that date if possible but this will depend on when the supplementary application is made.

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what occasions Ministers in his Department have made journeys by aeroplane funded by third parties since 1 May 1997. [66464]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 18 January 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has made five such journeys: to address the joint Conference of the North West Regional Association and North West Partnership in Windermere; to visit a Freight Distribution Centre in the Midlands; to open the extension to Humberside Airport; to tour the P&O container port in Southampton and to visit Norwich Airport and Felixstowe Port. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, made two journeys: one to deliver the key note speech at the Institute of Wastes Management conference in Plymouth and the other as part of the International Marine Biodiversity Workshop in Jamaica. My hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning made two journeys: one to tour Great Yarmouth regeneration projects and the other on a fact finding tour of a quarry. My hon. Friend the Minister for London and Construction also made two such journeys: a tour of Barking Reach housing development and a fact finding visit to a quarry.

I visited the General Lighthouse Authority's Pharos Lightship ship and in addition, I visited Australia in September 1998, not in my Ministerial capacity, to speak to and meet women's organisations interested in increasing the participation of women in Parliament and public life. My visit, including travel costs, was sponsored by Emily's List of Australia as recorded in the Parliamentary Register of Members' Interests. While in Australia, I attended a number of meetings in my official capacity, including an International Conference on Mobility and Transport for Elderly and Disabled People.

Planning Legislation

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Railtrack's position as regards planning legislation, with particular reference to demolition of property. [67097]

Mr. Raynsford: The carrying out of development of land generally requires planning permission. This normally entails a planning application but the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 grants a general permission (through permitted development rights) for various types of development. Where Railtrack carried out works which fall within the definition of permitted development under Class A of Part II or Part 17 of Schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995, it will enjoy permitted development rights and will not need to submit a planning application.

Demolition of property requires planning permission where it meets the definition of development. Under the Town and Country Planning (Demolition—Description of Buildings) Direction 1995, planning permission is only required for the total demolition of dwellinghouses and buildings adjoining them outside conservation areas, and for the demolition of the whole or part of a gate, fence, wall or other means of enclosure within conservation areas. Part 31 of Schedule 2 to the General Permitted Development Order then grants permitted development rights for the demolition of these descriptions of buildings, subject to certain conditions. However, listed building consent or conservation area consent for the total or substantial demolition of buildings may also be required. These provisions apply to Railtrack as they do to other prospective developers.

Planning League Table

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the cost to public funds of compiling the planning league table. [67876]

Mr. Raynsford: The cost to the Department of producing Tables 5 to 9 of the Planning Performance Checklist published on 12 January 1999 was approximately £180.

Motor Vehicle Accidents

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many motor vehicle accidents occurred in the last year for which figures are available on (a) motorways, (b) other trunk roads and (c) other roads; and if he will make a statement. [67735]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is shown in the table.

Number of injury road accidents in GB involving one or more motor vehicle [1]

	1997
Motorways	8,676
Trunk A roads[2]	20,255
Other A roads[2]	90,260
All A roads	110,515
Others	119,462

[1] Accidents involving only non-motorised vehicles are not included. There were an additional 1,393 in 1997 which involved only non-motorised vehicles

[2] Trunk A Road data for 1997 is provisional

Mayor of London (Salary)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make a decision on the salary of the Mayor of London. [67880]

Mr. Raynsford: I will be inviting the Senior Salaries Review Body to advise me on the salaries for the Mayor of London and the London Assembly Members. We will announce our decision when we have had an opportunity to consider its recommendations.

Planning Applications

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is proposing to accelerate the processing of planning applications. [67879]

Mr. Raynsford: Local planning authorities handle some half a million planning applications every year. It is essential that these are processed efficiently and effectively.

In his Modernising Planning Statement, published on 15 January 1998, my hon. Friend, the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning, set out a range of measures designed to make the planning system operate more efficiently and effectively. This included initiatives to improve the handling of planning applications.

In April 1998, the Government published good practice guides on development briefs and the one stop shop approach to development-related approvals. Other initiatives include funding of a good practice guide on 'Best Value' in planning being drawn up by the Planning Officers' Society; a review of consultation procedures for planning applications; and a review of procedures for handling listed building consent applications.

The Government are continuing to monitor closely local authorities' performance in reaching decisions on planning applications and publishes regular Planning Performance Checklists. My hon. Friend is currently holding a series of meetings with a selection of local authorities in each English region to discuss handling of planning applications as well as development plan preparation. These meetings are part of our wider commitment to work in partnership with local government to improve the planning system as part of the Modernising Planning initiative and provide an opportunity to share good practice experience.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67843]

The Attorney-General: My department has not recently published a White or Green Paper. However, the independent report of the Review of the Crown Prosecution Service (the Glidewell Report) published on 1 June 1998 was made available on the Internet and could therefore be converted for use by the visually impaired.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office confirmed in his reply on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296, that the Cabinet Office will shortly issue guidelines on the arrangements for publishing White and Green Papers; and I would expect any such publications produced by this office to comply with that guidance.

TREASURY

Tax Harmonisation

12. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has had regarding EU tax harmonisation; and if he will make a statement. [66528]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chancellor gets a large number of representations on many subjects, particularly in advance of a Budget. The Government's position on EU tax issues was set out on 9 December 1998, Official Report, columns 388–422, by me and my hon. Friend the Member for Tyneside, North (Mr. Byers) when he was Chief Secretary to the Treasury.

Single Currency

15. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the preparations needed for United Kingdom entry into the single European currency. [66531]

Ms Hewitt: The UK economy needs a period of stability and settled convergence before we could join the single currency. The Government are committed to a programme of economic reforms which are both in the national economic interest and which should help to deliver the stability needed to prepare us for membership.

In addition we will issue an outline National Changeover Plan early this year which will set out the practical steps that would need to be taken if the UK decides to join.

Windfall Tax

16. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount to be raised by the windfall tax in the current year. [66532]

Mrs. Roche: The second and final instalment of the Windfall Tax was due in December and £2.6 billion was collected. In total, the Windfall Tax raised £5.2 billion.

22. Ms Shipley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further plans he has for the proceeds of the windfall tax on the privatised utilities. [66538]

Mrs. Roche: The Windfall Tax has enabled the Government to embark on the New Deal—the biggest ever programme to get unemployed and economically inactive people into work. Over 300,000 people have already benefited from the New Deal so far, and over 60,000 have found jobs.

The Government have constantly extended and developed programmes under the New Deal since taking office. Its purpose is to give people new hope and new chances, and a route out of poverty and benefit dependency. This principle will guide future policy development, as resources allow.

Working Families Tax Credit

17. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made towards the implementation of the working families tax credit. [66533]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue is leading a joint project team with the Benefits Agency which is developing the detailed administrative arrangements for the new tax credit in time for its introduction later this year.

Orphan Assets

18. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy with regard to orphan assets. [66534]

Ms Hewitt: The Treasury's policy on orphan assets (inherited estates) of insurance companies was set out in the Treasury's response to the Treasury Select Committee report on personal pension misselling. This was published in the Committee's First Special Report (session 1998–99) on 18 January.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative

19. Mr. Reed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on discussions he has had with colleagues in Japan and Germany in advance of the G7 Finance Ministers meeting next month relating to the HIPC initiative. [66535]

Ms Hewitt: The HIPC initiative was discussed with all G7 partners, including Germany and Japan, and with other countries at the Annual Meetings of the IMF/World bank in Washington in October. The Chancellor also discussed the initiative with German Finance Minister Oskar Lafontaine in November. The HIPC initiative will next be discussed at the G7 Finance Ministers' and Central bank Governors' meeting in Bonn on 20 February following Chancellor Schroeder's announcement last week of a new German initiative on debt.

Royal National Lifeboat Institution

20. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to enable the Royal National Lifeboat Institution to recover value added tax on the cost of maintenance work to boathouses. [66536]

Dawn Primarolo: In common with all individuals and organisations, charities, including the RNLI, cannot reclaim VAT on the things that they buy which relate to their non-business activities.

Iraq

21. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he made of the impact on the contingency reserve of recent military action against Iraq. [66537]

Mr. Milburn: The cost of overseas operations will be considered against the Defence budget as a whole when agreeing the Spring Supplementary Estimates.

Youth Unemployment

23. Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current levels of youth unemployment. [66539]

Ms Hewitt: Youth claimant unemployment has fallen by over 100,000 since the general election, to stand at 315,000 last October. This fall has been spurred by the New Deal for young people unemployed for over six months, which has so far helped over 50,000 of them into jobs.

Withholding Tax

24. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on the proposed EU withholding tax. [66540]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) today, Official Report, column 465.

North Sea Oil

25. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to revise the current structure of the fiscal regime in respect of North sea oil; and if he will make a statement. [66541]

Mrs. Roche: We have no plans at present to revise the structure of the North Sea fiscal regime.

Low-income Families

26. Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact the working families tax credit will have on child poverty during its first year of operation. [66543]

Dawn Primarolo: This Government believe that, for those that can, work is the best way out of poverty. The Working Families Tax Credit, together with the National Minimum Wage and reform of National Insurance Contributions, will help to make work pay and encourage the move from welfare into work. Together, these reforms will provide a guaranteed income for families with children, who are working full-time, of £190 a week.

32. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to tackle the poverty trap in relation to taxes and benefits for people moving from unemployment into work. [66549]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have taken a number of steps to make work pay and help people move from welfare into work. The introduction of the National Minimum Wage, reform to National Insurance Contributions and the Working Families Tax Credit will all help to make people better off in work than out of work. Together, these reforms will provide a guaranteed income for families in full-time work of £190 a week.

33. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to help working families on low incomes. [66550]

35. Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about his plans to increase the net income of people in work. [66552]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have introduced a number of measures to increase the net income of low-income families. These include the introduction of the National Minimum Wage, reform of National Insurance Contributions and the introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit. Together, these reforms will provide a guaranteed income for families in full-time work of £190 a week.

Banking and Insurance Services

27. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the action his Department is taking following the Office of Fair Trading's recent recommendation that banking and insurance companies should provide better services for people on low incomes and benefits. [66544]

Ms Hewitt: We are studying the Director General's report.

Electricity Industry

28. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce a tax rebate system for embedded suppliers using the electricity distribution network. [66545]

Dawn Primarolo: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the findings of Lord Marshall's report on "Economic instruments and business use of energy". The Government are considering the recommendations carefully.

Euro

29. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has held with the Monetary Policy Committee on shadowing the euro. [66546]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have no intention of shadowing the euro.

34. Mr. Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has receiving calling for the United Kingdom to join the Euroland countries. [66551]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's policy on UK membership of EMU was set out clearly by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his statement to the House of Commons in October 1997. The key factor is whether the economic benefits of joining are clear and unambiguous. To make that decision the Chancellor of the Exchequer has set out five economic tests which would have to be met before the UK could join the single currency.

Public Service Agreements

30. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his plans for expenditure on the modernisation of the public services in respect of the Public Service Agreements. [66547]

Mr. Milburn: The Public Service Agreements set out the objectives and targets which we will deliver in return for the investment agreed in the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Agenda 2000

31. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the reasons for the omission of development aid as a priority in the programme of Agenda 2000. [66548]

Ms Hewitt: The Agenda 2000 negotiation will set the overall total for EC aid. During the subsequent discussions, which will determine how this amount is allocated between programmes, the UK will argue strongly for an increase in the share going to the world's poorest countries.

Public Pay Awards

36. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would have been the cost of not staging last year's pay awards to (a) nurses, midwives and health visitors, (b) professions allied to medicine and (c) teachers. [66553]

Mr. Milburn: It would not have been possible to meet the commitment to keep within spending plans without staging last year's recommendations by the pay review bodies.

Smuggling

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what quantity of beer has been seized by HM Customs officials at Portsmouth Ferry Port in each quarter since January 1993. [67130]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is not available in this form. Specific figures are available by each financial year for the quantity of beer from within the European Union seized by Excise Verification Officers at Portsmouth since April 1993.

Year	Litres
1993–94	20,753
1994–95	10,874
1995–96	41,747
1996–97	79,397
1997–98	38,906
1998–99	[1]40,629

[1] April to December

Inheritance Tax Exemption

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for the Brighton and Hove, East Sussex and West Sussex local authority areas (a) the locations of land in respect of which conditional exemption from inheritance tax is currently allowed, (b) the number of cases in which such exemption has been lost or deferred tax charged as a result of breaches of the conditions related to exemption in 1998–99 and (c) the location of land in respect of which exemption has been lost or deferred tax charged in each of the last five years because of breaches of the relevant conditions. [67204]

Dawn Primarolo: The normal rules on taxpayer confidentiality currently prevent me from providing the requested information.

The Finance Act 1998 strengthened the conditions of the inheritance tax exemption, including the rules on disclosure of information to the public. The Inland Revenue are accordingly reviewing existing exemptions with a view to re-negotiating owners' undertakings so as to secure publication of information about tax-exempt assets and the arrangements on public access. Once the undertakings have been revised, that information will be available on the Internet.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67848]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296.

The Treasury will make arrangements for White and Green Papers to be made available on disk in a form accessible to the visually impaired, as and when this service is requested.

Currently, all public Treasury documents are produced in the optimum typeface sizes for legibility. These are also available on the Internet, where they can be heard by visually handicapped people who have access to a "talking computer", or can be displayed and printed out as text of any size.

Tax Burden

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average overall tax burden for a taxpayer in the United Kingdom for each of the last five years. [67731]

Dawn Primarolo: Information on income tax as a percentage of median income for each of the last five years is shown in table 2.8 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1998, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Estimating the impact of indirect taxes is imprecise as spending patterns vary widely between households with the same composition and income.

Environmentally Sustainable Economy

Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to encourage an environmentally sustainable economy in Britain. [67278]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The Government's approach to sustainable development is based on four broad objectives: maintenance of high and stable levels of growth and employment; social progress which recognises the needs of everyone; effective protection of the environment and prudent use of natural resources.

The Comprehensive Spending Review included a range of measures expected to make a positive impact on the environment, including additional money for the integrated transport strategy which will help tackle congestion and air pollution; more money for energy efficiency to help alleviate fuel poverty and meet our commitments on climate change; and more money to countryside programmes.

The tax system also has an important role to play in underpinning this strategy. Important changes were made to fuel duties and the landfill tax in the first two Budgets. The Government will continue to explore the scope for using the tax system to deliver environmental objectives, in line with the Statement of Intent on environmental taxation.

VAT

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 14 January 1998, Official Report, columns 286–87, if he will state (a) what further key elements will be necessary to change the current transitional system of VAT to a definitive (Common) system other than those contained in Commission Document COM (96) 328 FIN, (b) when any Resolution was passed by either House relating thereto and (c) what consideration has been given to related proposals in the ECOFIN Council, or any of its subsidiary bodies. [67936]

Dawn Primarolo: Commission document COM (96) 328 FIN is a comprehensive and detailed work programme, with a supporting timetable, for changing the current transitional EC VAT system into an origin-based definitive or Common system. To implement this Common VAT system no further key elements are required.

European Commission (Fraud)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the establishment of the Inquiry into Allegations of Fraud within the European Commission, setting out (a) to whom the report of the Inquiry will be addressed, (b) the names of those who will carry out the Inquiry, (c) the terms of reference of the Inquiry and (d) the Inquiry's (i) powers and (ii) procedure. [67932]

Ms Hewitt: On 14 January the European Parliament adopted a resolution calling, among other things for a committee of independent experts to be convened under the auspices of the Parliament and the Commission with a mandate to examine the way in which the Commission detects and deals with fraud, mismanagement and nepotism. The President of the European Commission agreed to the establishment of such a committee.

I understand that the composition and modus operandi of the committee have not yet been finalised.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [67493]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The current standard mileage rates are as follows:

Up to 1500cc: 35.7p

1501–2000cc: 40p

Over 2000cc: 43p

Public transport rate 22.3p.

The Department continues to encourage the use of public transport by providing enhanced public transport information; encouraging alternative forms of transport by providing additional cycle storage areas and by limiting the use of private transport for business purposes.

Tax System

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received calling for a review of the tax system for older taxpayers in order to provide a simplified system tailored to their needs. [67318]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 January 1999]: I have received a number of representations on this issue.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times he or his junior Ministers have paid official visits to (a) the Czech Republic, (b) Poland, (c) Hungary, (d) Slovenia, (e) Estonia and (f) Cyprus since May 1997; and what was the purpose of each visit. [67701]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 27 January 1999]: The Treasury is actively pursuing contacts with all of the applicants to the European Union, including inward and outward visits at official and ministerial level.

In addition the Financial Secretary visited Customs and Excise's UK International Assistance Programme in Prague, Czech Republic between 6–8 November 1997.

Targeted Economic Assistance (Pensioners)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the need for targeted economic assistance to areas which have high concentrations of retired persons. [67256]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 27 January 1999]: Government spending on retired persons is targeted at individuals rather than at areas. The allocation of extra economic assistance through regeneration spending to particular areas is determined by the Index of Local Deprivation, a comprehensive index made up of a broad range of indicators of deprivation. The Government are also examining the issues which affect retired people at a national and local level in a number of ways, through the Performance and Innovation Unit's work on Active Ageing, the Better Government for Older People pilot areas, the Health Action Zones and other national and area based initiatives.

Charity Taxation

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish his consultation document on charity taxation. [67907]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 27 January 1999]: The consultation document will be published by the time of the Budget.

Advance Corporation Tax

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when his Department will publish regulations enabling unrelieved surplus advance corporation tax to be utilised by companies. [67909]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 January 1999]: We expect to publish the regulations shortly.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many incorrect tax demands have been issued by the Inland Revenue since 20 December 1998. [67908]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 January 1999]: The Inland Revenue issues taxpayers with Statements of Account (not demands) which are a statement of the individual's tax position and include a payslip to enable the taxpayer to make payment if one is due.

The latest issue comprised 3.4 million statements. The Inland Revenue are aware that 870,000 of those statements contained superfluous information which could have misled taxpayers into making a wrong payment.

The Inland Revenue has issued letters of explanation and apology to all affected taxpayers in time to alert them before payment became due.

Pensions Mis-selling

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the mis-selling of AVCs; and what plans he has to extend the current investigation into pensions mis-selling to include AVCs. [67677]

Ms Hewitt: None. The Financial Services Authority issued a report on the possible mis-selling of FSAVCs on 19 October 1998.

Health and Education

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his plans for public spending on health and education for the next three years. [66542]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Government's spending plans for the next three years on health and education were set out in the Comprehensive Spending Review White Paper, "Modern Public Services for Britain: Investing in Reform". We are providing money for modernisation, we will invest an extra £40 billion in health and education over the coming three years.

Private Finance Initiative

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the value for money to public funds of using PFI for financing public sector capital developments. [66524]

Mr. Milburn: The Private Finance Initiative is one of the forms of public-private partnerships by which the Government are harnessing private sector finance, innovation and management skills to modernise our infrastructure and improve public services. This Government, unlike the last, are making the PFI work in areas such as the National Health Service. Since the election we have signed £4 billion worth of PFI deals.

Economic Growth

Sir David Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will revise his estimate of economic growth for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [66527]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's next economic forecast will be published as part of the forthcoming Financial Statement and Budget Report.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Home Detention Curfew scheme will be implemented. [68426]

Mr. Straw: The Home Detention Curfew Scheme, under which selected short term prisoners may spend up to the last two months of the custodial part of their sentence under a curfew enforced by electronic monitoring, will commence on 28 January. The scheme will provide a managed transition between prison and living in the community. It will deprive them of their liberty for a major part of the day and also provide some structure and order into often disorganised lives. No prisoner will be allowed on the scheme without a risk assessment, and those who fail to comply with the conditions of the scheme may be recalled to prison.

Deportation Orders

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 330, on deportation orders, how many (a) failed asylum seekers and (b) immigration offenders were removed in 1996 and 1997; and how many have yet to be removed. [67338]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information I gave on improved removals performance on 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 330, in response to the hon. Member's question on deportation orders, related specifically to removals and voluntary departures following deportation and illegal entry action. That information, therefore, included asylum applicants who were removed as a consequence of such action but excluded all removals under port procedures.

The numbers of deportation and illegal entry removals and voluntary departures effected during 1996 and 1997 are given in the table. The figures exclude removals under port procedures. The latest snapshot, taken on 4 January 1999, indicates that the number of persons against whom deportation or illegal entry action has been initiated but not yet completed stands at approximately 67,000. In the great majority of these cases, however, there exists at least one legal or similar barrier to immediate removal, such as: an outstanding application for asylum or for leave to remain on another basis; appeals; further representations; Judicial Review; documentation problems; custodial sentences; and absconding. These factors serve to limit the rate at which removals can be effected and, in some cases, may result in the granting of leave to remain rather than removal.

Removals [1] following enforcement action [2], 1996 to 1997

	Number of persons
	1996	1997
Asylum applicants[3]	2,120	3,050
Non-asylum applicants	3,280	3,530
Total enforcement[2] removals[1]	5,400	6,580

[1] Includes "voluntary" departures after deportation or illegal entry action had been initiated.

[2] Persons subject to deportation action under the provisions of sections 3(5) and 3(6) of the Immigration Act 1971 or illegal entry action under section 33(1) of the Immigration Act 1971.

[3] Persons who had applied for asylum at some stage.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum were received from nationals of (a) the Czech Republic and (b) Slovakia in each month since 1 May 1997. [67856]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table. The hon. Gentleman will note that the recent trend is downwards in respect of both counties.

Either-way Cases

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of defendants charged with an either way offence and electing for trial in the Crown Court pleaded guilty or had their case disposed of without a trial in the Crown Court (a) in each of the last 10 years before 1 October 1997 and (b) since 1 October 1997. [67572]

Mr. Boateng: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he had made of the operation of section 49 of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996; and if he will make a statement. [67578]

Mr. Boateng: Section 49 of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996, which has been in force since October 1997, provides for defendants in either-way cases to be asked to indicate their plea before the magistrates decide whether to accept or decline jurisdiction. The objective was to allow cases which would previously have been committed for trial, and in which a guilty plea was indicated, to be dealt with more quickly, either by the magistrates themselves where the appropriate sentence (after any discount for the guilty plea) was within the court's powers, or if not through being committed to the Crown Court for sentence.

It is too early to make a final assessment of the effect of this provision. The indications so far are that substantially fewer cases are being committed for trial, but that there has also been a significant increase in the numbers committed for sentence. It is estimated (on the basis of data up to June last year) that committals for trial have fallen by 1,500 defendants a month and committals for sentence have risen by 1,300 defendants a month. Work is in hand to assess whether there is scope for magistrates' courts to dispose of more of the cases which they now commit for sentence.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of defendants charged with an either way offence elected for trial in the Crown Court (a) in each of the 15 years before 1 October 1997 and (b) since 1 October 1997. [67571]

Mr. Boateng: The question cannot be answered from the data collected centrally. However, data from the Attorney-General on the proportion of Crown Prosecution Service either way cases committed for trail to the Crown Court and finalised following the election by the defendant since the year ending September 1988 (earliest year ending September available) are as follows:

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of either way cases were dealt with by magistrates courts (a) in each of the 10 years before 1 October 1997 and (b) since 1 October 1997; [67574]

(2) what proportion of either way cases were committed for sentence by the magistrates courts to the Crown Court (a) in each of the 10 years before 1 October 1997 and (b) since 1 October 1997. [67576]

Mr. Boateng: The information is given in the table.

Police Funding

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown, by police force area, of the total funding available to the police in each of the last 10 years. [67584]

Mr. Boateng: The net expenditure by each police authority in each of the last 10 years is set out in the table. A breakdown of the funding components of these totals is not available.

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples) on 19 January 1999, Official Report, column 417, if he will list the occasions on which Ministers in his Department have used RAF flights since 1 May 1997. [67745]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples) on 19 November 1998, Official Report, columns 737–38, and 9 December 1998, Official Report, columns 213–14, which list the flights made between 2 May 1997 and 9 December 1998.

Since 10 December 1998, Ministers in this Department have used an RAF aircraft on one occasion, when I flew from Northolt to Culdrose and back this month, to open Falmouth Police Station.

CS Spray

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times police forces have sent to his Department a written report on the circumstances of an operational use of CS spray for public order purposes since 1990. [67610]

Mr. Boateng: CS spray has only been in use since 1996 and is not intended for use in situations of serious public disorder. It is intended primarily for the personal protection of police officers, and may be used in certain situations where suspects are disorderly either individually or in group situations and violence is threatened or likely. A written report has been obtained in one case, and information has been received about two others in which CS spray has been used, in response to public concern or inquiries from Members of Parliament and others.

CS dispersed in smoke for use in situations of serious public disorder has been available to all police forces since 1968 for use as a tactical option. It has not been used in England and Wales during the time period in question.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what circumstances reports of the Police Complaints Authority into particular cases are made public; [67870]

(2) what criteria are used to assess whether a report of the Police Complaints Authority into a specific complaint is made public; [67869]

(3) how many reports of the Police Complaints Authority into specific complaints have been made public; and if he will list them. [67868]

Mr. Boateng: Complaint investigation reports are treated as confidential and are not published. The Police Complaints Authority is restricted by section 98 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 from publishing information received in the course of its work other than in the form of a general summary.

In its report on police disciplinary and complaints procedures, published in December 1997, the Home Affairs Committee recommended that the terms of section 98 should be relaxed to give the Authority greater freedom to explain its work to complainants and the public. The Government accepted that recommendation and will implement it when legislative time permits.

Under section 97(2) of the 1984 Act, the Police Complaints Authority may report to the Secretary of State on any matters coming to their notice to which they consider his attention should be drawn by reason of their gravity or other exceptional circumstances. The report is laid before Parliament and published. Only two such reports have been made by the Police Complaints Authority, concerning the investigation of the West Midlands Serious Crime Squad and the Stephen Lawrence case.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make further appointments to the Police Complaints Authority. [68693]

Mr. Straw: I have recently appointed Mrs. Molly Meacher to the position of Deputy Chairman of the Authority, following the retirement of Mr. John Cartwright.

Mrs. Meacher has served as a member of the Authority since 1994, and her previous posts include that of Adviser to the Chairman of the Russian Federal Employment Service; Mental Health Act Commissioner; Health Trust non-executive director; and director of Action Trust (now the Employment Policy Institute). Her appointment is for three years with effect from 1 February 1999.

Roger Casement

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an inquiry to investigate whether the diaries of Roger Casement released by his Department during his trial were forgeries. [67866]

Mr. Boateng: I have not received any formal requests to review the case of Roger Casement, and currently have no plans to set up any such inquiry.

Correspondence

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received in relation to the activities of Mr. X whose name has been provided to him; and if he will make a statement; [67873]

(2) in what capacity Mr. X, whose name has been provided to him, has been (a) employed by and (b) served Her Majesty's Government. [67874]

Mr. Straw: The hon. Member's letter of 22 January gave insufficient information for me to be able to answer the Question and I have written to him accordingly.

Diarmuid O'Neill

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on what action is to be taken following the report of the Police Complaints Authority into the case of Diarmuid O'Neill. [67867]

Mr. Boateng: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the report of the police investigation, which was supervised by the Police Complaints Authority (PCA), was sent to the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) on 20 November. As at 26 January, no decisions had been taken by the CPS about bringing to criminal charges. No decision on disciplinary action will be taken by the PCA, and the Metropolitan Police, until the CPS have decided whether to institute criminal proceedings.

Voluntary Sector Grants

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to publish the relevant statistics covering central Government department grants to the voluntary sector over the last two years. [67725]

Mr. Boateng: Information relating to grants made by Government Departments to the voluntary sector over the period 1995–96 to 1997–98 is currently being collected. The figures will be published in the Spring.

Police Stations (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police stations there were in Wales in (a) 1976, (b) 1996 and (c) at the last available date. [67457]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. An alphabetical list of police stations in Wales and the rest of the United Kingdom can be found in the gazetteer of the Police and Constabulary Almanac, a copy of which is in the Library.

An Audit Commission study of police force estates has been collecting information on the current number of police stations, by force, in England and Wales. The Report is due to be published in the Spring.

Prison Deaths

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many self-inflicted deaths occurred in prisons in the last year; what action his Department is taking to reduce the number of self-inflicted deaths; and if he will make a statement. [67933]

Mr. George Howarth: There were 83 self-inflicted deaths in prisons in England and Wales last year (80 male, 3 female). The Government are committed to doing everything possible to try to reduce the incidence of self-inflicted deaths in prisons. My noble Friend Lord Williams chairs a regular meeting between the Prison Service and a range of representatives from interested groups including: the Samaritans; Howard League; Prison Reform Trust; Inquest; and the Board of Visitors, to discuss how they can work more closely together. We welcome the current thematic review of suicide and self-harm conducted by Her Majesty Chief Inspector of Prisons, the report of which is soon to be published. We look forward to any recommendations he has in this important area of work.

The Prison Service is developing a range of additional measures including: identifying and dissemination of good practice by reintroducing a suicide awareness bulletin; reviewing screening and induction processes to identify those prisoners at risk more effectively so that they can be cared for appropriately; reviewing the use of unfurnished cells for the suicidal; improving cell design to provide a safer environment; identifying alternatives to the use of strip cell conditions in the care of the suicidal; and conducting further research into suicide and self-harm.

The Prison Service is also increasing the involvement of external interest groups through a regular working group and in projects and research into suicides. There has been for some time a close working relationship with the Samaritans, who of course have a great deal of expertise in this area. Listener schemes, whereby prisoners offer support to fellow prisoners, are now established in over two thirds of prisons in England and Wales, the majority of which are supported by the Samaritans.

In addition, instructions and guidance to staff on caring for the suicidal are being re-examined and are soon to be issued as a new Prison Service Order.

Police Stations

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police stations there were, per police force, in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [67918]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. An alphabetical list of police stations in the United Kingdom can be found in the gazetteer of the Police and Constabulary Almanac, a copy of which is in the Library.

An Audit Commission study of police force estates has been collecting information on the current number of police stations, by force, in England and Wales. The Report is due to be published in the Spring.

Prisoners (Activities)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average level of purposeful activity per week undertaken by inmates, broken down into (a) education and training, (b) work and (c) rehabilitation programmes, in each prison service establishment, in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [67917]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the average weekly time spent in purposeful activity by prisoners in each establishment for each of the last three years is given in the table.

Work is defined as time spent in support to works and maintenance staff, workshops, farms, gardens, kitchens and other domestic work. Education and training includes daytime education, vocational training courses, construction and industrial training courses and evening education classes. The Prison Service does not record separately time spent engaged in rehabilitation programmes.

Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review those terms of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 which were not incorporated into the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989, with special reference to the provisions relating to conspiracies other than terrorist conspiracies; and if he will make a statement. [67930]

Mr. Boateng: Section 8 of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 requires the Secretary of State to lay before the House at least once in every 12 months a report on the working of the Act. The provisions relating to conspiracy in sections 5–7 of the 1998 Act will be reviewed separately from the other provisions. The appointment of an independent reviewer of these provisions is currently under consideration and an announcement on the appointment will be made in due course.

Prisons

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons he has jurisdiction for, setting out (a) the number of places the prisons were originally built for, (b) the number of inmates currently in each prison and (c) the percentage overcrowding. [67952]

Mr. George Howarth: The table lists the certified normal accommodation, population and percentage overcrowding at each prison establishment for which the Home Secretary has jurisdiction on 18 December 1998.

The Prison Service uses the concept of certified normal accommodation (CNA) to define the uncrowded capacity of each establishment. For prisons built in recent years, this is equivalent to original capacity. The CNA measures can also be applied to older prisons, particularly those built in the last century, whose original capacity is no longer relevant because of significant building and or modernisation work.

Police Officers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police officers have had their application for early retirement on health grounds refused during the past 12 months for each police authority in England and Wales; [67785]

(2) how many police officers have applied for early retirement on health grounds whose applications have not yet been determined for each police authority in England and Wales. [67786]

Mr. Boateng: The information is not held centrally.

Police Officers (Sick Leave)

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers currently on sick leave have had their pay (a) reduced by 50 per cent. and (b) stopped altogether for each police authority in England and Wales. [67787]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not collected centrally, and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police Officers (Years of Service)

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of police officers in post have more than 25 years' service for each police authority in England and Wales. [67789]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not collected centrally, and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Greater London Police Authority

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the annual cost of the proposed new police authority for Greater London. [67791]

Kate Hoey: The Government have made no estimate of the annual cost of the proposed new police authority for London. In line with the position outside London, the costs of the Metropolitan Police Authority will be borne out of the budget it receives for the policing of the Metropolitan Police District.

Police Officers (Over 50)

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing (a) the number and (b) the percentage of officers in post aged 50 years and over for each police authority in England and Wales. [67788]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not collected centrally, and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police Pensions

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the percentage of revenue budget apportioned to the payment of police pensions for each police authority in England and Wales. [67790]

Mr. Boateng: Estimates of police pension costs for 1998–99 are set out in the table.

Police Escorts

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the cost in police time of escorting wide or exceptionally loaded vehicles for the last year for which figures are available for each police authority in England and Wales. [67792]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not available centrally but it has been estimated by the Association of Chief Police Officers that the costs are over £7 million a year.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the review of the guidelines covering the use of plastic bullets will be completed; and when he will publish his conclusions. [67997]

Mr. Boateng: Consultation is continuing with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Royal Ulster Constabulary about whether any changes to the current Home Office guidances covering the use of baton rounds in England and Wales are required. Any such change will be announced in due course.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take action to abolish the use of plastic bullets as a means of riot control in the United Kingdom. [67998]

Mr. Boateng: The use of baton rounds is one tactical option available to police in dealing with situations of serious public disorder. There are no plans to remove this option from the police service in England and Wales, for which the Home Secretary has responsibility.

MI5 (History)

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make MI5's history of its operations from 1908 to 1945 available for commercial publication. [67981]

Mr. Straw: The Public Record Office released the first tranche of Security Service records relating to World War II on 27 January. Records relating to the period 1909–19 were released, in November 1997. The Security Service is reviewing the remaining records covering World War II and those for the inter-war years.

Once released by the Public Record Office, such records are in the public domain but may be subject to copyright in the usual way.

The Lord Chancellor's Advisory Council on Public Records, chaired by Lord Woolf, has recently conducted, at my request, a review of the criteria used by the Security Service in deciding whether to retain files on grounds of historical interest. I will be publishing their report and announcing my conclusions on their recommendations as soon as possible.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness and financial efficiency of the Commission for Racial Equality. [68186]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A study of the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE) was conducted by a senior Home Office official in July 1998 for budgetary purposes. This raised no serious concerns about the financial propriety of the CRE's expenditure of public money. It did, however, make recommendations to improve its business planning, including closer working links with the Home Office. Officials are in regular contact with the CRE and are taking these forward.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he met the former Commission for Racial Equality member, Mrs. Blondel Cluff; what detailed response he has made to the paper on the Commission for Racial Equality which she submitted to the Home Office; and if he will place a copy of his response to her paper in the Library. [68185]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I met Mrs. Cluff on 6 July 1998. At this meeting she passed me her report.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary wrote a private letter to Mrs. Cluff thanking her for her service on the Commission. In this he said that her points on the role and philosophy of the Commission would help inform the Government's thinking on the future shape for race relations legislation.

SCOTLAND

Spend-to-save Programme

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail by project of over £10,000 the moneys made available to local authorities under the spend-to-save programme for 1997–98; what projects have been earmarked for funding in (i) 1998–99 and (ii) 1999–2000, and how much funding has been allocated to each; what is the proposed total budget for the spend-to-save programme for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65935]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The spend-to-save scheme was introduced in 1997–1998 to allow councils flexibility between capital and revenue spending to deal with costs arising from reductions in revenue budgets. The spend-to-save initiatives and the amount of capital allocations surrendered for the purpose are entirely a matter for individual authorities. £37.3 million and £12.171 million was used in 1997–98 and 1998–99 respectively for spend-to-save purposes. There are no plans to continue the scheme beyond this year. From 1 July, local government finance will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

New Futures Fund

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of allocations of money over £10,000 made under the New Futures Fund in the financial year 1997–98; if he will list the allocations over £10,000 already made under this programme for financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; if he will give (a) the amount allocated to running costs and (b) the total funds available for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65800]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The operational management of the New Futures Fund (NFF) is the responsibility of Scottish Enterprise (SE) and Highlands and Islands Enterprise (HIE) and I will ask their Chairmen to write to the hon. Member. The funding for the NFF is provided from within the financial allocations made to SE and HIE and as such will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament.

Performance Pool Awards

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the percentage of the NHS performance pool money announced by his Department on 18 March 1998 for NHS trusts which met waiting list targets which has been allocated; if he will give the value of such money distributed to each health trust; what criteria were used to make awards; and if he will publish the target levels for waiting lists for each health trust and the actual current level of waiting list. [65807]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: No allocations have yet been made from the money set aside to reward good performance by NHS Trusts in reducing waiting lists. The target levels for waiting lists reductions are held at Health Board level and are given in Table A. Waiting lists figures, by Health Board, at 30 September 1998 are set out in Table B. Waiting lists data, by Health Board, is published quarterly, and the figures for 31 December 1998 are not yet available. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

NHS Building Projects

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the current building projects in the NHS, with the exception of Edinburgh Royal Infirmary, of value greater than £100,000; which of these involve PFI contracts and what is the PFI share of the cost of each project; what will be the (a) annual cost and (b) total cost to the public purse of each of these projects over the next five years, stating the amounts to be paid under PFI contracts; if he will list the property transfers made as part of the PFI contracts in each case; which of these buildings will be in public ownership; and if he will make a statement. [65933]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Other than the new Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh, there are currently 35 building projects with a capital value greater than £100,000 under way in the NHSiS. These projects are listed as follows:

Aberdeen Royal Infirmary Service Reconfiguration

Arbroath Infirmary Redevelopment

Arran Day Hospital, Ailsa Hospital, Ayr

Ashludie Community Hospital

Bo'ness Community Hospital

Borders Mental Health Renewal Programme

Crosshouse Hospital Service Developments

Cumbernauld Health Centre

Dumfries Community Extended Treatment Unit

Dundee Dental Hospital Upgrade

Dundee Limb Fitting Centre

Dundee Palliative Care Day Hospital

Edinburgh Western General Redevelopment

3 Health Care Houses, Edinburgh

Galashiels Health Centre

Glasgow Royal Infirmary Maternity and Plastic Surgery Development

Glasgow Southern General Neuroscience Ward Upgrade

Glasgow Southern General Prosthetics Unit

Glasgow Western General Infectious Diseases Unit

Glasgow Western General Linear Accelerator Bunkers

GP Premises in Orkney

Hairmyres Hospital (DGH Replacement)

IPCU and ICCU at St. John's, Livingston

Law Hospital (DGH Replacement)

Learning Disabilities Nursing Home, Edinburgh

Lerwick Health Centre

Old Irvine Road Clinic, Kilmarnock

Renal Endoscopy Unit at Monklands Hospital

Scalloway Health Centre

Southern Isles Hospital, Balivanich

Special Care Baby Unit at Ninewells, Dundee

Stranraer Resource Centre

Turriff Hospital

Waverley Park, Glasgow

Woodilee Hospital Reprovision.

In addition, there may be other projects which fall within NHS Trust and Health Board delegated limits and for which information is not held centrally.

Of these projects two are being procured through PFI, namely, the new Hairmyres Hospital and the new Law Hospital. The capital value of the facilities being procured through these projects is £67.5 million for Hairmyres Hospital and £100 million for Law Hospital. The facilities will be designed, built, financed and operated by the private sector and the NHS Trusts will enter into 25 to 30 year contracts for the use of the facilities.

NHS Trusts pay capital charges (depreciation and a return on capital employed) on all publicly owned assets which they use. For facilities provided through the PFI, no capital charges will be paid but the Trust will instead pay the private sector provider for the use of the facility.

No payments will be made to the PFI provider or costs incurred prior to the facility coming into use. Over the next 5 years the total running costs of the facility (including the cost of the PFI contract) and the PFI contract costs will be as detailed in the table.

Year	New Hairmyres hospital Total running cost	New Hairmyres hospital PFI contract	New Law hospital Total running cost	New Law hospital PFI contract

Total	139,802	35,483	212,406	55,890

As part of the PFI contract for the new Hairmyres Hospital 52 acres of surplus land at Hairmyres was included in the deal. No land transfers were included in the Law deal.

Neither of the new facilities will be in public ownership.

School Rationalisations

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by project of over £10,000 the moneys made available to local authorities for school rationalisations for the financial year 1997–98; what projects have been earmarked for funding in financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; how much funding has been allocated to each; what is the proposed total budget for school rationalisations for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65930]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Under special arrangements, which apply only for financial year 1998–99, £15 million has been distributed to the eight authorities listed to assist them in improving the facilities and buildings at schools involved in rationalisation plans in their areas. The distribution of the resources is not tied to specific rationalisation projects. It is, of course, open to authorities to allocate funds from their general capital resources in support of school rationalisation. From 1 July 1999, local government finance, including local authorities' responsibilities for schools funding will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

New Housing Partnership

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of allocations of money over £10,000 made under the New Housing Partnership in the financial year 1997–98 indicating allocations over £10,000 already made under the New Housing Partnership for financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000, and further indicating (a) the amount allocated to running costs and (b) the total funds available for each of the next three financial years. [65954]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The information is contained in the table.

Allocations for New Housing Partnership projects have still to be made over the three years from 1999. It is not possible to differentiate between capital and running costs. Earmarked sums for each of the three years are:

	£ million
1999–2000	23
2000–2001	95
2001–2002	160

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

NHS Modernisation Programme

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of allocations of money over £10,000 made under the modernisation programme for the NHS in Scotland announced on 5 November 1998 for financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000; and if he will give the total funds available for each of the next three financial years. [65810]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Modernisation Programme comes into effect from April 1999. No allocations have therefore, been made in 1998–99. £140 million is being made available for the modernisation programme in 1999–2000. The level of funds to be made available in 2000–01 and 2001–02 has still to be determined. Allocations for 1999–2000 have been made as follows:

	£ million
Waiting list initiative	44.5
Bridging finance	12.5
GP staff and premises	2.5
Blood products etc.	13.8
Support for local health co-operatives	13.5

The balance of funds will be distributed over the next financial year. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Project Funding Allocation

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list broken down by year and amount for each of the next three financial years those projects of value greater than £50,000 which have been allocated funds from the money announced by press release by his Department on 17 March 1998; and what percentage of the money remains unallocated. [65806]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The Scottish Office issued three news releases on 17 March 1998 about public expenditure allocations announcing an additional £44 million for the NHS in Scotland; £21 million of additional funding for education; and an increase of £4.5 million in funding for rural transport. From 1 July 1999 these will be matters for the Scottish Parliament. The information requested in relation to each of these is as follows:

Health

An additional £44.5 million has been added to the baseline of the NHS in Scotland specifically to tackle waiting lists.

In 1999–2000, Health Boards will use these resources to provide full funding for 196 strategic projects established during the current year and designed to secure long-term, sustained reductions in waiting lists and waiting times. The Boards will be monitoring and auditing the progress and success of these projects and will allocate funding to them in 2000–01 and in subsequent years, as appropriate. I have arranged for a list, by Health Board, of the 104 projects which will cost in excess of £50,000 in 1999–2000 to be placed in the Library.

Education

Additional spending of £19 million for schools and child care was provided to local authorities in the current year under the normal allocation arrangements. Details are not available at this time of individual projects undertaken by those authorities. Additional funding of £1.4 million for further education was directed to colleges to assist in the transitional period following a change in funding methodology. No specific projects were involved in this allocation. Funding announced for the University for Industry (£880,000) will be utilised for the continued development costs of the project.

Rural Transport

£4.5 million per year for three years is being invested in the Rural Transport Funding Package. In 1998–99 £3.5 million has been earmarked for allocation to local authorities to provide additional public passenger transport services; it is for the local authorities to decide which public transport services they intend to fund and information about projects greater than £50,000 is not held centrally. The Scottish Office has issued 75 per cent. of the funding for this financial year; the remaining 25 per cent. is expected to be issued in the near future.

A further £600,000 has been earmarked in this financial year for community transport projects. The three community transport projects awarded grant amounts greater than £50,000, and the spread of payments over the three financial years involved, are listed in the table.

Rural community transport projects greater than £50,000

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	Total
Annandale Community Transport Project	70,900	6,750	10,020	87,670
Handicabs (Mid/East Lothian)	31,500	15,000	15,000	61,500
Handicabs (West Lothian)	31,500	15,000	15,000	61,500

Grants of £240,000 to Highlands and Islands Enterprise (HIE) and £160,000 to Scottish Enterprise (SE) have been allocated to assist rural petrol stations in 1989–99. Decisions about the specific allocation of grant for individual projects are a matter for HIE, SE and the relevant Local Enterprise Companies.

100 per cent. of the grant to local authorities for rural public passenger transport services and grant to assist rural petrol stations remains to be allocated in future years. 90 per cent. of the funding for rural community transport grant schemes remains available for allocation in future years.

Research and Development

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail by project of over £10,000 and in total, the assistance given to Scottish businesses for research and development in 1997–98; what projects have been earmarked for funding in (i) 1998–99 and (ii) 1999–2000, and how much funding has been allocated to each; what is the proposed budget for research and development assistance for each of the next three financial years; and what percentage of this will be under the control of the Scottish Parliament. [65934]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 18 January 1999]: My Department provides research and development support for business through the SMART: SCOTLAND, SPUR and SPUR^{plus} programmes, during 1997–98 and the current financial year also made payments to projects which are funded under the Regional Enterprise Grant for Innovation Scheme (which closed to applications on 31 December 1995).

The European Commission, other Government Departments, including the Department of Trade and Industry and the Ministry of Defence, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the local enterprise companies are also actively involved in assisting projects which fall within their spheres of responsibility. Information on these latter categories of grants is not held by my Department.

Total grant expenditure in 1997–98 on projects supported under SMART: SCOTLAND, SPUR, SPUR^{plus} and Regional Enterprise Grant for Innovation Scheme amounted to £3.6 million. During the period 1 April 1998 to 31 December 1998 the equivalent expenditure amounted to £2.5 million. As details of how this expenditure is broken down between individual projects of over £10,000 and of the funding allocated is lengthy, I have arranged for this information to be placed in the House Library.

No specific projects have been earmarked for funding in 1999–2000 and in the remainder of the current financial year since grant offers are made in response to project proposals submitted to my Department by businesses which meet the qualifying criteria for support.

The combined provision for SMART: SCOTLAND, SPUR and SPUR[plus] in each of the next three financial years is £4.3 million. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Scottish Parliament Building

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the architect Enric Miralles on (a) the estimated date of completion of the Scottish Parliament's new building and (b) the cost overrun on the project. [66706]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 21 January 1999]: I and officials in the Holyrood Parliament Project Team have regular contact and meetings with Enric Miralles of EMBT/RMJM on a range of issues about the new building at Holyrood. The project remains on programme and the budget for the building continues to be £50 million excluding VAT and fees.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the allegations made by the project manager for the Scottish Parliament's new building that he was prevented from taking the action necessary to solve problems of building cost overrun. [66704]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 21 January 1999]: Comprehensive project monitoring and reporting arrangements are in place for the Holyrood building. The allegations attributed to the former project manager have been examined. I am satisfied that the project remains on programme. The budget for the building continues to be £50 million excluding VAT and fees.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the criteria used in calculating the initial estimated building cost for the Scottish Parliament; and what factors have led to an increase in cost since that estimate. [66703]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 21 January 1999]: The initial calculation of the estimated building cost for the Scottish Parliament new building was carried out by independent cost consultants. It was based on the feasibility studies produce for the four sites originally considered for the Scottish Parliament building. Appropriate unit rates were applied for different categories of use reflecting the need for varying standards of finish across the building.

Detailed design work is being carried out by the architects for the building and cost consultants to monitor the implications. The budget for the building remains £50 million excluding VAT and fees.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reports he has received from the project manager of the Scottish Parliament's new building as to the prospects for the building being completed on time. [66705]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 21 January 1999]: Arrangements are in place whereby I and officials in the Holyrood Parliament Project Team receive regular information about progress against programme for the Holyrood building. Work on site has begun and the target date for completion continues to be autumn 2001.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67845]

Mr. Dewar: All Scottish Office White and Green Papers are published on my Department's web site and can be easily accessed in large type face.

I also refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296.

Motorail Service

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to assist the proposed revival of the Motorail service to take to their destinations by rail the cars of visitors to Scotland or of Scottish residents visiting southern England or the continent. [66632]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 26 January 1999]: This is a private commercial venture and its success will depend on demand for the service. I understand that the company has been seeking assistance from various sources, including Scottish Enterprise, local enterprise companies in the Highlands and the Scottish Tourist Board. Any project which seeks to take traffic off the roads is commendable and I will continue to watch the progress of this proposal with interest. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Student Fees

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the income to be raised by fees paid by students at Scottish universities and colleges in the current year and each of the next five years. [67501]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 January 1999]: Fees income for Scottish universities and colleges has been estimated for the years 1998–99—2001–02 only. Current estimates are set out in the table.

Academic Year	£ million[1]

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of the Boundary Commission for Scotland. [68571]

Mr. Dewar: I have appointed Dr. Elspeth Graham and Professor Gavin McCrone to the Boundary Commission for Scotland from 1 January 1999 to 31 December 2002.

The other members of the Commission are:

Madam Speaker—ex officio—Chairman;

The hon. Lady Cosgrove, appointed as Deputy Chairman by the Lord President of the Court of Session from 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1999.

Caesarean Births

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for each of the last 10 years, the percentage of live births delivered by caesarean section within each health authority in Scotland. [67671]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is as follows:

1. Prior to 1998, birth details were recorded only for the first two babies delivered. From 1998, where four or more babies are involved in a delivery, birth details are recorded for the first three babies delivered.
2. In multiple deliveries individual babies may have different modes of delivery.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the current number of pesticides approved for use in the UK; and how many have (a) full approval and (b) provisional approval; [66011]

(2) how many of the pesticides in use in the UK which have only provisional approval have had this status for (a) one to three years, (b) three to five years and (c) more than five years; and if he will make a statement. [66010]

Mr. Rooker: Pesticide approvals for agricultural products are issued by the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD); approvals for other products are issued by the Health and Safety Executive. A total of 3,905 pesticide products were, at 1 January 1999, approved by PSD. Of these, 1,871 had full approval for at least one use; 2,034 had provisional approval.

Pesticides may have more than one approval, each approval reflecting a different use. The 2,034 pesticides carrying provisional approval from the PSD had a total of 3,668 specific approvals on 1 January 1999. The age profile of these approvals was:

Less than one year: 1,182

One to three years: 1,735

Three to five years: 408

More than five years: 343.

I have asked the Pesticides Safety Directorate to look closely at the reasons for the continuation of provisional approvals beyond three years to ensure that the highest standards of safety are being maintained.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment the Pesticides Safety Directorate has made of the safety of the use of pesticides in school grounds and playing fields. [66009]

Mr. Rooker: All pesticides, including those for use in school grounds and playing fields, are subject to strict statutory control. In considering the approval or review of a pesticide for use on amenity turf (including school playing fields and grounds), an assessment is made of the risk to people exposed to the treated area. Only if this assessment shows that there is no unacceptable risk to children and adults from the treatment will approval be granted or allowed to continue. Detailed advice covering the use of pesticides in such areas is set out in the Code of Practice for the Use of Approved Pesticides in Amenity and Industrial Areas (the Orange Code), produced by the British Agrochemicals Association and the National Association of Agricultural Contractors. This Code has my full support as a contribution to good practice and safe use.

Mite Contamination

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the member states of the European Union which have set maximum levels for mite contamination in food. [66018]

Mr. Rooker: No member state of the European Union has legislation which specifically sets maximum levels for mite contamination in food.

Organic Farming

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations have been commissioned by his Department to operate the Organic Conversion Information Scheme in the United Kingdom; for which parts of the service these organisations are responsible; and if he will make a statement on the current level of interest in the scheme. [67659]

Mr. Morley: The Organic Conversion Information Services operates in England and Wales and is funded by the relevant Agriculture Departments. It comprises a telephone "Helpline" operated by the Soil Association and free on-farm advisory visits provided by the Elm Farm Research Centre. On-farm visits are also made by ADAS in Wales.

In Scotland, the Scottish Agricultural College is responsible for a telephone "Helpline". The advisory service in Northern Ireland is provided by the Department of Agriculture.

There was a significant increase in the number of inquiries received during 1998 and so far in 1999 throughout the UK.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the relative (a) direct and (b) indirect (1) subsidies afforded to and (2) energy used by (i) organic and (ii) conventional agriculture; and if he will make a statement. [67716]

Mr. Morley: In common with farmers who pursue conventional farming methods, organic farmers benefit from general support delivered under the Common Agricultural Policy, largely through the commodity regimes. They may also claim support under the Organic Aid Scheme and, where eligible, certain other agri-environmental schemes. An assessment of direct energy costs in agriculture is made as part of the annual estimates of agricultural incomes prepared by the Ministry. This assessment does not, however, distinguish between organic and conventional agriculture. Such a comparison would need to be statistically sound to be of value. The current diversity and small scale of many organic farming enterprises would, therefore, restrict the value of any statistical comparisons.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the amount of farmland (a) converted, (b) under conversion and (c) considering conversion to organic farming; and if he will make a statement on the estimated trend and geographical spread. [67692]

Mr. Morley: As at 31 December 1998, there were 25,158 ha of converted organic land and 18,712 ha of land in conversion, in England. It is not possible reliably to estimate the amount of farmland being considered for conversion but there is a heightened level of interest from prospective organic farmers as evidenced by a substantial increase in inquiries received by the Organic Conversion Information Service. The south and west of England have a proportionally higher number of organic producers than the rest of England.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's research budget for 1999; how much will be allocated to organic farming systems; how the organic research budget is allocated; and how his Department ensures that research is (a) co-ordinated, (b) not duplicating other work and (c) meeting the needs of the organic sector. [67712]

Mr. Morley: MAFF's research budget for 1999–2000 has not been finalised but it is likely to be in order of £127m. £2.1m will be allocated to organic farming. The organic farming research budget is allocated by the Ministry's Organic Farming Unit and the Chief Scientist's Group with advice from the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency, and taking account of the recommendations of the UKROFS R&D Committee.

There are a number of mechanisms to ensure that the research is well co-ordinated, not duplicatory, and meets the needs of the organic sector. These include maintaining awareness of other research, the frequent inclusion of literature and research reviews within the programme, consultation with the UKROFS R&D Committee, the periodic in-depth review of the programme involving external referees, and the fact that much of the research is let by Open Competition.

Crops Support

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to provide support for crops on (a) grassland and (b) other agricultural land; and if he will make a statement. [67730]

Mr. Rooker: Support for a range of arable crops, including cereals and oilseeds crops, is provided under the Common Agricultural Policy. This takes a number of forms including direct payments to farmers. In some cases the relevant EU regulations restrict the type of land on which these may be paid. If the hon. Member writes to me with details of the specific crops in which he is interested, I will give him a fuller reply.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what public protection measures he has put in place in respect of the trials of genetically modified crops. [67768]

Mr. Meale: I have been asked to reply.

The release of genetically modified organisms to the environment is controlled by the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 (amended in 1995 and 1997) which give effect to Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Under these regulations, no genetically modified organisms may be released to the environment without prior consent from the Secretary of State. Consent will only be granted when the potential risks to human health and the environment have been avoided or minimised.

Departmental Staff (Travel)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating changes which have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [67491]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The standard mileage rates reimbursed to staff in the core-Department together with the Centre for Environmental Fisheries and Aquaculture Agency, the Central Science Laboratory Agency, the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency, the Pesticides Safety Directorate, the Veterinary Laboratories Agency and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate are set out in the following table:

Pence per mile

Engine size	Up to 5,000 miles	Over 5,000 miles
Up to 1,500cc	36	24
1,501–2,000cc	45	28
Over 2,000cc	48	37

The Department has strict rules to ensure that any travel on official business is authorised only when it is absolutely necessary and that cars may be used only when they are the most cost-effective method of travel. However, many of the Department's customers are based in rural locations so that the public transport options are often curtailed.

Different mileage rates apply within the Meat Hygiene Service Agency and I have asked the Chief Executive to reply directly.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. Norman Baker, dated January 1999:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food enquiring about the mileage rate currently applicable to staff and indicating the changes which have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of transport has been passed to me to reply as regards this Executive Agency.

The MHS applies the following mileage rates:

	Mileage rates
Essential car user
Lump Sum per annum	£783
Per mile, first 10,000 miles	34.9p per mile
Per mile, after 10,000 miles	13.3p per mile
Casual car user
Per mile, first 10,000 miles	44.1p per mile
Per mile, after 10,000 miles	13.3p per mile
Leased Cars	9.3p per mile

The majority of MHS car users are operational staff who are responsible for supervising MHS plant-based staff at some 1,600 licensed fresh meat premises scattered across Great Britain. Many licensed premises are situated in outlying areas where public transport is not available. The use of cars is therefore essential for MHS staff to carry out their duties.

I can assure you that the MHS does encourage the use of public transport wherever it is practical.

Badgers

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take in response to the recommendations of the Standing Committee of the Berne Convention on the badger culling trial. [68778]

Mr. Nick Brown: The badger is not an endangered species in this country. We give it statutory protection which goes well beyond what the Berne Convention requires. However tuberculosis is a serious disease of cattle (and humans and badgers). We have carried out a thorough scientific review and a wide public consultation. We have thus carefully explored the possible solutions for the effective control of bovine TB. We have suspended badger culling throughout most of Great Britain, but have reluctantly concluded that we must test its effectiveness as one part of a broad strategy, which includes vaccine research, as well as checks on other wildlife species for TB. We therefore intend to continue the trial and will explain to the Standing Committee why this action is fully consistent with the provisions of the Berne Convention.

Horse and Pony Exports

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans are being made to block the export of live horses and ponies to Ireland for subsequent export to Europe for slaughter. [67871]

Mr. Morley: Various rules are in force to protect the welfare of horses and ponies being transported from Great Britain. We attach importance to enforcing these rules, and would promptly investigate any hard evidence that they were being broken.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Travel Advice

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes to Foreign Office travel advice have been made since 20 December 1998. [66943]

Mr. Fatchett: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office issues Travel Advice notices on over 130 countries worldwide and updates them on a regular basis. Many of them have been updated since 20 December.

British Citizens (Overseas Prisons)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British nationals are currently imprisoned overseas; and if he will provide a breakdown by country. [66946]

Mr. Fatchett: The number of British nationals imprisoned overseas (as at 22 January 1999) is 2,266. A breakdown by country is as follows:

Country	Number of prisoners

East Timor

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise comments made by the Defence Attaché to the Indonesian Embassy about the use of British military exports in East Timor with the Indonesian Government. [67603]

Mr. Fatchett: In July 1997, we introduced new criteria for the export of defence equipment. Since then we have not issued licences for the export of equipment where we judge that there is clearly identifiable risk that the equipment might be used for internal repression or international aggression.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to ensure Indonesian compliance with UN resolutions on East Timor. [67575]

Mr. Fatchett: We fully support the efforts of the UN Secretary-General in searching for a fair, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the problem. We keep in regular contact with the Secretary-General and Ambassador Marker about the progress of talks on East Timor.

EU Fifth Framework Programme

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the UK Government policy on Israel's participation in the Fifth Framework Programme. [67405]

Ms Quin: We see value in Israel's participation in the Fifth Framework Programme. Given recent events in the region, however, we understand the concerns of our EU partners that now is not the right time to decide the issue. We hope this can be resolved as soon as circumstances permit.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the EU Council of Ministers will discuss the possible participation of Israel in the Fifth Framework Programme of research. [67404]

Ms Quin: EU Ministers looked at this issue at the GAC on 27–28 April 1998. There are no plans at present to discuss this further at Ministerial level in the EU.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what other non-EU member states are being considered for participation in the Fifth Framework Programme. [67407]

Ms Quin: The countries being considered for full Associated Membership of the Fifth Framework Programme are: the ten Central and Eastern European countries and Cyprus (which have applied for EU membership); Israel and Switzerland.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with other EU member states on Israel's participation in the Fifth Framework Programme; and what views they have expressed. [67406]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed the Fifth Framework Programme with EU colleagues in the Council in April 1998. There is consensus among EU partners that no decision on Israel's participation in the programme should be taken now.

India (Gujarati Christians)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with representatives of the Indian Government about the treatment of Christians in the Gujarat. [67883]

Mr. Fatchett: We have made clear to the Indian authorities our concern over attacks on members of minority communities. I raised the issue with the Indian Home Minister in November last year. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I separately raised our concerns with the Indian National Security Adviser on 20 January.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the treatment of Christians in the Gujarat. [67882]

Mr. Fatchett: We have had representations from religious and other organisations.

Migration and Visa Correspondence Unit

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) telephone inquiries and (b) letters the Migration and Visa Correspondence Unit received in December 1998. [67884]

Mr. Fatchett: Complete figures for December 1998 for telephone calls to the Migration and Visa Correspondence Unit (MVCU) are not available. 959 calls were received on the main public inquiry line. In addition several hundred calls were received on the Unit's other lines.

The MVCU received 738 letters in December 1998 of which 582 were from hon. Members.

Indonesia

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions he (a) has taken in the last two years and (b) plans to take on human rights issues in Aceh, Indonesia. [67403]

Mr. Fatchett: We continue to monitor events in Aceh and are in close contact with local NGOs including the Indonesia National Human Rights Commission (KomnasHam), who sent a team to Aceh earlier this month to investigate recent incidents. Our Embassy in Jakarta makes periodic visits to different parts of Indonesia, including Aceh, to assess the situation on the ground. We have made clear to the Indonesians our view that peace and reconciliation in Aceh will only be possible if past military abuses in the province are fully investigated and those responsible are made accountable for their actions.

WALES

Abattoirs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to safeguard the future of small abattoirs in Wales. [66157]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The slaughtering industry has been going through a substantial period of change. There is still over capacity in the industry and it is principally for commercial operators to consider how they respond to these changes.

However, the Government's decision to cover the costs of Specified Risk Material (SRM) Inspections for this financial year will benefit the industry in Wales by an estimated £2.8 million in 1998–99.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the timescale for the conclusion of his review of the regional assistance map of Wales; and what is his anticipated timescale for legislative changes arising from the review. [67100]

Mr. Hain: The Commission has asked Member States to submit their map proposals for scrutiny by 31 March 1999. The new maps will come into force on 1 January 2000.

Laying the statutory instrument to bring the new Assisted Areas into operation is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Organic Farming

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial provision his Department has made for the expected growth in the number of farmers converting to organic farming through the organic aid scheme; and if he will make a statement on whether the organic aid scheme budget is expected to cope with the current level of demand and expected growth in Wales. [67747]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Decisions on the funding of the Organic Aid Scheme have not yet been made.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the amount of farmland (a) converted, (b) under conversion and (c) considering conversion to organic; what assessment he has made of future trends in this area; and if he will make a statement on the geographical spread of such land. [67764]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: As at 31 December 1998, there were 3,182 h.a. of converted organic land and 2,149 h.a. of land in conversion in Wales. It is not possible to estimate reliably the amount of farmland being considered for conversion. However, there has been a substantial increase in the number of inquiries received from prospective organic farmers. The majority of organic producers are in West Wales.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his Department's strategy for helping Welsh farmers to become organic; and if he will list his Department's current initiatives in this area. [67762]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Our aim is to encourage an expansion of organic farming. The current initiatives are as follows:

The Organic Aid Scheme which provides direct support for conversion.

The Organic Conversion Information Service which provides free advice to prospective organic farmers.

An industry-led working group has been set up to develop an action plan for the organic sector.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Crickhowell House

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what rent the Welsh Health Common Services Authority is paying for 1998–99 for those parts of Crickhowell House which are currently being refurbished in preparation for the National Assembly; and from what budget those payments are made. [67467]

Mr. Michael: None. The Welsh Office will meet the rental costs of those parts of Crickhowell House which have been made available for Assembly purposes.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Mobility Officers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those local authorities in Wales which have a designated mobility officer to assist blind and visually handicapped people. [67447]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The provision of assistance to blind and visually handicapped people is now through Rehabilitation Workers.

I understand that the following local authorities directly employ Rehabilitation Workers:

Blaenau Gwent
Bridgend
Cardiff
Carmarthenshire
Ceredigion
Merthyr Tydfil
Monmouthshire
Pembrokeshire
Powys
Rhondda Cynon Taff
Swansea
Value of Glamorgan.

In addition, some local authorities have contracts with other organisations such as the North Wales Society for the Blind; the Gwent Association for the Blind; the Guide Dogs for the Blind or Vision Enhancement Services, to provide services similar to those of Rehabilitation Workers. These local authorities are:

Anglesey
Caerphilly
Cardiff
Conway
Denbighshire
Flintshire
Gwynedd
Newport
Torfaen
Wrexham.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Hospital Services (Partially Sighted People)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those district general hospitals in Wales which offer specific services for partially sighted people; and which hospitals outside Wales provide such services for people resident in Wales. [67449]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information relating to specific services for partially sighted people is not held centrally. Ophthalmology services are provided in the following district general hospitals in Wales:

Inpatient, day case and outpatient services

Bronglais General
East Glamorgan General
Prince Charles

Princess of Wales

Singleton

University Hospital of Wales

West Wales General

Ysbyty Gwynedd

Ysbyty Wrexham Maelor

Day Case and Outpatient Services

Neath General

Nevill Hall

Prince Philip

Withybush

Outpatient Services

Ysbyty Glan Clwyd.

Details for hospitals outside Wales are not held by the Department.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Visual Impairment (Children)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives have been taken by him and his Department to help identify young children who may suffer from visual impairment or potential visual impairment; and what guidelines he has issued to education, health and social services departments in Wales to ensure proper co-ordination of assistance for such children. [67450]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: All babies are offered routine physical examinations at birth, 6 to 8 weeks, and at about 18 months, which will include vision screening. Mothers are encouraged to ask for advice if they have concerns at any time. Vision is also screened at school entry.

Local authorities and schools are responsible for identifying a child's special educational needs (SEN) and for ensuring that appropriate provision is made to meet those needs. The Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of SEN [ISBN 0 85522 444 4] includes guidance on the assessment of children with sensory impairment and on the duties of local authorities and health authorities to co-operate on service provision.

In 'Shaping the Future for Special Education—An Action Programme for Wales', published on 26 January we recognise the need for strong regional collaboration between statutory agencies in planning SEN provision, particularly in relation to low-incidence disabilities including visual impairment. We will be making additional resources available under the Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) Programme from 1999–2000 to fund regional SEN planning pilot projects in Wales aimed at establishing best practice in this particular field.

The 1997 'Health of Children in Wales' report also provides guidance on child health including visual impairment and the importance of effective multi-agency co-operation.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Public Bodies

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to promote the principles of the Compact between the Government and the Voluntary Sector in Wales to other public bodies. [68692]

Mr. Michael: I have today written to the Leaders of local authorities, to the Chairs of Health Authorities and Trusts and to the Chairs of NDPBs in Wales drawing their attention to the Compact between Government and the Voluntary Sector in Wales which I launched in November at the annual conference of the Wales Council for Voluntary Action.

The Compact is an agreement about the ways in which Government and the voluntary sector will work together for mutual benefit. It paves the way for the future and is intended to form the basis for the National Assembly's Voluntary Sector Scheme. The Compact is based on the principles of integrity, trust and mutual respect. While the agreement is between Central Government and the voluntary sector, I believe that these principles are equally applicable to relationships between other public bodies and the voluntary sector. I am very pleased that the Welsh Local Government Association has responded very positively indeed. I have agreed with the Association and the Wales Council for Voluntary action on a target of having a local compact in place for every part of Wales by September.

I believe that similar compacts, agreed between each public body in Wales and the voluntary organisations in its field of activity or geographical area will be a powerful way to recognise and improve their relationships.

I will therefore wish to see all other public bodies in Wales meeting the same target as that agreed with the Welsh Local Government Association.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

GPs and Dentists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) general practitioners and (b) dentists there are in the NHS in North Wales. [68363]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The latest available data show that there were 435 general medical practitioners in the North Wales health authority area at 1 October 1997, of which 409 were unrestricted principals. There were 209 general dental practitioners at 30 September 1998, of which 198 were principals.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reform the operation of housing regeneration and improvement schemes; and if he will make a statement. [68353]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There are currently no plans to change the arrangements for housing regeneration and improvement. It is for local authorities to consider their local priorities in developing regeneration strategies as part of their Housing Strategies and Operational Plans.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Grammar Schools

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the state-maintained grammar schools, grouping them by constituency. [67098]

Ms Estelle Morris: A table containing the relevant information has been placed in the Library.

Education Action Zones

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list the total amount of the private sector financial contribution for each Education Action Zone and show this as a proportion of the total available budget; [67295]

(2) if he will list those instances where a contribution from a TEC to an Education Action Zone has been included as a private sector contribution. [67289]

Ms Estelle Morris: The 25 Education Action Zones have so far raised some £5 million towards the £6 million target for business contributions in their first year of operation. We will be in a position to provide a more detailed statement of the private sector contributions to each zone when they submit their audited financial statements for the financial year 1998–99.

A contribution from a TEC to an EAZ does not count as a business contribution unless it is being sourced from the private sector.

New Deal Entrants

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of 18 to 24-year-olds who will enter the New Deal in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (3) 2001–02. [67410]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 25 January 1999]: By convention, the Government do not publish forecasts of unemployment. The New Deal for young people is being delivered through local partnerships. For planning purposes, the Employment Service needs to provide its managers and partners in each local unit of delivery with indicative assumptions for the numbers of young people who might join the New Deal in the year ahead. Such planning assumptions are based on current unemployment levels. They are not forecasts of the actual numbers who will participate in the programme.

We expect the indicative planning assumptions for local units of delivery for 1999–2000 to sum to a figure in the range 200,000 to 250,000 for Britain as a whole. At this stage, we would expect the figures for subsequent years to fall within a similar range.

I placed the planning assumption figures for 1998–99 in the Library in March 1998, and I will put the planning assumption figures for 1999–2000 in the Library as soon as they are ready.

Physical Education

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for future assessment of schools' performance in respect of physical education. [67743]

Ms Estelle Morris: Ofsted inspections report annually on individual schools' performance and standards in all National Curriculum subjects including physical education. At a national level, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools reports annually to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on schools' compliance with the National Curriculum requirements, including physical education. The Department also publishes annually end of Key Stage 3 National Teacher Assessment results in physical education. There are no plans to change the current arrangements.

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will (a) include in the review of the National Curriculum the area of physical education and (b) require it to take evidence from sports, health and public order agencies. [67738]

Ms Estelle Morris: The review of the National Curriculum for the year 2000 is looking at all areas of the school curriculum, including physical education. There will be a wide consultation on the revised National Curriculum in the summer. Sports, health and public order agencies—and other individuals including teachers, pupils and parents—will have opportunities then to make any representations on physical education within the school curriculum.

Maintained Schools

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate, for each local authority, the total number of pupils attending maintained schools. [67654]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Chess

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department takes to promote chess among children of school age. [67057]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The Department recognises the educational value of chess and other non-physical games both for their ability to help the acquisition of cognitive thinking skills, and of course, for the enjoyment they provide. We very much welcome the opportunities which many schools provide for their pupils to take part in such activities. It is open to schools to offer such activities as extra-curricular options, which we see as an important part of a broad and balanced education.

A-level Results

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many appeals were made by (a) students and (b) schools to examination boards following the publication of A level examination results in August 1998. [67962]

Mr. Mudie: Information on the number of A level appeals submitted in respect of the 1998 examination results is not available centrally. Except in the case of privately entered candidates, appeals may be submitted only by the school or college concerned, and not by individual candidates.

New arrangements to be introduced from summer 1999, following a review of the qualifications appeals system, will mean that statistics on appeals will be collected and published by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority in future years.

Primary Reception Classes

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the proportion of teachers currently working with children aged under five years in reception classes who have been trained to teach children under five. [67994]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not available centrally.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance his Department has issued to local education authorities on provision for four year olds in primary schools; and if he will make a statement. [67996]

Ms Hodge: All providers of state-funded early education for four year olds must work towards the desirable outcomes drawn up by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority and currently under review. The Early Years Development and Childcare Partnership Planning Guidance for 1999–2000 requires Early Years Development and Childcare Plans to set out how reception classes will be structured to cater for the needs of younger four year olds. The draft Code of Practice on School Admissions encourages school admissions authorities to consider adopting a policy of deferred entry for young four year olds at the parent's request.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of four year olds in England are currently in primary reception classes. [67995]

Ms Hodge: The information is not available in the form requested. Fifty-six per cent. of four year olds in England were in infant classes in maintained primary schools in January 1998; infant classes include reception and other classes and exclude nursery classes. Early Years Development and Childcare Plans demonstrate how, in every Local Education Authority area, there is an early education place for every four-year-old whose parents want one in either the maintained, private or voluntary sector.

School Bonus Payments

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria he will use to assess the levels of sustained improvement to be achieved in order to trigger payments under his new proposals for school bonus payments. [67675]

Ms Estelle Morris: The School Performance Award Scheme will reward annually the top proportion of schools which demonstrate excellent performance or significantly improve. We propose to base decisions on which schools to reward under the excellence strand on the outcomes of academic assessments in the previous academic year. Under the improvement, strand awards would be based on sustained improvement against the same indicators. We intend to make different arrangements for schools such as special schools, focusing on achievements against individualised targets, and for schools coming out of special measures more quickly than predicted.

Our detailed proposals for the School Performance Award Scheme will be set out in the Technical Consultation Document on Pay and Performance Management, to be published very shortly. We will take final decisions on the criteria to be employed for awards under the scheme in the light of responses to this consultation.

Teenage Pregnancies

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to support the work of general practitioners and health centres in reducing the levels of teenage pregnancy by providing contraception and advice for pupils via schools. [67942]

Mr. Charles Clarke: In July 1998 the Prime Minister asked the Social Exclusion Unit to work with other government departments building on work already undertaken by the Department of Health to develop an integrated strategy to cut the rates of teenage parenthood, particularly under-age parenthood, and propose better solutions to combat the risk of social exclusion for vulnerable teenage parents and their children. The Department for Education and Employment has been fully involved with this work. The Unit expects to report to Ministers shortly.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total cost of the press releases issued by his Department since May 1997. [67924]

Mr. Mudie: The cost of printing and distributing press releases since May 1997 is estimated to be £63,460. This allows us at a cost of £70 per press release to get information to over 1,000 national, local and specialist media as well as local education authorities and other educational bodies. Increasing use is being made of electronic communication to reduce costs.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each of the years 1990 to 1998 the number of press releases issued by his Department. [67925]

Mr. Mudie: The number of press releases issued for each year from 1990 to 1998 by this department are as follows:

Year	Number
1990	833
1991	852
1992	725
1993	700
1994	564
1995	472
1996	443
1997	447
1998	598

The figures from 1990 to 1995 are for press notices released by Department of Education and the Department of Employment, prior to their merger in July 1995.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what conventions relating to the propriety of Government publicity affect press releases issued by his Department; and if he will set out the conventions relevant to (a) content and (b) cost. [67926]

Mr. Mudie: The conventions relating to the propriety of Government publicity, including press releases, are contained in the report of the Working Group on the Government Information (the "Mountfield Report"). In particular page 25 of Annexe C states:

> "The four basic conventions, which successive Governments have applied, are that Government information services:
> should be relevant to Government responsibilities;
> should be objective and explanatory, not tendentious or polemical;
> should not be, or be liable to misrepresentation as being partly political; and > should be conducted in an economic and appropriate way, having regard to the need to be able to justify the costs as expenditure of public funds."

Copies of the Working Group report are available from the Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [67943]

Mr. Mudie: The Department for Education and Employment has 28 press officers. It is their job to present and explain Departmental policy. No staff are specifically employed to prepare rebuttals of allegations in the media.

The annual staff costs are £739,415.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 145, if he will list expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) by market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [67945]

Mr. Mudie: There were no additional research, advertising or direct mail costs incurred by task forces and review bodies. Costs for focus group research and market research were included in my previous Answer under public opinion research, 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 145.

Within the Department's Advertising and Publicity budget the total spend on publications from May 1997 to December 1998 was £2,940,000, an average of £147,000 per month. This compares with a total spend for the previous financial year, 1996–97, of £2,500,000, or an average of £208,333 per month.

Schools Adjudicator

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will announce the appointment of the lead adjudicator for school organisation and admissions issues. [68602]

Mr. Blunkett: I have appointed Sir Peter Newsam as the lead adjudicator. He has wide-ranging experience for this post, gained from his time as Education Officer to the Inner London Education Authority, Chair of the Commission for Racial Equality, and the Director of the Institute of Education. Further appointments of adjudicators will be made in February.

Statutory Notices

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the outcome of statutory notices that have been waiting for more than five months from the date of each statutory notice for determination by him; and if he will (a) list the reasons for the delay in each case and (b) estimate when each determination will be made. [67927]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following list shows proposals published over five months ago and still under consideration. Reasons for delay are also shown. Since all aspects of proposals need to be carefully considered it is not possible to give a precise date for when individual decisions will be made, but most of the proposals on the list below are likely to be decided in February or early March.

TREASURY

Employee Transport

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies have been assessed by the Inland Revenue as providing a taxable benefit in kind by virtue of the provision to employees of (a) free work-to-home or home-to-work transport and (b) stage carriage bus services; and what estimate he has made of (i) the total tax receipts and (ii) the total employee mileage in each case for the last five years for which information is available. [67691]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that the information requested is not collected centrally within Inland Revenue.

Hon. Member for Coventry, North-West

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he took to investigate the business background of the previous Paymaster General, the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson), at the time of his appointment as Paymaster General. [67331]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 27 January 1999]: All Ministers are appointed by the Prime Minister. The previous Paymaster General, like all Ministers of the Crown, was required to act in accordance with the principles set out in the Ministerial Code.

Energy Efficient Products (Price Incentives)

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what price incentives the Government support to encourage consumers to purchase energy efficient products. [67966]

Ms Hewitt: On 1 July 1998 a reduced VAT rate of 5 per cent. was introduced for the installation of certain energy saving materials under Government funded grant schemes. The reduced rate is targeted at the less well-off.

So far, over 135,000 people have benefited from Government-funded incentive schemes run by the Energy Saving Trust to encourage consumers to install energy efficiency measures. Current schemes include incentives to install insulation, efficient heating, efficient lighting and appliances and small scale Combined Heat and Power.

The Government's Home Energy Efficiency Scheme provides grants for energy efficiency measures for householders receiving income related benefits, disability allowance, or who are over sixty years old. HEES has helped over 2.5 million households over the last seven years.

VAT (Sport, Sports Competitions and Physical Education) Order

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will table a replacement VAT (Sport, Sports Competitions and Physical Education) Order. [67954]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise are seeking comments on the draft VAT (Sport, Sports Competitions and Physical Education) Order 1999 with a view to the Order being laid before the House soon.

Corporation Tax (Football Clubs)

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual corporation tax revenue received from football clubs. [67947]

Dawn Primarolo: Tax assessments for accounts to 1996 indicate that the total corporation tax liability of football clubs is between £5 million and £10 million.

VAT

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 14 January 1999, Official Report, column 286, relating to VAT receipts, if he will indicate the amount of the £1.1 billion revenue relating to civil engineering projects. [67972]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not possible to distinguish between VAT revenue relating to buildings and that relating to civil engineering works.

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will announce the outcome of HM Customs' review of the VAT exemption for charity welfare to include home help services; and if he will make a statement. [69047]

Dawn Primarolo: I am pleased to be able to announce today the conclusion of the consultation. Routine domestic tasks provided by charities on a not for profit basis are VAT exempt welfare services when an assessment has been carried out which shows that there is a risk to recipients' physical or mental health or welfare because they are unable to carry out the tasks safely or adequately, or without significant pain or discomfort. Customs will be publicising the details.

VAT Refunds

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list latest estimates and forecast expenditure in cash terms for VAT refunded to general Government for each of (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000, (iv) 2000–01 and (v) 2001–02. [68387]

Mr. Milburn: Estimates and forecasts for VAT refunds, consistent with the Pre-Budget Report, are given in a table headed "Accounting and other adjustments in table B12 of the Pre-Budget Report" in the answer given by the then Chief Secretary to the Treasury to the right hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 18 November 1998, Official Report, columns 586–87.

Government Capital Consumption

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list latest estimates and forecast expenditure for the value of general Government non-trading capital consumption for each of (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000, (iv) 2000–01 and (v) 2001–02. [68386]

Mr. Milburn: Estimates and forecasts of general government non-trading capital consumption, consistent with the Pre-Budget Report, are given in a table headed "Accounting and other adjustments in table B12 of the Pre-Budget Report" in the answer given by the then Chief Secretary to the Treasury to the right hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 18 November 1998, Official Report, columns 586–87.

Tax Credits

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the regulations under which working families' tax credit and disabled tax credit will operate. [69048]

Dawn Primarolo: I have today placed in the Libraries of the House drafts of the Tax Credits Schemes (Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations and of the Tax Credits (Claims and Payments) (Amendment) Regulations which contain the main provisions for the introduction of these new tax credits.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Severely Disabled Children

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) financial and (b) other assistance is available to severely disabled under-fives who have difficulties in walking to allow access to the Motability scheme. [68697]

Mr. Bayley: Access to the Motability Scheme is via receipt of the Higher Rate Mobility Component of Disability Living Allowance, or War Pensioners Mobility Supplement. We recognise that Disability Living Allowance does not help with the mobility needs of severely disabled children under five years old, and this is why we have proposed extending the higher rate mobility component (currently worth £35.85 a week) to three and four year olds to help combat the disadvantage which they suffer. The change is intended to take effect from April 2001. This help will be neither means-tested nor subject to a contribution condition, and it will be tax-free. It will also allow access to the Motability Scheme under the normal rules.

Overseas Pensioners

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce annual adjustments to pensions for pensioners who now reside overseas; and if he will make a statement. [68520]

Mr. Timms: Of the 840,000 UK State pensions paid to people living abroad, about 380,000 already receive annual upratings. The total annual cost of unfreezing the remaining pensions paid abroad is £275 million. Due to competing demands and constraints on Social Security spending, in the UK there are no plans to do so.

Tribunal Hearings (Travel)

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the changes made to the mileage rate payable to (a) appellants, (b) companions, (c) witnesses and (d) unpaid representatives in tribunal hearings since 1 January 1979, indicating the date and amount of change in each case; [66482]

(2) if he will list the changes made to the mileage rate payable to (a) tribunal members and (b) tribunal staff since 1 January 1979, indicating the date and amount of change in each case. [66483]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available has been placed in the Library.

Capital Limits

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the current value of capital limits if restored to their value at (a) 1988 prices and (b) 1990 prices. [67560]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Benefit/Capital limit	Capital limits As at April 1988	At April 1998 prices[1]	As at April 1990	At April 1998 prices	As at April 1998

London Organised Fraud Investigation Team

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) for what reason the offices of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team were re-opened on the 9 November, and who had responsibility for this decision; [67718]

(2) for what reason the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team's offices were shut down and sealed between 12 October and 9 November 1998; and what was the purpose of the closure; [67755]

(3) what proportion of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team was kept on full pay during the closure of their offices between 12 October and 9 November 1998; and what was the total cost of employing the unit staff during this period; [67720]

(4) what action was taken during the closure of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team's offices to protect the evidence held there from being tampered with by those who had access to the premises during the period of closure; [67757]

(5) how many of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team's cases which were pending on 12 October have been dropped since the offices re-opened on 9 November; and what are the reasons for these cases having been dropped; [67719]

(6) who had access to the offices of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team during its closure between 12 October and 9 November 1998; what visits were carried out during the closure; and what was the purpose of each such visit; [67756]

(7) whether any action was taken following the closure of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team offices against any employees of the unit; [67717]

(8) what was the total cost of the closure of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team's offices between 12 October and 9 November 1998; [67721]

(9) which ministers in his Department were aware of the decision to shut down and seal the offices of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team between 12 October and 9 November 1998; and who was responsible for this decision; [67754]

Mr. Timms: While this Department provides support, including funding, the Association of London Government (ALG) is responsible for the management of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team (LOFIT). The ALG established a management committee to carry out this function on which this Department had observer status.

Decisions on all aspects of the management of LOFIT, including access to the premises, finance and personnel matters and handling of outstanding cases, were for the ALG to make as the managing body. The decision to close LOFIT down was taken by the ALG. The Secretary of State and the then Minister of State were made aware of the ALG's decision.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will calculate the current proportion of the total population in receipt of one or more of the main income-related benefits. [68091]

Angela Eagle: As at May 1997, there were 7,990,000 recipients of one or more of the main income-related benefits in Great Britain. This represents 13.9 per cent. of the total population.

Notes:

1. Income-related benefits are Income Support, Income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Family Credit, Disability Working Allowance, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.
2. Overlaps between benefits have been taken out.
3. Caseload figure has been rounded to the nearest ten thousand.
4. Numbers are based on benefit units, which may be a single person or a couple.
5. Housing Benefit/Council Tax Benefit figures include estimates due to the data collection procedure in Scotland.
6. Population is based on all residents in Great Britain at Mid-1997.

Income Support and Supplementary Benefits

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each year since 1979 the proportion of (a) the total population and (b) lone parent families in receipt of (i) income support and (ii) supplementary benefits. [68108]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Percentage population who claimed income support or supplementary benefit and the number of these claims which were made by lone parents, for each year since 1979

Year	IS and supplementary benefit (prior to 1998) claimants (Thousand)	Percentage of total population claiming IS or supplementary benefit (prior to 1988)	Lone parents claiming IS or supplementary benefit (prior to1988) (Thousand)	Percentage of population who are lone parents claiming IS or supplementary benefit	Percentage of lone parent population claiming IS or supplementary benefit
1979	2,855	5.2	306	0.6	36.5
1980	3,118	5.7	316	0.6	36.4

1993	5,643	10.0	1,013	1.8	70.3
1994	5,675	10.0	1,039	1.8	68.8
1995	5,670	10.0	1,056	1.9	67.7
1996	5,549	9.7	1,059	1.9	66.2
1997	3,958	6.9	1,014	1.8	n/a
1998	3,853	6.7	961	1.7	n/a

Notes:

1. Numbers are rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Income support replaced supplementary benefit in April 1998.
3. Data are not available for 1995.
4. Numbers are given at a point in time. For 1979, the month was November. For 1980, to 1984 the month was December. In 1986 and 1996, the month was February and from 1987 to 1998, the month was May.
5. Sample sizes: 1977–82 supplementary pension cases 1 in 200; supplementary allowance cases 1 in 50. 1983–87 supplementary pension cases 1 in 200, supplementary allowance cases 1 in 50. 1988–1993 1 in 100. 1994 to date 1 in 20.
6. The numbers of income support and supplementary benefit claimants for the period prior to 1996 include claims for income support for the unemployed. In October 1996, jobseeker's allowance replaced income support as the benefit claimed by the unemployed. The figures from 1996 onwards therefore do not include any claims by the unemployed.
7. The numbers of lone parents claiming income support for the period prior to 1996 may include claims by unemployed lone parents. The figures provided for 1996 onwards will not include unemployed lone parents.
8. An estimate of the 1998 population of Great Britain has not published by the Office for National Statistics. We have therefore used the population estimate for 1997 when completing our calculation for 1998.

Pensioners

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that those pensioners who will be affected by the changes in SERPS inheritance will not be affected further; and what plans he has to amend these changes. [67915]

Mr. Timms: We have no plans to alter those provisions of the Social Security Act 1986 which, from 6 April 2000, reduce inherited SERPS from 100 per cent. to 50 per cent.

Notes:

1. The previous Conservative Government introduced a number of changes to SERPS in the Social Security Act 1986 to reduce expenditure.

2. The rationale behind this particular change was to bring SERPS in line with occupational schemes where inheritance of half occupational pension rights is the norm.

3. The change does not take effect until 6 April 2000.

4. The halving of inherited SERPS was not widely publicised at the time. It was included in publicity about the Pensions Act 1995. From Spring 1996, information has been included in Leaflets NP46 (A Guide to Retirement) and NP45 (A Guide to Widows' Benefit). A bulletin has recently been issued to staff in the Benefits Agency to ensure that they are fully aware of the change and can advise claimants accordingly.

Bereavement Benefits

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the responses to the consultation exercise on the reform of bereavement benefits; and if he will make a statement. [68915]

Angela Eagle: The consultation period ended on 13 January 1999 and 76 responses have been received. Thirty one were from organisations at national and local level, and local authorities. The rest were from individuals including 3 from hon. Members. We thank all those who responded to the consultation document and can assure them that we are carefully considering the responses.

A list of those who responded has been placed in the Library. Copies of this list and specific responses are available on request from The Widows' Benefit Consultation Team, 3rd Floor, The Adelphi, 1–11 John Adam Street, London WC2N 6HT.

PRIME MINISTER

Senior Salaries Review Body

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the report and recommendations of the Review Body on Senior Salaries. [68817]

The Prime Minister: The 1999 report of the Review Body on Senior Salaries, covering pay arrangements for the senior civil service, senior military officers and the judiciary, together with the annual uprating of Parliamentary salaries, has been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House. I am grateful to the Chairman and Members of the Pay Review Body for the work they have put into their report.

In the Comprehensive Spending Review, the Government made it clear that public sector pay settlements would need to be fair, affordable and consistent with the targets for public service improvements which we have set. The terms of reference of the Review Body on Senior Salaries were revised to ensure that, in making its recommendations, four key considerations set out in the Comprehensive Spending Review were taken into account:

recruitment, retention and motivation of the groups concerned;

the requirements on departments to meet their output targets for the delivery of services;

the requirements on departments to stay within their three year expenditure limits; and the Government's inflation target, requiring responsibility in pay settlements across the public and private sectors.

The main recommendations of the Review Body on Senior Salaries are:

an increase of 2.8 per cent. in the minimum and maximum values of each of the pay bands for the senior civil service. Within the bands, Departments will determine individual awards on the basis of performance.

an increase of 3.3 per cent. in the maxima of the pay ranges within which individual salaries are set for senior military personnel.

an increase of 3.5 per cent. in judicial salaries.

The Review Body recommended that these increases should take effect from 1 April 1999.

The Government are satisfied that these recommendations reflect the key considerations set out in the Comprehensive Spending Review and we have therefore decided to accept them. The additional cost of the recommendations will be contained within the Departmental expenditure limits announced in July and it remains the Government's intention to meet the objectives and targets set out in the Public Service Agreements. This is in line with the Government's prudent and disciplined approach to public spending and their commitment to delivering high quality public services and low inflation.

The Lord Chancellor will respond in the next few weeks to the Review Body's recommendations on the fee structure for part-time judiciary which, although included in this report, was an exercise separate from the Review Body's consideration of senior salaries.

Pay increases for Members of Parliament and Ministers are linked automatically to the increase in pay bands for the senior civil service. Their pay entitlement from 1 April 1999 will therefore increase by 2.8 per cent. in addition to the 1.5 per cent. increase due as the deferred second stage of the 1998 pay award.

The Review Body on Senior Salaries will produce shortly a further report on the pay of junior Ministers in the House of Lords, office holders in the devolved administrations and on certain aspects of Parliamentary allowances.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what opportunity will be afforded to asylum seekers who have been able to demonstrate that they have been the victims of unscrupulous advisers to establish their claims without their case being prejudiced by the actions of those advisers. [67115]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Any representations made in support of asylum claims are considered, even if they are received after an initial decision has been taken. Consequently, it would be open to any asylum seeker who considered that they had been poorly advised to inform the Immigration and Nationality Directorate at any time. This information would be treated on its merits.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of asylum application made between January 1985 and 1 July 1993 have been disposed of to date; and with what result. [67733]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is given in the table.

Asylum applications made between 1 January 1985 and 1 July 1993 by status as at the end of 1998[1]

Case status as at 31 December 1998
Granted asylum	11%
Granted exceptional leave	43%
Refused after full consideration	28%
Refused on 3rd country grounds	1%
Paragraph 340 refusal[2]	17%
Total decisions[3]	125,800
Undecided[3,4]	6,600
Total applications[3]	132,400

[1] Percentages are estimates, rounded to the nearest whole number, based on cases for which information is recorded.
[2] Paragraph 340 of Immigration Rules. For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period.
[3] Rounded to the nearest 100, excluding dependants.
[4] New estimate of the number of pre-July 1993 asylum applications that remain outstanding.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67841]

Mr. Straw: The manner in which documents are produced and disseminated is decided upon by careful consideration of the individual merits and requirements of each publication.

The Home Office has employed a number of alternative publication formats in recent years and it is now common practice to make White and Green Papers available via the Internet in a format that is accessible to the widest range of users.

The Cabinet Office is currently producing guidance to Departments on the arrangements for production of White and Green Papers, as announced by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296.

Court Visits

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) Crown courts, (b) magistrates courts and (c) youth courts he has visited in the last year. [67581]

Mr. Straw: In the last year I have visited one Magistrates' Court and two Youth Courts as follows:

1 May 1998: Oxford Magistrates Court

8 September 1998: Youth Court Sitting at Uxbridge Magistrates Court

16 September 1998: Youth Court Sitting at Bristol Magistrates Court

20 November 1998: Blackburn Magistrates Court

In addition, I attended and addressed five regional magistrates' meetings as follows:

23 June 1998: North West in Blackburn

23 July 1998: London and South East in London

1 September 1998: Wales in Cardiff

16 September 1998: South West in Bristol

22 September 1998: North East in Newcastle.

Offenders (Deaths)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many deaths of ex-offenders occurred within (a) one month and (b) six months of release from custody in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement; [67920]

(2) what research his Department is undertaking into the number of deaths of former prison inmates which occur shortly after release from custody; and if he will make a statement; [67921]

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of deaths, indicating separately self-inflicted deaths, of ex-offenders which occur shortly after release from custody; and if he will make a statement. [67919]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information relates to people who are under probation service supervision following release from prison, which, in the case of those sentenced to less than 12 months, is on a voluntary basis:

Number of deaths of those under supervision by the Probation Service

England and Wales — Number of persons

Time between release and death	1995	1996	1997
Under one month	26	33	34
One month and under six months	53	47	63
Six months or more	29	21	27

The Department is not currently carrying out research on deaths following release from prison.

Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy Act) 1998

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers included in the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 have been used; on how many occasions; and if he will make a statement. [67922]

Mr. Straw: Records indicate that, as of today's date, no cases have come to court in the United Kingdom involving the use of the powers in sections 1–4 of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 (concerning proscribed and specified organisations). However, investigations continue and use of the powers is of course, available for the future. As to sections 5–7 of the Act (conspiracy to commit offences outside the United Kingdom), information on their use is not collected centrally, but it is expected that data on convictions will begin to become available in Spring 1999.

European Parliamentary Elections

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in (a) COREPER and (b) other working groups of the Council of Ministers concerning the proposals of the European Parliament for changes to arrangements for elections to the European Parliament after 1999. [67931]

Mr. George Howarth: The European Parliament adopted proposals for Common Principles for elections to the European Parliament on 15 July 1998. These were considered by the Committee of Permanent Representatives (COREPER) on 10 September and 9 December 1998 and referred to the General Affairs Working Group of the Council. Discussion there is continuing and the General Affairs Working Group will report to COREPER in due course.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the property owned by the Metropolitan Police Force which is currently for sale; what representations he has received on such sales; and if he will make a statement. [68048]

Kate Hoey: The Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District tells me that relevant information is updated monthly. As at 31 December 1998, the property for sale or planned for sale was:

The Prime Minister has received a Petition signed by many people, calling for Collier Row Police Station to be retained.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has received several letters from Mrs. Burgess, and from an hon. Member on her behalf, about the proposed closure of Chislehurst Police Station.

The Receiver tells me that in addition:

"as to 28–30 High Street, Wanstead, following public objections to the sale of the site for redevelopment, a public inquiry took place in December 1998. The proposed purchaser's planning application has now been rejected; as to Manchester Road, Isle of Dogs, local residents are objecting to the sale of land adjoining a police office, for housing development; and as to 23–24 Station Road and 1–11 Rosslyn Crescent, Harrow, the members of a mosque adjoining the site have objected to the sale of land to a housing association by open tender as they wish to acquire the site for a mosque."

Child Protection

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with police forces on their responsibility for bringing to the attention of local social services departments their concerns for the welfare and protection of children who might be at risk; and if he will make a statement. [67988]

Mr. Boateng: Home Office officials are involved in continuing dialogue with the Association of Chief Police Officers about issues of child protection.

It has long been recognised that effective child protection work is best achieved through good inter-agency co-operation, a view most recently endorsed in the report of a thematic inspection of police child protection functions by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary.

"Working Together under the Children Act 1989—A Guide to arrangements for inter-agency Co-operation for the Protection of Children from Abuse" provides guidance for inter-professional and inter-agency co-operation, including between the police and social services. That guidance is currently being revised following a consultation exercise last year. Both the police and social services are contributing to that work which is being led by the Department of Health.

I am sure that the police are well aware of the need to bring to the attention of local social services departments any concerns they have about possible child abuse, in the same way that I would hope that social services would notify the police at the earliest opportunity when they come across a case which constitutes, or may constitute, a criminal offence.

CID Officers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of putting CID officers into uniform for part of the working week. [68052]

Mr. Boateng: It is an operational matter for chief constables whether they make provision available for transfer of officers between Criminal Investigation Department (CID) and uniform duties, and the rotation of staff within specialisms, to allow for career development leading to a wider experience of policing.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to visit the PEO of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate at Lunar House. [67953]

Mr. Straw: I visited Lunar House on 28 November 1997 and on 14 September 1998, and my visit on 28 November 1997 included a visit to the Public Inquiry Office. I plan to visit Lunar House and other Immigration and Nationality Directorate offices in Croydon, again when my diary permits.

"From Murmur to Murder"

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he had with the Commission for Racial Equality on the drafting of the "From Murmur to Murder" document. [68184]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None. "From Murmur to Murder" was produced by the Midlands Probation Training Consortium on behalf of chief probation officers in the region.

South Yorkshire Police

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the costs to the South Yorkshire Police Authority of funding the defence of David Godfrey Duckenfield and Bernard Dean Murray in the cases of Adlington v Murray and Adlington v Duckenfield in the Leeds Magistrates Court. [68223]

Mr. Boateng: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has made no assessment. It is a matter for the South Yorkshire Police Authority to consider how to fund the defence of Mr. Duckenfield and Mr. Dean Murray and for the Chief Constable to allocate resources to the policing of the force area.

I understand from the Clerk to the South Yorkshire Police Authority, that the Authority has set aside £500,000 for legal costs work in connection with Hillsborough. This sum has been taken from the authority's reserves. There has, therefore, been no immediate impact on the resources available for day to day policing.

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from (a) South Yorkshire Police Authority and (b) South Yorkshire Police about the adequacy of their grant settlement for 1999–2000. [68829]

Mr. Boateng: We have received one letter from the Clerk to the South Yorkshire Police Authority raising a number of issues about the proposed funding settlement for the South Yorkshire Police in 1999–2000.

City Status

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is next proposed to create city status in England; and if he will make a statement on the criteria for judging successful applicants. [68246]

Mr. Straw: Her Majesty has said that she intends to mark both the Millennium and the 50th Anniversary of Her Accession to the Throne, in 2002, by grants of city status to towns in the United Kingdom. City status is a rare mark of honour granted by Letters Patent; it is not a right which can be claimed by the fulfilment of certain conditions.

Graffiti

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of changes in the incidence of graffiti over the past five years; [68453]

(2) if he will make a statement on the Government's initiative to prevent graffiti on public property; and what is his estimate of the annual amount of money spent on cleaning up graffiti on public property; [68455]

(3) what plans his Department has to introduce a national or regional graffiti tackling squad. [68457]

Mr. Boateng: Graffiti is a form of criminal damage, which is recorded in the Home Offices Statistical Bulletin "Notifiable Offences". According to the Bulletin covering England and Wales, April 1997 to March 1998, there were 861,800 offences of criminal damage recorded in 1997–98, a fall of 8.2 per cent. on the previous year. The Bulletin does not give a sub-total for graffiti. It is not possible, therefore, to comment on the changes of incidences of graffiti over the past five years. Nor is it possible to estimate with any degree of accuracy the amount of money spent on cleaning up graffiti on public property.

The Government do, however, take this form of offence seriously. Under the Criminal Damage Act 1971, where the value of the damage is more than £2,000, the maximum penalty is ten years' imprisonment for those over 18, and up to two years' detention in a Young Offenders Institution for those aged 15–17.

The Government have no present plans for a national or regional graffiti tackling squad. One of the most effective ways of tackling crimes such as vandalism and graffiti is through co-ordinated preventative action at local level involving all of the relevant agencies such as the police, local authorities, schools and other voluntary bodies leading to a plan of action.

The police and local authorities now have a statutory duty under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 to develop crime reduction partnerships. Where graffiti is identified as a major crime and disorder problem, we would expect the strategy to address it. The Act does not, however, specify what categories of crime and disorder must be included in the audit and strategy. This is a decision to be taken locally.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many successful prosecutions for insider dealing offences have been brought since 1986; [68140]

(2) if he will list the offences for which successful prosecutions for insider dealing have been brought since 1986. [68141]

Mr. Boateng: Available data taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database are given in the table.

Number of defendants prosecuted at magistrates' courts and convicted at all courts for insider dealing[1] offences, England and Wales, 1986–1997

Year	Prosecutions	Convictions[2]
1986	—	—
1987	1	1
1988	—	—
1989	11	2
1990	3	2
1991	8	2
1992	—	2
1995	2	—
1996	1	—
1997	—	—

[1] The legislation covering offences of 'insider dealing' for the period 1986 to 1997 includes Companies Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985 which came into force on 1 July 1985 and was supplemented by provisions of ss173–178 of the Financial Services Act 1986; and Sec 52 of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 which came into force on 1 March 1994.

[2] Includes persons proceeded against in earlier years.

Police Grant

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the allocation of police grant in 1999–2000. [68825]

Mr. Straw: I have today laid before the House the Police Grant Report (England and Wales) 1999–2000 (HC 179). The Report sets out my determination for 1999–2000 of the aggregate amount of grants that I propose to pay under section 46(2) of the Police Act 1996, and the amount to be paid to each police authority including the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the law on electoral registration. [68796]

Mr. George Howarth: My Working Party on Electoral Procedures has recommended to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary that he should introduce legislation to provide a rolling electoral registration scheme. We are working up detailed proposals and examining other possible changes to the registration system.

Prison Service (Quinquennial Review)

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in the Quinquennial Review of the Prison Service which he announced on 31 July 1998. [69049]

Mr. Straw: The first two stages of the Quinquennial Review of the Prison Service have now been concluded and I am today placing in the Library copies of the Evaluation of Performance and the Prior Options Report. A revised Framework Document is being finalised and will be published shortly.

The Evaluation of Performance concludes that since becoming an agency, and during a period of rising prison population, the Prison Service has achieved a remarkable turnaround in performance to which agency status has contributed for the following reasons:

the delegated freedoms and flexibilities to the Director General;

a focus on agreed outputs and targets for which the Director General is personally responsible to the Home Secretary; and a more cohesive organisation with a more visible Director General enables him to provide clearer leadership and to communicate with the organisation more effectively and to speak publicly for the Prison Service.

The Prior Options Report reviews agency and other organisational options for the Prison Service and concludes that continued agency status offers the most appropriate and cost effective means of achieving Home Office aims. It notes and endorses the major agenda of work already in progress or planned as a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review and the Prison Probation Review. It notes the need for further work in the next period of agency status on contractorisation issues taking into account experience with tighter "contracts" between Headquarters and individual prisons and the overall contribution of the private sector to prison services.

In the light of these findings, I am accepting the recommendation of the Prior Options Report that agency status should be reconfirmed.

France (British Citizens)

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has made in the last 12 months (a) through Interpol and (b) through other means to the French Ministry of the Interior concerning the handling of deaths of British citizens in France; and if he will make a statement. [68132]

Mr. Fatchett: I have been asked to reply.

My noble Friend the Under-Secretary wrote to Mme Guigou, French Minister of Justice, on 4 August, stressing the importance of bringing to justice murderers of British nationals in France. On 30 November she met senior officials, in Paris, from the Ministry of Interior to discuss the handling of deaths of British nationals and to press for more vigorous investigations by the French authorities.

On 21 and 29 April 1998, the Deputy Head of Mission at our Embassy in Paris, raised specific cases with senior officials from the French Ministry of Interior.

Interpol London becomes involved in various aspects of cases involving death of British nationals abroad, particularly where crime is suspected. This is done on a case-by-case basis.

Our Embassy in Paris continues to remind the French authorities of the importance we attach to investigating the death of British nationals in France.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Area Plans

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial and staff resources will be provided to the Planning Agency to undertake work on the area plan for Newry and Mourne; and when work will commence on it. [67752]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for these issues has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 29 January 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the commencement of work on the Newry and Mourne Area Plan.

There is no individual Newry and Mourne Area Plan proposed rather, a combined plan for the Banbridge and Newry and Mourne District Council areas. The Development Plan Programme is currently under review, and will be approved by the Minister with responsibility for the Department of the Environment.

I will write to the hon. Gentleman when the timing of commencement of the Banbridge/Newry and Mourne Area Plan has been decided.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when work is planned to commence on the new Down Area Plan; and what consultation will be held in respect of it. [67751]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for these issues has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 29 January 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the commencement of work on the Down Area Plan.

I can confirm that work on the Ards/Down Area Plan commenced in December 1998. Throughout the Plan preparation process there will be opportunities for regular consultation with both Ards and Down District Councils in accordance with a programme to be agreed with each of them. There will also be ongoing consultation with a range of statutory consultees and, at key stages of the project, community groups, interested parties and members of the general public will also be consulted.

I do hope this clarifies the position.

Seamus Ludlow

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in the RUC investigation into the murder of Seamus Ludlow in 1976; how many people have been questioned in the past 12 months; how many people have been charged; what representations she has received from the Irish Government; and what assessment the DPP has made of the feasibility of a trial within the Northern Ireland jurisdiction. [66486]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 19 January 1999]: Four persons were arrested and interviewed in February 1998; they were released without charge. A police investigation file in respect of the murder which was submitted by the Chief Constable to the Director of Public Prosecutions in October 1998 remains under consideration. The Irish authorities are aware of the position.

Firearms

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to consult outside bodies on regulations which are proposed as a result of the review of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. [66815]

Mr. Ingram: The national shooting organisations and governing bodies of the various shooting sports have already made a valuable contribution to the review of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 through the normal consultation process. Later this year, the Secretary of State intends to lay before Parliament a draft of a new Firearms Order. In line with the provisions of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, the proposed Draft Order in Council will be referred to the Northern Ireland Assembly for their consideration. It will also be published and representations will be invited from all interested bodies.

Organic Farming

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the amount of farmland (a) converted, (b) under conversion and (c) considering conversion to organic; what assessment she has made of future trends in this area; and if she will make a statement on the geographical spread of such land. [67766]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information is as follows:

Converted: 176 hectares

Under Conversion: 20 hectares

Considering Conversion: 607 hectares

The indications are that there will be a significant increase in the amount of land in NI under organic production over the next few years.

It is, however, not possible to assess the geographical spread of such land although from the approaches from farmers considering conversion the interest is across a range of commodities and it is well spread across NI.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on her Department's strategy for helping Northern Ireland's farmers to become organic; and if she will list her Department's current initiatives in this area. [67763]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There has been very little uptake of organic farming in Northern Ireland. In recognition of this situation, and in line with the Government's policy of encouraging more organic production, the Organic Farming Liaison Group (OFLG) was established to co-ordinate and pursue increased uptake of organic farming. The OFLG bring together officials from the Department of Agriculture with representatives of conventional and organic farming.

The existing Organic Aid Scheme has been reviewed and increased rates of payment will be available during the first five years to those who enter conversion after 1 April 1998.

The Department of Agriculture provides advice and guidance to prospective organic farmers. It has developed organic production information packs and has made available a two day course entitled "Introduction to Organic Production" which aims to provide basic information for farmers and growers, who are potentially interested in converting to organic production.

I am pleased to record that, in recent months, there has been a marked increase in interest from conventional farmers and a number have submitted applications for registration of land for organic conversion. This interest has been across a range of commodities and from various parts of NI.

Lone Parents

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the report issued on 11 January which was commissioned by the Department of Health and Social Security on lone parents and employment in Northern Ireland; and what action she will take in respect of the recommendations made. [67750]

Mr. McFall: The report "others on Benefit" is the most detailed investigation ever undertaken in Northern Ireland into the obstacles that lone parents face when considering taking up work. It will make a very useful contribution to the development of the wide range of services that are needed by lone parents in Northern Ireland.

Many of the recommendations and conclusions reached in the report are being addressed under the New Deal for Lone Parents, the National Childcare strategy, the current review of the child support maintenance system and the proposed introduction of Working Families Tax Credit to replace Family Credit from 5 October 1999. I have arranged for copies of the report to be widely distributed so that its recommendations can be taken into account in the provision of future services for lone parents.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the recommendations of the UN Committee Against Torture in respect of the use of plastic bullets for riot control. [67999]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 28 January 1999]: Plastic baton rounds are used by the police and Army in Northern Ireland only where life or property is at risk, and provide a means by which police officers and soldiers can protect themselves when under attack. Ideally, it would not be necessary to use them: if there were no violent disorder then there would be no requirement to deploy plastic baton rounds.

The nature and scale of public order situations which can arise in Northern Ireland and the threat of terrorist attack often prevent the security forces from attempting to control rioters at close quarters. Plastic baton rounds have allowed the police and the Army to keep a distance between themselves and other lethal missiles. Alternatives methods of riot control have been employed and considered but have generally proved less effective in Northern Ireland conditions.

While the Government acknowledge that the use of plastic baton rounds give rise to considerable controversy, no-one has yet been able to suggest a viable alternative which meets the operational needs of the security forces.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Nairobi Office

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the total annual cost to her Department of its office in Nairobi; and if she will break down the figures into (a) staff and (b) other costs. [68097]

Clare Short: The total annual cost of the DFID Eastern Africa office in Nairobi is £2.87 million. The office is responsible for both the policy and implementation of development programmes for Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania to a combined value of £132 million (1999–2000).

The estimated costs for 1999–2000 are broken down as follows:

(a) Staff costs including house and other personnel overheads: £2 million

(b) Other costs including office accommodation equipment, travel, etc: £870,000

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if her Department's budget in the financial year 1999–2000 includes any expected proceeds from the sale of the Commonwealth Development Corporation. [68086]

Clare Short: I refer to my reply to the hon. Member on 2 November 1998, Official Report, column 301. There was no expectation of any proceeds in 1999–2000. As I have made clear, the figures for the development budget announced at the time of the Comprehensive Spending Review took account of some of the anticipated proceeds in subsequent years from the sale of the Commonwealth Development Corporation. However, if the proceeds were not realised in full, the development budget would nevertheless be maintained at the levels announced for 1999–2000 to 2001–02.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures the Commonwealth Development Corporation will take to increase its return to investors following the introduction of the public/private partnership arrangements. [68102]

Clare Short: The Commonwealth Development Corporation (CDC) intends to achieve an increase in its investment returns, in part, through continuing the shift to equity investments. CDC's method of working, which relies on close management of equity positions, also improves its ability to identify and pursue good investments.

Rwanda

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the need for post-trauma counselling in Rwanda. [68101]

Clare Short: We have not been directly involved in assessing the need for post-trauma counselling although other donors, including United Nations Children's Fund, have been involved in this important area. Rwanda is a deeply traumatised society. The Rwandan Government's reconciliation agenda recognises this. The partnership we are developing with the Government is focused on the provision of long-term, flexible financing in support of this agenda. The objectives of our support are set out in my letter of 26 January to my hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King), a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Somalia

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the humanitarian needs arising in Somalia. [68100]

Clare Short: The UN 1999 Consolidated Appeal for Somalia estimates that at least one million people will need emergency assistance, of whom more than 300,000 are at high risk. The main challenge is to prevent the deteriorating food situation in the south developing into a famine. I have recently agreed a £300,000 contribution towards United Nations Children's Fund supplementary feeding programmes in the area. The EC have provided 10,899 metric tonnes of food at a cost of £6 million which includes a UK contribution of £1.2 million.

The World Food Programme have sufficient food stocks to last until March and we will continue to monitor the situation closely.

Departmental Employees

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many people were employed directly by her Department on (a) 1 September 1998 and (b) 1 January 1999. [68084]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development employed directly the following:

Date	Numbers of staff
(a) September 1998	1,095
(b) January 1999	1,130

These figures do not include staff employed on contract terms both in the UK and overseas.

Sudan

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking in response to the humanitarian crisis in Sudan. [68099]

Clare Short: We have continued to be a key donor to the 1998 crisis. The World Food Programme currently holds enough stocks until the end of March. We have pressed the UN system to increase efficiency and effectiveness by producing an appeal for 1999 which is realistic and focused on humanitarian priorities and which makes full use of all delivery methods. The UN 1999 Consolidated Appeal was issued last week and we will discuss it with other multilateral and bilateral donors at a meeting of the Operation Lifeline Sudan International Advisory Committee on 12 February.

We continue to press all parties to the civil war in Sudan to come to a negotiated settlement. Peace is the only long-term solution to the humanitarian crisis.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what responsibilities which her Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by her Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to her Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68408]

Clare Short: The Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) looked rigorously at all of the Department's programmes to ensure they met the new Government's objectives. Changes were made to ensure that our resources are focused more explicitly on the overarching goal of eliminating poverty. Specifically:

(a) programmes and projects which did not meet our objectives were ended. For example, the Aid and Trade Provision.

(b) We concluded that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) should take full responsibility for the grant in aid to the British Council, previously shared between the Department for International Development (DFID) and FCO. This responsibility and expenditure provision has been transferred.

(c) Nil.

(d) The CSR endorsed the enhanced role for (DFID) set out the Government's White Paper on International Development. This includes promoting consistency in UK and international policies which affect poorer countries. In addition, the Department now gives greater emphasis to working with the international community towards agreed goals and to efforts to improve the effectiveness of the international system.

Colombia (Earthquake)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department has taken to help the people of Colombia following the earthquake. [68569]

Clare Short: Our programme of support to the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs helped ensure that these agencies moved speedily to conduct initial damage and needs assessments following the severe earthquake on Colombia on 25 January. We have responded quickly to the appeal for assistance from the Government of Colombia by contributing US$1 million through humanitarian agencies. In addition, the European Community's Humanitarian Office has contributed $1.25 million, of which the UK share is $187,500.

Our funds are supporting the Pan-American Health Organisation to enable the deployment of epidemiology specialists, conduct damage assessment to health facilities, water and sewerage infrastructure and purchase medical supplies; the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement to bring life-saving assistance to 100,000 people; Oxfam for a programme to provide drinking water for 80,000 people, as well as emergency shelter and household utensils, concentrating particularly on the poorer districts of the city of America and outlying towns; and United Nations Children's Fund to cover the immediate needs of children including those orphaned or separated from their families. Funds allocated to the British Embassy are providing urgently needed medicines and chemical toilets.

Inevitably a catastrophe of this nature and magnitude creates practical and logistical problems on the ground. Therefore, it is important that the relief is carefully targeted and effectively coordinated. We continue to work with the humanitarian agencies in Colombia and elsewhere to strengthen the international system to be better prepared and more effective in responding to disasters.

We are continuing to monitor the situation closely and remain ready to offer further assistance in Colombia to help with unmet priority needs that may emerge in coming days.

Nicaragua (Hurricane Mitch)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the assistance given by her Department to the relief effort in Nicaragua since Hurricane Mitch. [68454]

Clare Short: We have provided a grant to United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) for emergency repairs to water and sanitation infrastructure, and have agreed in principle a further grant to UNICEF to help restore primary health and education services. Regionally, we have given grants to the Pan-American Health Organisation to support national health authorities, principally for epidemic control, and to the United Nations Development Programme to support co-ordination.

We were instrumental in setting up the Trust Fund to help countries affected by Hurricane Mitch meet their debt service payments to international financial institutions, and have committed £10 million to this purpose. Together with other members of the Paris Club, the UK Government have agreed to a moratorium on Nicaragua's debt service payments for the next two years.

Coral Reefs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to aid the preservation of coral reefs since 1 July 1998. [66996]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 21.

SCOTLAND

Ward Beds

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many ward beds were available in Edinburgh in 1995; how many ward beds will be available in Edinburgh upon the completion of the new Edinburgh Royal Infirmary; and what were the service costs for the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary for each of the years between 1990 and 1995. [65957]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 20 January 1999]: The average number of available staffed in-patient beds in hospitals in the city of Edinburgh in 1995 to 1998 and the proposed number from 1999 to 2003 when the new Royal Infirmary will be completed are set out in the table.

Year[1]	Acute beds[2,3]	Non-acute beds[4]	Total beds
1995	1,901	2,591	4,492
1996	1,806	2,516	4,322
1997	1,631	2,462	4,093
1998	1,621	2,259	3,880
1999	1,623	2,269	3,892
2000	1,623	2,321	3,944
2001	1,617	2,313	3,930
2002	1,617	2,313	3,930
2003	1,557	2,264	3,821

The running costs for the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh for each of the years between 1990 and 1995 are set out in the table.

£000

Year ending 31 March	Total hospital running costs[5,6]
1990	48,984
1991	51,584
1992	66,169
1993	75,295
1994	88,780
1995	86,777

[1] Information provided by Lothian Health Board.
[2] Lothian Health Board's Acute Services Strategy proposes new patterns of health care and an increase in the provision of community health care services. The proposed number of acute beds (1999 onwards) has been determined by hospital doctors.
[3] 1995–97 data for acute services include winter beds.
[4] Lothian Health Board has been transferring resources to local authorities to provide 843 places in the community by the year 2003. These places are included in the non-acute bed numbers.
[5] Total hospital running costs reflect hospital operating expenses after netting off re-charges.
[6] There have been service transfers and some re-organisation at this site during the time period, including a change from Directly Managed Unit to Trust status.
Notes:
From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Lambs (Tagging)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the welfare implications of the requirement that farmers tag or tattoo all lambs for sale; what representations he has received on this issue; what discussions he has had with the European Union about this requirement; what estimate he has made of the additional cost to Scottish farmers of this requirement; what is the legal basis for this requirement; and for what reasons the requirement is being introduced. [68002]

Mr. Macdonald: EC Council Directive 92/102, which requires all sheep to be tagged or tattooed before they leave the holding of birth, was adopted in November 1992. The Directive requires Member States to establish a system of identifying and registering animals. The Scottish agricultural industry is being consulted on how best to meet this legal requirement. Questions about the practicality of unique tagging of animals, the costs associated with doing so and the necessary additional record-keeping involved have all been raised during the consultations and are under consideration. The flexibility allowed within the Directive as to when to apply the tag should help minimise welfare concerns. It is estimated that tagging sheep in according with the Directive could cost about approximately £2 million.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Organic Farming

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the amount of farmland (a) converted, (b) under conversion and (c) considering conversion to organic; what assessment he has made of future trends in this area; and if he will make a statement on the geographical spread of such land. [67765]

Mr. Macdonald: As at 31 December, there were 24,987 h.a. of converted organic land in Scotland as recorded by the United Kingdom Register of Organic Food Standards and 4,124 h.a. of land in conversion. Latest data on the number of farmers in Scotland receiving payments under the Scottish Organic Aid Scheme to convert to organic farming methods indicate there are currently around 53,000 h.a. entered into the Scheme, fairly evenly spread across the whole of the country. It is not possible to give numbers of those considering conversion. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's strategy for helping Scottish farmers capitalise on the high demand for organic food in the UK; and if he will make a statement on current departmental initiatives in this area. [67748]

Mr. Macdonald: Farmers wishing to convert to organic farming methods can obtain assistance to do so from the Scottish Organic Aid Scheme and work is currently underway to introduce further improvements to the scheme. Assistance is also available to Scottish organic farmers to encourage better processing and marketing of their produce and organics are classed as a priority under the Scottish Processing and Marketing Grant Scheme. The Scottish Marketing Development Scheme is also available to help producers become more competitive and market orientated. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Dounreay

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 January 1999, Official Report, columns 233–34, on Dounreay what assessment he has made of the health dangers which could result from exposure of bait collectors to fuel fragments. [68139]

Mr. Galbraith: This matter was considered in the Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA) Report "Fragments of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel in the Dounreay Local Environment", which was referred to in the Answer of 14 January. That report took account of advice from the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) which, in turn, was informed by work carried out by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE).

The advice in the SEPA report was that the fuel fragments were not likely to affect the health of members of the public unless there was direct skin contact with, or accidental ingestion of, a fragment.

The effect of contact or ingestion would depend on the nature and length of contact with, and the activity of, the fragment. In the event of accidental contact with a fragment the effect could be some blistering of the skin and possible infection, unless the contact was prolonged. The effect of ingestion would depend on the activity of the fragment and whether it passed through the body or lodged in the gut. The immediate effects could range from no detectable effect to severe gastro-intestinal illness. In the longer term, the risks of developing a cancer could be marginally increased. The annual probability of bait collectors within the intertidal zone at Sandside beach making skin contact with a fragment was estimated at 1 in 200,000 in the SEPA report. There have been no known cases of bait collectors or any other member of the public coming into contact with particles.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

NHSnet

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 518, on NHSnet, what assessment he has made of the number and proportion of hospital appointments being made through NHSnet; what the average waiting time is between placing a request for information on NHSnet and obtaining the information; and if he will make a statement. [68166]

Mr. Galbraith: The Government are committed to developing an electronic booking system by 2002 which will allow patients to know the date and time of any hospital outpatient appointment before leaving their GP surgery.

At present electronic appointment booking is taking place at a small number of pilot sites while a number of key building blocks are put in place to deliver this commitment, including:

Linking all NHS in Scotland organisations to the NHSnet

Electronic links between GPs and hospitals enabling the fast secure transmission of messages between primary and secondary care

Using the Community Health Index (CHI) number in all NHS computer bases systems to identify patients and relevant information about them whenever they are treated

Training for health care staff to carry out tasks using information technology

An appropriate form of assessment will be put into place as the system develops. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Hospital Locums

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of agencies which provide locums for temporary employment in hospital trusts; and if he will make a statement. [67982]

Mr. Galbraith: No assessment has been made of agencies which provide locums for temporary employment in hospital trusts. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to issue regulations governing the conduct of agencies which provide locums for temporary employment in hospital trusts; and if he will make a statement. [68340]

Mr. Galbraith: There are no plans to issue regulations governing the conduct of agencies which provide locums for temporary employment in hospital trusts. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Farmers (Bank Borrowing)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the total level of bank borrowing by Scotland's farmers in each of the last 10 years; and what discussions he has had with the NFU and the Scottish clearing banks on this matter. [68003]

Mr. Macdonald: The only comprehensive survey of bank lending to Scottish agriculture is conducted annually by the Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department. The results for the last ten years, in both current and at 1998 prices, are given in the following table.

Total advances to Scottish agriculture, 1989–98

£ million

Year (end-May)	Advances Current prices	Real terms 1998 prices
1989	909	1,292
1990	888	1,150
1991	884	1,083
1992	895	1,050
1993	868	1,006
1994	893	1,009
1995	893	976
1996	941	1,006
1997	966	1,007
1998	1,064	1,064

As the table shows, bank borrowings, in real terms, are now lower than they were 8 to 10 years ago, as are real interest rates.

Ministers and officials meet the National Farmers Union of Scotland and the agricultural representatives of the four Scottish Clearing banks on a regular basis to discuss a variety of issues affecting Scottish farming including the level of bank borrowings. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the Scottish NFU on 22 December 1998 while my noble Friend Lord Sewel last met them on 22 January 1999. Officials last met the banks on 25 January 1999.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces Pay Review Body

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the report and recommendations of the Armed Forces Pay Review Body. [68819]

Mr. George Robertson: The 1999 Report of the Armed Forces Pay Review Body has been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House. I am grateful to the Chairman and members of the Review Body for the work they have put into the report.

In the Comprehensive Spending Review the Government made it clear that public sector pay settlements would need to be fair, affordable and consistent with targets for public service improvements we have set. The new arrangements announced in the CSR for the Pay Review Bodies were designed to ensure a closer and more effective link between pay settlements, departmental expenditure limits and service delivery targets. Under these new arrangements, the AFPRB now reports to me, as responsible Departmental Minister, as well as to the Prime Minister. The Terms of Reference of the AFPRB were revised to ensure that, in making their recommendations, four key consideration set out in the CSR were taken into account:

recruitment, retention and motivation of the Armed Forces;

the requirements for departments to meet their output targets for the delivery of services; requirement for departments to stay within their three-year expenditure limits;

the Government's inflation target, requiring responsibility in pay settlements across the public and private sectors.

The AFPRB has recommended an increase in basic military salary of about 3.5 per cent. for all ranks, with the exception of: Privates and Lance Corporals (and their equivalents) who should receive 3.6 per cent.; Lieutenants and Captains (and their equivalents) who should receive 3.7 per cent.; and Brigadiers (and their equivalents) who should receive 3.3 per cent. Additional Pay (eg Flying Pay and Submarine Pay) will also increase by 3.3 per cent.

I am satisfied that these recommendations take account of the four key considerations and will support the Services' strategies to achieve full manning. The additional cost of this settlement will be contained within my Department's expenditure limits announced in July and we will continue to meet the objectives and targets set out in my Public Service Agreements. This is in line with the Government's prudent and disciplined approach to public spending and its commitment to delivering high quality public services and low inflation.

The AFPRB's recommendations are to be accepted in full, with implementation effective from 1 April 1999.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations the Government have had with other Governments on the subject of research and evidence of Gulf War Syndrome. [64997]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence continues to liaise closely with the US Government on all aspects of Gulf veterans' illnesses. These links are of particular importance because the USA has the largest population of Gulf veterans—some 700,000 US personnel deployed to the Gulf in 1990–91—and there is a substantial federally funded research programme underway there.

My predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton, North and Bellshill (Dr. Reid), visited the US in October 1997 to discuss Gulf veterans' illnesses issues and I intend to visit the US myself later this year to see at first hand how the US Government are responding to this complex and difficult problem and to discuss the way forward. The MOD has a full time Gulf Health Liaison Officer based in Washington, who works on a daily basis with US federal agencies and research teams. In addition, the UK is represented on the US Persian Gulf veterans Co-ordinating Board Research Working Group, which oversees all US federal research looking at Gulf veterans' illnesses, in order that the UK can have full visibility of that research, both to keep abreast of the latest developments and to avoid duplication of effort. In the course of dealing with this subject, MOD officials have also discussed Gulf veterans' illnesses issues with officials and researchers from a number of other counties, including France, Canada, the Netherlands and Denmark.

The MOD continues to monitor all published research which may be relevant to the issue of Gulf veterans' illnesses. In June last year, my Department announced that it would be funding an independent systematic literature review of worldwide published research relating to Gulf veterans' illnesses. The review, commissioned through the Medical Research Council (MRC), will be carried out over a period of 3 years by a team led by Professor Glyn Lewis at the University of Wales School of Medicine in Cardiff. The findings of the review will be published at six-monthly intervals. An initial report to the MRC is expected in the Spring, with the first full report likely to be published in Autumn.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British Gulf War veterans have subsequently tested positive for depleted uranium poisoning having not exhibited symptoms during examination by Medical Assessment Programme physicians which indicated a requirement for a specific referral to another agency or organisation for depleted uranium testing. [65974]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In general, the Ministry of Defence has no knowledge of any tests, including those to detect the presence of DU, which may have been carried out on Gulf veterans independently of the Gulf veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (MAP), through other organisations providing medical or radiological services. However, the Ministry of Defence is aware that a US physician is reported as having carried out tests for the presence of DU on some UK Gulf veterans. So far, however, my Department has not received any details of the methodology behind the tests which have been performed or of the results reportedly obtained. Hence, at present, the MOD is not able to comment on these reported findings.

Nevertheless, as I explained in my reply of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 521, I have asked my officials to collate the information which the MOD possesses concerning mechanisms which could be used to test for the presence of uranium in the human body. I expect to publish this work shortly, and shall make arrangements for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason the standard battery of tests routinely carried out on Medical Assessment Programme patients does not include a specific test to detect depleted uranium. [65973]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The medical programme which became the Gulf veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (MAP) was set up in July 1993 in order to examine veterans who were unwell and who believed their illness was related to their service in the Gulf. The intention was to provide a diagnosis wherever possible and to document all illness in veterans referred to the Programme. A veteran referred to the Programme was examined by a Consultant Physician and a number of tests and examinations were carried out. This essentially remains the case today.

When the Programme was first established, Wg Cdr (now Gp Capt) Bill Coker (who ran it until December 1996) initially carried out those tests he felt necessary on clinical grounds to establish a diagnosis. When the number of patients referred to the MAP increased, he carried out a number of screening tests, similar to those then used by the US Department of Defense's Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Programme (the US DoD's equivalent to the MAP). These screening tests did not include a test to detect the presence of uranium because Gp Capt Coker had not previously seen any features in patients to indicate that such testing was clinically necessary. The US experience had suggested that the urinary excretion of uranium was only significantly increased in those veterans with retained DU fragments. As MOD was not aware of any UK Service personnel who had sustained shrapnel injuries from DU-based ammunition, it was not thought appropriate to screen routinely for uranium excretion, although testing could be carried out on a case by case basis if clinically indicated. Any other tests considered clinically appropriate would also be performed, these additional tests varying from patient to patient. This system of investigation was in place at the time of the Royal College of Physicians' (RCP) clinical audit in 1995.

The RCP's subsequent report, published in July 1995, endorsed the MAP's professional independence and integrity and made specific comments on how the Programme could be improved. However, with the exception of a recommendation concerning psychiatric assessments, the RCP did not recommend any changes to the tests and examinations carried out by the MAP.

The baseline tests currently carried out on MAP patients by St. Thomas' Hospital on the MAP's behalf are very similar to those which were in place at the time of the RCP audit in 1995. They are as follows:

Full blood count and sedimentation rate (FBC/ESR)
Full biochemical screen, including renal function tests (urea, electrolytes and creatinine) liver function tests (LFT), calcium and blood sugar
Immunoglobulin analysis
Creatine kinase
Thyroid function tests (TFT)
Serological screening tests
Chest X-ray (CXR)
Ultrasound abdominal scan
Electrocardiogram (ECG)
Urinalysis
Peak-flow lung measurement (to determine the necessity for vitalography)

A thorough audit of the MAP is currently under way. It is looking at all aspects of patient care and the service provided by the MAP. The range of tests and examinations currently undertaken at the MAP will be reviewed in the light of the results of this audit process.

I should stress that the tests listed are only baseline investigations; additional and/or referrals to other consultants/specialists are sometimes required. Any tests which are considered clinically appropriate by the examining MAP physician, including those to detect the presence of uranium, will be arranged, as I explained in my reply of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 521.

In the same answer, I also announced that I had asked my officials to collate the information which the MOD possesses concerning mechanisms which could be used to test for the presence of uranium in the human body. I expect to publish this work shortly, and shall make arrangements for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what research has been conducted into Aspartame as a possible cause of Gulf War Syndrome; [66676]

(2) what evidence he has assessed of a possible link between Aspartame and Gulf War Syndrome. [66675]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence is aware that Aspartame, an artificial sweetener, has been suggested as a possible cause of the illnesses being experienced by some Gulf veterans. However, this is only one of many such suggestions in this context and my Department is not aware of any published scientific evidence to support this theory. So far as the Ministry of Defence is aware, no specific research is being conducted to investigate a possible relationship between the consumption of Aspartame and Gulf veterans' illnesses.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if research on exposure of military personnel to organophosphates in the Gulf War has been completed; and whether it will be published. [67477]

Mr. Doug Henderson: When it became apparent that organophosphate (OP) pesticides had been more widely used by UK forces during the Gulf conflict than had previously been thought, the Ministry of Defence carried out an urgent investigation into the circumstances in which they had been used. The investigation team's report was published on 10 December 1996. Copies of this report were placed in the Library of the House. Broadly, the team found that OP pesticides were, in the main, used properly by personnel who are trained in the safe use of such products, including the wearing of Personal Protective Equipment.

The Ministry of Defence is currently funding a programme of research into different aspects of Gulf veterans' illnesses. None of these studies is specifically aimed at investigating a possible relationship between exposure to OP pesticides and such illnesses.

Research to investigate the effects of low level exposure to OP pesticides in the context of the health concerns of farm workers, funded jointly by the Department of Health, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) and the Health and Safety Executive, is well under way at the Institute of Occupational Medicine in Edinburgh. This will be an important step towards understanding the possible effects of potential exposures during the Gulf conflict. Final data analysis is currently taking place and the study as a whole is expected to be completed in April this year. The study team's report is expected later in the Summer. The MAFF is also currently funding a study at the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) at Porton Down to determine whether a low dose of the OP diazinon will give rise to adverse long term effects.

RN Hospital, Haslar

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many consultants, employed by his Department, (a) work and (b) are based for the majority of their time at the RN Hospital, Haslar. [65779]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by the Chief Executive of the Defence Secondary Care Agency on 12 January 1999, Official Report, columns 146–47. All those listed are consultants with the exception of the Civilian Medical Practitioners, Specialist Registrars, Senior House Officers and Pre Registration House Officers.

All those listed work and are based at the Royal Hospital Haslar for the majority of their time.

Military Training

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the status of military schools and the means by which students in such schools are able to leave before completion of their studies; [66064]

(2) if military training comes under Ministry of Defence regulations with respect to notice periods and payments. [66065]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 18 January 1999]: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Astute Class (Submarines)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the crew number of the Astute Class of submarines. [66165]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The first 3 Astute Class submarines, out of a planned class of 5, are being designed and built under a Prime Contract awarded to GEC-Marconi in March 1997 with delivery expected in the middle of the next decade. Design work continues and the normal sea going complement is currently expected to be 98, although the submarine should be capable of taking up to 109 personnel to sea when required.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what budget has been allocated within his Department to deal with the millennium bug. [66881]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 21 January 1999]: The estimated additional cost of the total Year 2000 programme within MOD is £200m, which is being found from within existing defence provision by the rescheduling of other tasks. This sum does not include the cost of replacing or upgrading systems as part of a planned program.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his Department's systems are currently not millennium compliant. [66751]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 21 January 1999]: Work to date has concentrated on identifying which MOD equipments are critical to our Defence capability, and ensuring that these systems will be compliant. Currently, around 60 per cent. of such systems are reported as compliant and programmes are in place to ensure that the remaining business critical systems are made compliant in good time.

Accommodation

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his policy to provide single accommodation for all single service personnel. [66745]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 21 January 1999]: When we published the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review the supporting White Paper entitled "A Policy for People" stated that:

"In future, new single accommodation will be built so that, in most instances, individuals of all ranks will be provided with a single room. There are plans in place now to raise the standard of some existing single living accommodation, and we have initiated a survey of all single living accommodation to inform our longer term aspiration to improve the whole estate."

The Chief Executive of the Defence Estate Organisation is leading a study of the optimum approach to our single living accommodation improvement programme, which should report later this year. Our plans recognise the diverse needs and circumstances of our Service men and women and, whilst we aspire to single rooms for the majority, team-based accommodation may be more appropriate for some.

CS Sprays

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of the solvents which are used in CS sprays held by his Department. [67598]

Mr. Spellar: All the CS sprays currently held by the Ministry of Defence contain the solvent commonly known as methylene chloride.

Non-lethal Warfare

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what co-operation there is between Britain and the United States of America on non-lethal warfare; how many collaboration agreements have been signed with the United States of America; what are the names of these agreements; when the agreements were signed and for what reasons; and if he will make a statement. [67599]

Mr. Spellar: On 18 November 1994, the UK and US Defence Secretaries signed a UK-US Master Information Exchange Memorandum of Understanding on the subject of non-lethal weapons. The first information exchange, which covers "Non-lethal weapons systems", was signed on 2 February 1998.

International collaboration agreements help to inform our decisions on future strategies and equipment, as well as improving interoperability with our Allies and coalition partners.

Military Airfields (Private Companies)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances private companies may export goods by air from military airfields. [68197]

Mr. Spellar: A private company wishing to export goods requires prior permission from HM Customs if the aircraft is to fly to a non-EU country from any UK airfield. The same rules apply regardless of whether the airfield is military or civilian.

Nitroglycerine

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the advantages of the retention of a United Kingdom based capability to manufacture nitroglycerine. [68077]

Mr. Spellar: There are nitroglycerine manufacturing facilities currently operating at the Royal Ordnance factories at Summerfield and Bishopton. The retention of an indigenous capability to manufacture multi-based ammunition propellants, of which nitroglycerine is a part, were considered very carefully as part of the Modular Charge System contract decision.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the management of British Aerospace concerning the maintenance of a nitroglycerine manufacturing facility in the United Kingdom. [68078]

Mr. Spellar: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has met with the management of British Aerospace on a number of occasions since May 1997. The maintenance of a nitroglycerine manufacturing facility in the United Kingdom has not been a topic of discussion.

Project ASH

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to date of Project ASH; to whom the contract was originally let; which companies have subsequently been involved; when the database and management aid for handling unexploded ordnance will be in service; and if he will make a statement. [68074]

Mr. Spellar: The cost to date of Project ASH is around £2.7m including VAT. A contract for development and production was placed with EDS Defence Ltd. in November 1994. Other companies which have been involved are Bactec International Ltd., for database population, VEGA Group PLC, providing technical support to the Ministry of Defence Procurement Executive, and Thompson-Thorn Missile Electronics Ltd., who are conducting work on training needs. Although ASH was accepted into service in October 1996, further work was required to be done to the database and for management aid for handling unexploded ordnance. Following user trials in February 1999 it is expected that an improved version of ASH will be accepted and subsequently deployed to Bosnia to assist Army Explosive Ordnance Disposal teams.

Scottish Procurement

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent in Scotland on defence procurement in the last year for which figures are available; how much of that was passed to sub-contractors (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total; and what estimate he has made of the percentage of sub-contracted work which remains in Scotland. [68076]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD spent £550 million, VAT-exclusive; to the nearest £50 million, on defence equipment from contractors based in Scotland during 1996–97. The MOD does not record payments made to sub-contractors and has not made an estimate of what those payments might be.

Propellants

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the munitions currently used by Her Majesty's forces which are propelled by products from Royal Ordnance, Bishopton; and what steps have been taken by his Department to secure supplies of propellants following the end of production at Royal Ordnance, Bishopton. [68080]

Mr. Spellar: The Armed Forces use propellant produced at Royal Ordnance Bishopton to fire a range of 105mm and 155mm artillery projectiles and 120mm tank projectiles, the Naval 4.5" Gun and rocket motors for the Royal Navy's Sea Wolf and Sea Skua missiles. It also produces raw propellant material used in a number of in-service missiles and small calibre ammunition manufactured at other locations. We have considered carefully the future supply of propellants currently made at Royal Ordnance Bishopton and are satisfied that, where necessary, sufficient and reliable alternative sources exist overseas to meet future MOD requirements should the facility close. Royal Ordnance remain responsible for meeting all its commitments under existing contracts with the MOD.

Sully Hospital (Land Decontamination)

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has to authorise decontamination works on his Department's land at Sully Hospital in the Vale of Glamorgan; [67861]

(2) what assessment he has made of the health and public safety risks associated with (a) the contamination of his Department's land adjacent to Sully Hospital in the Vale of Glamorgan and (b) the works required to decontaminate that land; [67864]

(3) what is the nature and extent of the contamination of his Department's land adjacent to Sully Hospital in the Vale of Glamorgan; [67860]

(4) what assessment he has made of (a) the work required to decontaminate his Department's land adjacent to Sully Hospital in the Vale of Glamorgan and (b) its cost. [67862]

Mr. Spellar: A Land Quality Assessment is being commissioned by the Oil Pipelines Agency to determine whether the Ministry of Defence land adjacent to Sully Hospital is contaminated and, if so, the extent of the contamination. It is expected that the outcome of the Assessment will be known by the end of the year.

Panzer Tank (Disposal)

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons a German Panzer IV/70(V) was disposed of from the Royal Military College of Science, Shrivenham, in August 1998; what other examples there are of this tank in other (a) national or local museums and (b) military establishments; and what was the disposal price of the tank. [68211]

Mr. Spellar: The Royal Military College of Science, Shrivenham did not dispose of a German Panzer IV/70(V) tank in 1998. The only complete example of a Panzer MkIV in the UK held by us is at the Tank Museum, Bovington. The Imperial War Museum has a cut down (incomplete) example of the Panzer MkIV but neither is an example of the 70(V) variant (there are ten variants of the Panzer MkIV including the 70(V). There are no examples of the Panzer MkIV/70(V) held at military establishments.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Lottery Grants (Barnsley)

11. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals he has which would increase the distribution of lottery grants to Barnsley. [66770]

Mr. Chris Smith: I want Lottery money to address the needs of communities across the whole of the United Kingdom. I welcome the National Lottery Charities Board's designation of Barnsley as a priority area for Lottery funding and will follow the progress of this initiative closely. I have also launched with the distributing bodies an investigation into the reasons for low take-up of Lottery funding in coalfield areas.

25. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received following his meeting with local authorities in Barnsley last autumn when the equalisation of National Lottery grants was discussed; and if he will make a statement. [66784]

Mr. Chris Smith: Representatives from the coalfields areas have confirmed the need for action to address the problems these areas face in obtaining Lottery funding and have supported the measures announced at the Coalfields Lottery Conference to address the balance.

I welcome the National Lottery Charities Board's designation of Barnsley as a priority area for Lottery funding and will follow the progress of this initiative closely. I have also launched with the distributing bodies an investigation into the reasons for low take-up of Lottery funding in coalfield areas.

Channel 4

12. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on Government plans for Channel 4. [66771]

Janet Anderson: Channel Four is a central element in the Government's vision for the broadcasting industry in the digital future. I expect it to continue to provide a vital role in providing distinctive and innovative public service programming of high quality.

Architectural Design

14. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress he has made in implementing proposals to establish a national body to champion British architectural design. [66774]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have advertised for a Chairman for the new body. We have set up an Implementation Group of seven people which will be able to present its conclusions to the Chairman on his or her appointment. The new body should be fully operational in the autumn.

Social Exclusion

15. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress has been made by the policy action team on the contribution that sports and the arts can make to tackling social exclusion. [66775]

Mr. Chris Smith: Policy Action Team 10, led by DCMS, has met on several occasions. The Team includes a number of people engaged in local projects tackling issues of social inclusion, and experts on specific issues such as funding, building partnerships and community development. The group has undertaken visits to successful arts and sporting projects which are combating social exclusion around the country. The Team will report in early summer 1999 on its findings.

Seaside Resorts

16. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support he has given to the tourism industry in seaside resorts. [66776]

Janet Anderson: Of the £3.8 billion of Single Regeneration Budget funding available over the next three years, 44 of the bids included proposals for the regeneration of seaside resorts. But the future of our seaside resorts depends on all those involved in both private and public sectors working together to develop the sort of products now needed and with the quality and value for money which visitors expect.

Our strategy for tourism, to be published on 26 February 1999, addresses this important industry sector and will help create the right framework in which tourism can flourish.

Departmental Spending (Administration)

17. Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to reduce his Department's spending on administration. [66777]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department is committed to reducing its running costs as a proportion of its Department Expenditure Limit (DEL).

Public Art (Economic Regeneration)

18. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the role of public art in economic regeneration. [66778]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Arts Council of England is currently carrying out an independent evaluation of Lottery funded public art commissions. I am in no doubt, however, of the ability of public art to improve the urban landscape, enhance local neighbourhood identity, encourage inward investment, create local employment and develop skills through programmes of participation, education and training.

National Lottery

19. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on Camelot's plans for the National Lottery in December 1999 and January 2000. [66779]

Mr. Chris Smith: Decisions on licensing new Lottery draws and games are for the Director General of the National Lottery or, after 1 April 1999, the National Lottery Commissioners. I understand that the Director General has not received any applications from Camelot to run new Lottery games in December 1999 or January 2000.

School Sport

20. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the playing of sports in schools. [66794]

Mr. Banks: Sport in schools is essential for a broad and balanced education to which all children are entitled.

I want schools to provide more opportunities for their pupils to take part in sporting activities. It is important that young people have access to a range of physical activities within and beyond the school curriculum.

Sport in schools is a key feature of our sport strategy paper and we are collaborating with the Department for Education and Employment, who have sole responsibility for the National Curriculum, to determine how school sporting activities can best be focused and supported. We have invigorated a range of initiatives to achieve this; these include the Sportsmark award scheme for high quality school sport, a new scheme for primary schools, the Sporting Ambassadors programme of visits to schools by prominent sportsmen and women and Study Support for example in Premier League Football Clubs. We have also fed into the current review of the National Curriculum by the QCA.

Arts (Access)

21. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what policies his Department is pursuing to increase access to the arts for people on modest incomes. [66780]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The many activities which my Department supports have a fundamental impact on an individual's quality of life. Increasing access to the arts continues to be at the heart of our policy. Through the New Audiences Fund, more than 100 pilot schemes which increase access to a wide range of art forms have already benefited from over £3 million in additional project funding. Many arts events are now more affordable for those with modest or no income. Further grants from the New Audiences Fund, totalling over £1 million, will be announced later this month.

QUEST

22. Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to ensure value for money and best practice in bodies sponsored by his Department. [66781]

Mr. Chris Smith: I announced in December the establishment of the Quality, Efficiency and Standards Team (QUEST) to provide independent advice on the improvement of performance across all our sectors and to disseminate good practice. This will be in addition to the existing oversight of NDPBs exercised by my Department.

23. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what areas of responsibility will be covered by QUEST. [66782]

Mr. Chris Smith: QUEST's role will be to improve and sustain quality, standards and performance in all the fields for which my Department is responsible.

Tourism Strategy

24. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to ensure that each region of the UK benefits from the tourism industry. [66783]

Janet Anderson: The new strategy for tourism which we shall publish on 26 February 1999 will help create the right framework in which tourism can flourish. Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland will have their own strategies, reflecting differing regional priorities.

Within England, as I announced on 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 352, following our Comprehensive Spending Review, there will be a transformed national tourism body and more resources will be used for support of tourism in the regions. The Regional Tourist Boards, working with their commercial members, local authorities and the Regional Development Agencies will together deliver the economic, environmental and social benefits well-managed and appropriately delivered tourism can bring to each region.

Local Theatres

27. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to bring forward proposals to change the funding of local theatres through the Art Board. [66786]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government believe strongly in delegation. The new Arts Council which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State appointed last year shares that view and has already proposed that a substantial element of the extra resources for the arts that the Government are providing should be delegated to the Regional Arts Boards. It will be for the Regional Arts Boards to take decisions on the funding for specific artforms or organisations within their regions, including theatre.

Wembley Stadium

28. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what role his Department will play in the development of the new Wembley stadium and related infrastructure. [66787]

Mr. Banks: I am keeping a very close eye on progress with the development of the new National Stadium, although my Department has no direct role in funding or constructing the stadium and relating infrastructure. The project is central to our plans to bring the major international sporting events to this country.

Millennium Dome (Waste Disposal)

33. Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on plans for waste disposal at the dome. [66792]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has implemented a number of procedures for controlling waste during the construction phase of the dome. All contractors are required to specify waste management practices within their tender documentation, and implementation of these practices is assessed by weekly inspections and spot checks.

During the year of the Millennium Experience, NMEC will adopt a waste management strategy based on the concepts of waste reduction, re-use, recycling and efficient removal from the site. NMEC is currently investigating supply strategies that will minimise the quantity of packaging coming onto the site, but will then provide facilities to allow separation of those major waste streams that are generated in order that they can be processed or recycled efficiently.

The final details of the operational strategy will be defined with the assistance of site caterers who are likely to have the greatest impact on waste generation. However, where it is practical to do so, NMEC's catering strategy will encourage use of re-usable cutlery and crockery. Where this is not possible caterers will aim to use cutlery and crockery made from recycled or recyclable materials.

Millennium Dome (Concessionary Fares)

34. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the New Millennium Experience Company with a view to developing special concessionary fares and entry/travel packages for families and frequent visitors to the dome. [66793]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company aims to ensure that as many people as possible can, if they wish, visit the dome at Greenwich. In developing the ticket pricing strategy the Company has been concerned to include attractive discounts for a number of groups. The Company has also been in discussion for a number of months with the travel trade and I am confident that these discussions will result in combined travel and dome admission packages from all parts of the UK.

Millennium Dome (Expenditure)

35. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement about parliamentary accountability for expenditure on the Millennium Dome. [66795]

Mr. Chris Smith: My noble Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office is the sole shareholder of the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) on behalf of the Government and is therefore accountable to Parliament for the Company's overall performance. I will be answering to this House on all matters relating to my noble Friend's responsibilities in respect of the NMEC.

At official level, the arrangements for parliamentary accountability for expenditure on the dome mirror those which apply to all non-departmental public bodies. The Company's Chief Executive was appointed, by the Permanent Secretary of the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, as Accounting Officer for the dome. She is therefore personally responsible to Parliament for use of the company's money.

The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is not of course, in receipt of Exchequer funds. It receives Lottery funding from the Millennium Commission. The Director of the Millennium Commission has formal Accounting Officer responsibility for the Commission's use of Lottery money. In addition, the DCMS Permanent Secretary, as Accounting Officer for the National Lottery Development Fund has responsibilities in respect of the overall use of Lottery funds.

Landmark Millennium Projects

36. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions he has had with the organisers of the 23 landmark millennium projects about sponsorship money. [66797]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Millennium Commission, which I chair, makes it a condition of grant to capital projects that at least 50 per cent. of the total project cost is raised through partnership funding, and this includes sponsorship in some cases. The Commission works closely with each project and is therefore involved in ongoing discussions about matched funding.

Dance (Scotland)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has held with the Scottish Office on the funding of dance following the takeover of responsibility by the Scottish Parliament. [66773]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Support for the arts in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Football Task Force

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects the football task force to publish its report on the commercial aspects of the game. [66785]

Mr. Banks: I have been told the report will be ready by the end of March 1999.

Millennium Dome (Life-span)

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the expected life of the millennium dome. [66791]

Mr. Chris Smith: The structural steelwork of the dome has a life-span of at least 60 years; and the roofing material is expected to last at least 25 years before major maintenance is necessary.

English National Stadium Development Company

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will make a statement on the role of the English National Stadium Development Company; [67556]

(2) if he will list the directors and trustees who sit on the English National Stadium Development Company Board; [67557]

(3) if he will list the terms of reference and details of the funding of the English National Stadium Development Company. [67558]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The English National Stadium Development Company is the FA vehicle charged with creating a national stadium for football, rugby league and athletics, and required to meet the technical requirements for those sports under the Lottery Funding Agreement with the English Sports Council. The current estimate for the total cost of the project is £320m, of which £120m will be funded by the Lottery, the remainder by debt financing by the FA. Membership of the Development Company Board is as follows:

Chairman:

Ken Bates

Members:

Sir David Hill Wood
David Richards
David Sheepshanks
Geoff Thompson
Lord Harris
Ernie Walker
Sir Rodney Walker
Ian Peacock
Nicholas Coward
Michael Cunnah

Sponsorship Sports

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 14 December 1998, Official Report, columns 350–51, how many times his expert group on tobacco sponsorship and alternative sponsorship has met; who its members are; how many times he expects it to meet in 1999; when he expects to receive its conclusions; and when he expects to report his response to its conclusions to the House. [R] [67138]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The group of experts met twice last year and members are now holding individual meetings with the seven sports which have sought our assistance to find alternative sponsors. To date these meetings have been very constructive. The meetings will be completed by the end of this month, after which the group will meet again to receive a report and to consider the nature and timing of help needed to replace existing contracts, many of which have several years to run. We will also consider the frequency of further meetings this year. I will keep the House advised of all significant developments.

The terms of reference of the Task Force are:

to assist sports currently in receipt of tobacco sponsorship to find replacement sponsors by:

assessing the needs of each sport; offering advice on best practice in establishing commercial relationships with sponsors; and,

assisting the sports in making links with potential new sponsors.

Membership is:

Tony Banks (Chairman)—Minister for Sport

Gordon McCallum—Virgin Group

Jon Smith—First Artist Corporation

Maurice Lindsay—Central Council for Physical Recreation

Mike Reynolds—Institute of Sports Sponsorship

Derek Etherington—DCMS Sports Sponsorship Consultant

New Opportunities Fund (ICT Training)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who prepared the specification of the skills training for the use by schools for information and communications technology funded by New Opportunities Fund moneys; and which bodies were consulted on the specification. [67390]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 25 January 1999]: A set of expected outcomes for the training have been developed that focus on the information and communication technology (ICT) knowledge, understanding and skills that teachers need to support their teaching. The outcomes are based on the new Initial Teacher Training National Curriculum, which was developed by the Teacher Training Agency. The outcomes also reflect national guidelines and in-service training in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The expected outcomes include an understanding of how to use ICT in teaching the whole class; planning, including the use of ICT for lesson preparation; and assessing pupils' work when ICT has been used.

Arts Guide (Millennium Year)

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if his Department will ensure the production of a guide on access for disabled people to arts, entertainment and leisure venues for the millennium year. [67139]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 25 January 1999]: Increasing access to the arts is a key aim for my Department. Our commitment to access and equality of opportunity for disabled people is strong and my Department is keen to ensure that there is adequate information for disabled people on all the activities which we support and fund.

There are already a number of useful guides for people with disabilities, some of which are published by Government Departments. The Department of Health has recently updated "A Practical Guide for Disabled People", which includes details of organisations which can offer advice on access to arts and leisure facilities, tourist accommodation and sports facilities. The Arts Council's publication "Arts and Disability" includes a chapter on access and details of useful contacts, including regional Access Committees, Trusts and voluntary organisations. Regional and voluntary organisations such as "Artsline" in London also offer invaluable advice.

My Department will keep under review the availability of appropriate advice for disabled people in relation to our sectors, taking into account the implications of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and of our new policy initiatives.

Chess

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what funding the Government gave to promoting and running chess for (a) young people and (b) adults in each of the last five years. [67058]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 26 January 1999]: Since my Department took over responsibility for funding chess in 1996–97, the Government has invested £49,000 each year to help the British Chess Federation (BCF) promote the development of Chess. Expenditure by the BCF on junior chess and other initiatives, from the funding provided by my Department, is as follows:

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Junior chess development	14,542	16,180	13,870
Other initiatives	34,458	32,820	35,130

An analysis for earlier years is not available. Whilst I am pleased that funding from my Department has been able to support initiatives specifically related to junior chess development, it has also been able to contribute to and benefit all age groups.

Royal Society of Literature

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he plans to reply to the question tabled by the right hon. Member for South-West Surrey on 11 January, concerning the Royal Society of Literature. [68311]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I replied to the right hon. Member on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 264.

English Sports Council

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects to announce the appointment of a new chairman for the English Sports Council. [68115]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 January 1999]: We advertised for a new Chair for the English Sports Council last September. We received an excellent response, and have been carefully considering the candidates in accordance with the procedures laid down by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. We will announce who is to be appointed as soon as we have finished the selection process.

Tourism (Devon)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department will take to ensure that the tourist industry in Devon is supported by the RDA for the West Country. [68081]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 28 January 1999]: As our strategy for tourism will set out, the Regional Development Agencies (RDAs), Regional Tourist Boards, local authorities and other tourism partners will together deliver the economic, environmental and social benefits that well-managed and appropriately developed tourism can bring to each region.

Because of the significant economic importance of tourism there is representation of tourism specialists on the RDA boards, including that of the South West RDA.

UK Sports Institute

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has held with the British Olympic Committee about the UK Sports Institute. [68114]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 January 1999]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Sport regularly has meetings with Craig Reedie, Chairman of the British Olympic Association, to discuss a wide range of issues including the UK Sports Institute.

The BOA have a significant role to play in the development and success of the UK Sports Institute. Mr. Reedie is also deputy chairman of the UK Sports Council which is responsible for giving strategic direction to the UK Sports Institute. He is also a member of the newly formed UK Sports Institute Implementation Committee charged with the task of overseeing the development of the UK Sports Institute Headquarters.

Staff of the BOA are closely involved with UK Sports Institute Development Groups, UK and Home County Sports Council staff, and Governing Bodies of sport, in developing the services that the UK Sports Institute will deliver to elite performers.

Television Licences

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the cost of proposals to abolish the payment of television licence fees by old age pensioners; and if he will make a statement. [67928]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 28 January 1999]: The estimated cost of providing free television licences for all pensioner only households would be £489 million a year. There are no plans at present for such a concession. The current review of the future of the BBC licence fee after 2002 will include a consideration of the current structure of the concessionary licence scheme and whether a suitable alternative structure could be available.

Tourism (North-West)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to increase financing to the North West Tourist Board. [68471]

Janet Anderson: On 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 352, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State announced the main decisions following the Departmental Spending Review. For tourism within England, these include a transformed national tourism body and more resources for the support of tourism in the regions.

A team and advisory group have been set up to oversee implementation of these new arrangements. They are considering the remit and structure of the body, the funding mechanisms for tourism support and the implications for Regional Tourist Boards.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

House of Lords

Mr. Borrow: To ask the President of the Council what representations she has received on the progress which has been made on reform of the House of Lords. [66798]

Mrs. Beckett: The publication of the Bill to remove the right of hereditary peers to sit and vote and the Government's White Paper on longer-term reform has been widely welcomed.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Speed Limits

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend the powers of local government to impose lower speed limits; and if he will make a statement. [66710]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Local Highway Authorities already have the power to set speed limits of more than 30 mph within the national speed limit without the need to obtain the consent of the Secretary of State. We shall be introducing legislation shortly aimed at allowing local highway authorities to introduce 20 mph speed limits without have to obtain consent. We will be issuing guidance to local highway authorities on the need for such limits to be combined with road engineering methods to ensure compliance.

Planning Inspectors

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning inspectors were in post on 1 January (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999. [67881]

Mr. Raynsford: The provision of information on the numbers of planning Inspectors is a matter for the Planning Inspectorate. I have therefore asked the Inspectorate's Chief Executive, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Martin Brasher to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 29 January 1999:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has passed your Question about the number of Planning Inspectors to the Planning Inspectorate for reply. I am responding in Chris Shepley's absence on official business.

The attached table sets out the information you require. A further recruitment programme is nearly complete.

Planning Inspectors—in post

Date	Full-time salaried Inspectors	Part-time salaried Inspectors	Fee-paid Inspectors
1 January 1997	217	14	201
1 January 1998	224	12	188
1 January 1999	209	45	135

Canals

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps are being taken (a) to preserve canals and (b) to increase the use of canals for (i) leisure and (ii) commerce. [67916]

Mr. Meale: The Government value the social, economic and environmental benefits that inland waterways can bring and are keen to maximise the full potential of the canal network. We believe the waterways are a substantial asset and have an important role in a number of areas such as leisure and tourism, heritage, amenity, conservation, regeneration and transport.

We have provided financial help to a range of canal restoration projects through the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund, Land Reclamation Programme grant and the Environmental Action Fund. Projects are also eligible for funding from the various Lottery distribution boards, from local authorities and from Europe. The Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council's report on their prioritisation of restoration projects will help to ensure that available funding is more effectively targeted.

The Government-sponsored British Tourist Authority (BTA) is actively promoting the waterways of Britain and Ireland. The campaign, involving partnerships with the main waterway industry operators, local authorities and National Tourist Boards, is promoted through most of BTA's overseas offices. BTA's brochure 'Waterways Britain and Ireland' presents waterway travel as an alternative, sustainable way of touring the British Isles.

The day-to-day management and operation of the inland waterway network rests with British Waterways, the Environment Agency, the Broads Authority and a range of other public and private bodies. The three main navigation authorities work closely with BTA, regional and national tourist boards and with the private sector to promote leisure and tourism opportunities on their respective waterways.

The Association of Inland Navigation Authorities, which represents around 30 authorities, is finalising a strategy for the inland navigations of the United Kingdom. This will include objectives for the navigation authorities to meet in relation to developing leisure, tourism and commercial opportunities on the waterways network.

The Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council is undertaking a report to demonstrate ways in which the waterways in West Yorkshire can be developed for leisure, tourism and community use.

The Government are keen to encourage the greater use of inland waterways for carrying freight where this is a practical and economic option. We currently give Freight Facilities Grant for inland waterways schemes where freight would otherwise have gone by road. The Department will be re-examining the rules of the scheme to try to encourage more applications for inland waterways.

In addition, the Department is working to update planning guidance on transport which will encourage more freight to be carried by water. Local authorities in their development plans will be expected to consider opportunities for new developments which are served by waterways; and to give better protection to sites and routes, both existing and potential, which could be critical in developing infrastructure to widen transport choices, including water transport.

We intend to publish in the next few months the Transport White Paper daughter document on inland waterways policy, the aim of which will be to raise the profile of the waterways and increase their potential.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's policy with regard to the banning of the use of asbestos in the United Kingdom. [67986]

Mr. Meale: The Government are firmly committed to finding both a national and a Europe-wide solution to the problem of asbestos, which must be based on sound science. The European Commission's draft proposals for further restrictions on the marketing and use of white asbestos within the EU are likely to be voted on by Member States in March 1999. I expect to receive the Health and Safety Commission's recommendation on a British ban at around the same time, following its recent consultation exercise.

Railtrack (Signal Wiring Safety)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the level of checks carried out by Railtrack on signal wiring. [68057]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Health and Safety Executive have advised me that they are satisfied with Railtrack's strategies for achieving the safety of their signalling systems, including the management of any problems.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the allocation of investment by Railtrack in signal wiring for the next three years; what action the Railway Inspectorate is taking to ascertain the safety of the existing system; and what actions have been undertaken to replace faulty signal wiring this year. [68054]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It is Railtrack's responsibility to ensure the safety of its railway infrastructure and to allocate the resources needed to achieve this. Railtrack's investment plans, including forecast expenditure on signalling, are set out in its Network Management Statement (NMS) which was published last Spring. The new NMS is to be published in March.

The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) have advised me that they are satisfied with Railtrack's strategies for achieving the safety of their signalling systems, including the management of any problems.

In the light of recent allegations, the Railway Inspectorate has asked Railtrack for an update of its programme for dealing with a specific wiring degradation problem. Railtrack has already assured HSE that the special arrangements in force at relevant locations are adequate to ensure safety and will not prevent the completion of other work necessary for safe operation. HSE intends to inspect sample locations of its choosing to provide independent, external verification that appropriate systems and working methods remain in place to control risks.

The replacement of signal wiring is an operational matter for Railtrack.

Railway Incident, Bow Junction

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will call for a report from the Railway Inspectorate on the recent incident at Bow Junction. [68056]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A serious incident occurred at Bow Junction in East London on 8 October 1994 and was mentioned in paragraph 233 of the Chief Inspecting Officer of Railways' Annual Report on Railway Safety for 1994–96. The cause of a failure of the signalling system was a series of failures in the design, commissioning and testing of intermediate stages of signalling works because of poor communications and lack of project management staff. The project was restarted only after all management and safety procedures had been examined, critically reviewed and rewritten or strengthened as necessary. In February/March 1995, HSE's Railway Inspectorate carried out a thorough audit of these new procedures. The audit team of four, led by a Principal Railway Inspector and including inspectors with railway signalling background, communicated their findings to Railtrack on 1 March 1995. The project has been continually monitored until its substantial completion last year.

Greater London Authority Headquarters

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he received recommending that the final shortlist for consideration as the new headquarters for the Greater London authority should contain three proposals. [67948]

Mr. Raynsford: Of the seven sites considered in detail, two schemes, London Bridge City and Victoria House, stood out. It would not have been right to have put other developers to the trouble and expense of working up their proposals when they had no chance of succeeding.

M6 (Staffordshire)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress made by the Regional Planning Group on alternatives to M6 widening to relieve traffic congestion in Staffordshire. [68322]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My noble Friend the Minister for Roads and Road Safety on 10 December 1998, Official Report, House of Lords, column 110, as well as announcing the Programme of Trunk Road Starts in the West Midlands, took the opportunity to announce the start of the consultation with Regional Planning bodies on the programme of studies to address the most urgent problems on the Trunk Road network not addressed by schemes in the Targeted Programme of Improvements.

The West Midlands to North West Conurbation Study is scheduled to begin in the Summer of 1999. Consultation with the Regional Planning Conference will take place during the preparation of the consultants brief and at regular time throughout the life of the study.

As part of this multi-modal study, the consultants will be asked to indicate a comprehensive range of strategies that could be used to tackle the traffic problems of the area, including the possibility of modal shift especially for freight. All infrastructure improvements that are identified as a preferred option, whether road or other modes, will be assessed against the New Approach to Appraisal.

Packaging Waste Regulations

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce changes to the Packaging Waste Regulations. [68247]

Mr. Meale: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on Thursday 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 335–37.

Social Services (SSAs)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) by social services authority and (b) in total (i) the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1998–99, (ii) the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1999–2000, (iii) the difference between (i) and (ii), (iv) the difference expressed as a percentage, (v) the special transitional grant for 1998–99, (vi) the difference between standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1999–2000 and the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1998–99 combined totalled with special transitional grant for 1998–99 and (vii) the difference in (vi) expressed as a percentage. [68367]

Ms Armstrong: The figures requested have been placed, in the form requested, in the Library of the House. The comparison which they provide is, however, misleading. This is because they do not reflect the Comprehensive Spending Review's full provision for personal social services, which started from a zero base, looking at expenditure needs afresh. The only fair comparison is to look at total resources provided for social services which, in aggregate, show a 6.1 per cent. cash increase or a 3.5 per cent. real terms increase between 1998–99 and 1999–2000. The increased resources we are making available will meet the costs of looking after existing and new community care clients, and enable local authorities to deliver real improvements in services.

Employees at Risk

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the opportunities available under current legislation to take steps to reduce the risk of violence to employees whose job brings them into face to face contact with the public. [68372]

Mr. Meale: I have looked carefully at this issue. There has been a lot of good work done by the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. However, I want to examine what other measures are available. I have therefore written to the Health and Safety Commission to ask for advice on options for further action that will have a positive impact on preventing work-related violence.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to require the Health and Safety Executive to advise employers about measures that can be taken to reduce the risk to employees of violence at work. [68373]

Mr. Meale: None at present. The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has already issued general guidance and sector specific guidance for the retail and finance sectors. The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) has also issued sector specific guidance for the health care and education sectors. Health and Safety Inspectors also offer advice in the course of their normal contact with employers and employees.

Once I have received advice from the HSC, I will be able to consider what further action is necessary.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with (a) trade unions and (b) employers about violence at work; and if he will make a statement. [68374]

Mr. Meale: When I replied to a Private Member's Debate on health and safety proposed by my hon. Friend on 4 November 1998, Official Report, columns 804–06, I stressed that this Government would not tolerate violence and aggression towards working people. I have continued to promote that message whenever I can, especially during the meetings I have with trade unions and employers. I also continue to draw attention to the issue in the many speeches I make about health and safety. Recent occasions when I have done so were speeches I made at the National Health and Safety Groups Council on 28 January and the AEEU National Academy of Safety and Health on 14 September 1998.

In addition, both trade unions and employers participate in the Interdepartmental Committee on Violence to Staff (ICVS) which is chaired by the Health and Safety Executive.

Road Closures

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available were the (a) A62, (b) M62, (c) A66 and (d) A69 closed due to inclement weather. [68168]

Ms Glenda Jackson: From the records that are available, the numbers of closures are as follows:

A62

The A62 is a local road except for a short length linking with junction 27 of the M62. The highway authorities for the high level sections of the road are Kirklees Metropolitan District Council and Oldham Metropolitan Borough Council.

The reports that we have obtained are from Oldham Metropolitan Borough Council and cover the last three years only. During that time in the year April to April 1996–97, the road was closed for a total of four days and in 1997–98 for a total of half a day.

M62

The motorway was closed overnight between junctions 21 and 22 on 25 January 1995. This was necessary when a lorry jack-knifed in heavy early evening snow, blocking the carriageway and preventing further gritting.

The motorway was also closed between junctions 20 and 22 on 12 and 13 January 1993 when lighting columns become unstable in high winds.

A66

Records are available for the last 6 years only:

	Full closure		Partial closure (HGVs and caravans)
Year	Number of times	Reason	Number of times	Reason
1999 (to date)	—	—	3	High wind
1998	3	Snow/ice	19	High wind
1997	1	Snow/ice	16	High wind
1996	13	Snow/ice	26	High wind
1995	6	Snow/ice	18	High wind
1994	4	Snow/ice	No records available
1993	4	Snow/ice	No records available

A69

Records are available for the last six years only:

The road has not been closed due to inclement weather.

N-Viro

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that the N-Viro product from Great Stambridge is subject to the Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989 and the 1996 Code of Practice for agricultural use of sewage sludge. [68370]

Mr. Meale: All sewage sludge used on agricultural land, including that treated by the N-Viro process is subject to the Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989 and the associated Code of Practice. The regulations are enforced in England and Wales by the Environment Agency.

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the appraisal by the Environment Agency into the Waste Management Licence application by Anglian Water for the N-Viro process at Great Stambridge will be completed and issued. [68371]

Mr. Meale: The Environment Agency expects to complete the appraisal of the application by Anglian Water for a Waste Management Licence for the N-Viro process at Great Stambridge by early summer. An interim report will be produced by the Environment Agency in February and processing of sludge from Southend will not begin until the Waste Management Licence has been granted.

Barking to Gospel Oak Railway

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps are being taken by his Department to promote improved services on the Barking to Gospel Oak railway line. [68342]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Silverlink operate this line under a franchise agreement with the Franchising Director. This includes a contractual obligation to replace the existing slam door rolling stock with sliding door rolling stock by May 1999. It also includes contractual commitments to upgrade the passenger information systems at stations along the route. Railtrack have reinstated a signal between two of the stations on the line: this has increased the capacity of the track and should reduce delays caused by conflicts with other operators using the line.

Leisure Complex (Crosby)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of the PFI bid submitted by Sefton Metropolitan Authority to build a new swimming and leisure complex in Crosby. [66765]

Mr. Raynsford: The Metropolitan Borough of Sefton was told on 27 August 1998 of the inter-departmental Project Review Group's decision to agree to my Department's recommendation that their project be included in the updated list of local authority PFI projects the Government intend to support. That list was the subject of a press release the same day. It is now for the local authority to bring the project to contract signature.

Taxi Accessibility

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to produce further proposals for taxi accessibility; what discussions he has held with (a) vehicle manufacturers and (b) suppliers to ensure the availability of vehicles which conform with taxi accessibility regulations; and if he will make a statement. [68641]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have held extensive consultation on our proposals for taxi accessibility under the provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 with manufacturers, operators, local authorities and with organisations representing disabled people.

We are reviewing our proposals in the light of this consultation and we will be publishing a further round of consultation, including draft regulations and a regulatory impact assessment, later this year.

My Department is also in close and regular touch with vehicle manufacturers and converters and we believe that a range of vehicles which meet the regulations will become available to address the new market which will be created.

Signal Equipment Safety

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the safety of signal equipment owned by Railtrack. [68466]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The proper design, installation and maintenance of the signalling system is paramount to railway safety. The responsibility for the railway infrastructure lies with Railtrack. The Health and Safety Executive have advised me that they are satisfied with Railtrack's strategies for achieving the safety of their signalling systems including the management of any problems.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what safety guidelines his Department issues in relation to the maintenance and renewal of signal equipment on railway lines. [68467]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The responsibility for the safe maintenance and renewal of signalling equipment lies with Railtrack, who issue safety guidelines in these matters. The Health and Safety Executive's Railway Inspectorate undertakes routine monitoring of the way Railtrack discharges its responsibilities for the safe operation of the railway network and would take appropriate enforcement action if necessary.

West Coast Line

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the Rail Regulator concerning the cleanliness of trains on the West Coast Line; and if he will make a statement. [68001]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The cleanliness of trains if a matter for the Franchising Director rather than the Rail Regulator. Virgin is required under its franchise agreement to carry out regular customer satisfaction surveys. These measure satisfaction with, among other things, cleanliness of the trains. The latest available published figures (for the period to July 1998) show that the cleanliness level on Virgin Trains was at or above the agreed benchmarks.

Virgin Trains

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Virgin Trains on the discounting of void days from punctuality and reliability tables; and if he will make a statement. [68000]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Train operators are entitled to declare days void where they have been unable to run an effective service for the day. For every void day, the operator has to offer one day extension or refund on season tickets. The number of days voided by each train operator will be included in the Franchising Director's next and future quarterly Performance Bulletins. OPRAF are considering how the statistics in the Bulletin can be made to reflect more accurately the experience of passengers.

Concessionary Bus Fare Schemes

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the local authority areas in which no concessionary bus fare scheme for pensioners is in operation. [68590]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My information is that there are 10 local authorities that have no concessionary fare scheme for their resident pensioners. These are the District Councils for Caradon, Eden, Hambleton, Kennet, Kerrier, Malvern Hills, North Cornwall, Penwith, Scarborough and South Holland.

Waste Incinerators

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many incinerators used for disposing of public waste materials in the UK (a) are currently operational and (b) were operational five years ago. [68133]

Mr. Meale: In England and Wales, ten municipal waste incinerators are currently operational. Twenty three such incinerators were operational in 1994.

Gas Vehicle Manufacturers (Tax Incentives)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what tax incentives are available to manufacturers of motor vehicles powered by road fuel gases. [68163]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no specific tax incentives available for manufacturers of motor vehicles powered by road fuel gases. Government action to support the wider uptake of these fuels focuses principally on assisting with the purchase and operation of gas powered vehicles. Duty on road fuel gases has been frozen for the last two Budgets, and the Government are committed to at least maintaining the 1997 duty differential between road fuel gases and ordinary diesel. My Department is also funding the Powershift programme which provides grants to help cover the additional cost of purchasing gas powered vehicles. These measures should provide some certainty to the road fuel gas market, and help to encourage manufacturers to invest in the production in gas powered vehicles.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list (a) the recycling targets and (b) the level of achievement of these targets currently being achieved by the Brighton and Hove Unitary Authority, for (i) glass (clear and green), (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans, (iv) steel cans and (v) paper and cardboard; [68138]

(2) if he will list (a) the recycling targets for domestic and commercial waste and (b) the level of achievement of these targets by each of the unitary authorities in England (i) currently and (ii) five years ago; [68137]

(3) if he will list the recycling targets for (i) domestic and (ii) commercial waste achieved by (a) each of the district and borough council authorities in East and West Sussex and (b) the Brighton and Hove Unitary Authority; and if he will list the comparable figures for 1994. [68165]

Mr. Meale: When the previous Government published their White Paper "Making Waste Work" in 1995, they set a number of indicative targets for waste. One of the primary targets was to increase recycling and recovery so that they dealt with 40 per cent. of municipal waste by 2005. There was also a subsidiary target to recycle or compost 25 per cent. of household waste by 2000. These indicative targets were set for the whole of England and Wales and it is up to each individual local authority to determine their own priorities in the light of these targets.

The latest figures for municipal waste relate to 1996–97—the first year after publication of "Making Waste Work". Recycling and energy recovery of municipal waste stood at around 13 per cent., with recycling running at around 7 per cent. of household waste. No comparable figures are available for five years ago.

The Department is not able to release details of the recycling rate of an individual authority, or for individual materials within this rate, because the figures that are supplied to it for the Department's Municipal Waste Survey are done so on a confidential basis.

The Government are currently preparing a new waste strategy. The consultation paper "Less Waste: More Value" confirmed their support for the targets in "Making Waste Work", but considers that there is a need for a substantial increase in recycling and recovery, going beyond the targets set by the previous Government.

We believe that, for targets to be effective in changing behaviour towards a desired end, they have to be challenging but achievable, underpinned by a clear course of action, and capable of proper measurement and public explanation. Targets also need to be justified against the principles of good regulation: accountability, transparency, targeting, consistency, and proportionality.

Public Waste Incinerators

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the current official guidelines on the building of public waste incinerators near densely populated areas. [68136]

Mr. Raynsford: The building of public waste incinerators will normally require the grant of planning permission under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 (as amended) and an authorisation under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Government guidance on the location of incinerators is included in Planning Policy Guidance note 23 "Planning and Pollution Control". This will be updated soon when Planning Policy Guidance note 10 "Planning and Waste Management" is published. The Department also issued a guidance note to local authorities in August 1997, on the provision of incinerators in connection with the slaughter of cattle under the "Over Thirty Months Scheme".

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many public waste incinerators have been constructed in the UK in each of the last five years. [68134]

Mr. Meale: Within England and Wales, one municipal waste incinerator was constructed in 1997. All other plants currently operating in England and Wales were significantly upgraded during the period in question, but no other plants were newly constructed during this period.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of public waste is currently processed through (a) recycling, (b) landfill and (c) incineration. [68135]

Mr. Meale: The table gives the percentage of municipal waste, collected by local authorities in England and Wales in 1996–97, which was treated or disposed of by different methods.

Treatment and disposal of municipal waste, England and Wales, 1996–97

	Percentage

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many HGVs have converted to road fuel gases since May 1997. [68164]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The number of HGVs able to run on road fuel gases increased from 41 vehicles in the first quarter of 1997 to 96 vehicles in the third quarter of 1998, according to the latest statistics from the DVLA vehicle register. While this increase is small, the Government expect that there will be strong growth in the number of HGVs converting to road fuel gases, particularly for those vehicles predominantly operating in urban areas.

Buses (Road Fuel Gases)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many public transport buses have converted to road fuel gases since May 1997. [68162]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The number of public service buses able to run on road fuel gases increased from 20 vehicles in the first quarter of 1997 to 53 vehicles in the third quarter of 1998, according to the latest statistics from the DVLA vehicle register. While this increase is small, the Government expect that there will be strong growth in the number of buses converting to road fuel gases, particularly for those vehicles predominantly operating in urban areas.

Local Authorities (Status Criteria)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the criteria which apply to (a) districts seeking to attain borough status and (b) boroughs seeking to attain city status; and if he will make a statement. [66804]

Mr. Raynsford: A district council may petition Her Majesty The Queen for the grant of a charter conferring upon the district the status of borough. The resolution authorising the petition requires a two-thirds majority of the members at a meeting specially convened for that purpose. The title of city is an honour conferred by Her Majesty The Queen, by Letters Patent; it is not a right which can be claimed by the fulfilment of specific conditions.

Merchant Vessels

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many merchant vessels are registered under a British flag; and how many were so registered in May 1997. [68613]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The numbers of trading vessels registered at the end of the quarters nearest to May 1997 and at 30 September 1998, the latest available, are:

Register	31 March 1997	30 June 1997	30 September 1998
United Kingdom	377	380	375
Isle of Man	130	139	158
Channel Islands	3	3	3

Jubilee Line

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the contingency plans in the event of the Jubilee Line extension not being completed in time for the Millennium Exhibition. [66796]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have welcomed London Transport's phased opening strategy of the Jubilee Line Extension project and their confirmation that it will open in good time for the Millennium Experience. It would, however, be irresponsible not to have in place contingency arrangements to manage problems on any of the main transport links to the Millennium site over the Millennium Year, including any failure of the Jubilee Line. I therefore asked London Underground Ltd., through my Millennium Access Co-ordination Group, to lead the production of contingency plans for this and other eventualities.

London Underground have, in association with London's other transport operators, developed plans to cover a wide-range of possible scenarios and identified an underlying command and control strategy to direct the plans should they need to be invoked. An overview of the plans has recently been presented to my group, and we will be examining the detailed proposals shortly.

The next phase will be to test and validate the plans, and to implement the control measures so that they are in a 'state of readiness for implementation'

by the Autumn.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the outcome of consultation on the local government finance settlement for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [68858]

Mr. Prescott: I have today laid before the House the Local Government Finance Report (England) 1999–2000 and the Special Grant Report (No. 37). These reports establish the amounts of revenue support grant (RSG) and non-domestic rates (NDR) to be paid to local authorities in 1999–2000, and the basis of their distribution; and provide for Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) Reduction Grant and Central Support Protection Grant to be paid to certain authorities for 1999–2000. Drafts of these reports were issued for consultation on 2 December 1998. The Department received written representations from the Local Government Association and the Association of London Government, as well as from 215 individual local authorities and six local authority groups. My Ministerial colleagues at DETR also met the Associations, 72 delegations from local councils and four from local authority groups.

My proposals included changes to grant distribution to give a fairer system. Having considered the views of the local authority associations and others who have commented on my initial proposals, I have decided to make only the changes in the SSA methodology which formed the basis of consultation, and no others. The SSAs for individual authorities may be slightly different from those at consultation, generally reflecting more accurate data that have become available since then.

However, changes in the method of distribution mean that some authorities do much less well than others. The change to the formula for children's social services, in particular, has had a serious impact on some authorities. Following representations, I have concluded that I should make some changes to my proposals for a Central Support Protection Grant. This will ensure that authorities with education responsibilities can continue to provide services while they adjust their spending plans. I shall therefore provide an extra £30 million in Central Support Protection Grant to ensure that all authorities with education and social services responsibilities receive at least 1.5 per cent. more grant in 1999–2000 than they did in 1998–99. I can also confirm that no local authority will receive less grant in 1999–2000 than they did in 1998–99.

I also received representations from local government on council tax benefit subsidy limitation. I have considered these carefully but decided to make no change to the scheme I proposed on 2 December.

This year's local government finance settlement is the most generous since the introduction of the council tax. We have made grant distribution fairer. No authority will lose grant next year. Many will benefit from substantially increased resources, reflecting a 5.5 per cent. overall increase in funding.

For the longer term, we have published SSA totals for the next three years, and do not expect to make further changes in the method of distribution. Authorities therefore have a firm basis for planning long term, sustained service improvements.

There is no excuse on the basis of this settlement for councils to inflict steep council tax rises on their local communities. Our increased funding for local government is generous, but affordable. We look to councils to strike the same balance.

Last year we produced, for the first time, a Plain English guide to local government finance. This was widely welcomed, and I have arranged for an updated edition to be produced.

I shall be sending copies of these reports and the Plain English guide to all authorities, together with tables showing each authority's Standard Spending Assessment and its entitlement to RSG, NDR and special grant. Copies of the reports, tables, and the guide are available in the Vote Office and the Library.

Aer Lingus Crash

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) summaries and (b) microfiche records of the report of the Air Accidents Investigation Branch into the Aer Lingus Viscount crash of 24 March 1968 have been retained. [68834]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The investigation into the accident that occurred to the Aer Lingus Viscount aircraft on 24 March 1968 was conducted by Air Accident Investigation officials of the Irish Department of Transport and Power. The AAIB participated in the investigation. The Irish report was published in September 1970.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Calendar

45. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she has to introduce reform to the parliamentary year. [66807]

Mr. Tipping: I would like to see how the experiment on Thursday sittings agreed by the House on 16 December works before making further proposals.

Standing Committee on Regional Affairs

46. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on her proposals for the reactivation of the Standing Committee on Regional Affairs. [66808]

Mrs. Beckett: I announced on 14 January 1999, Official Report, columns 446–47, that a proposal would be put to the Modernisation Committee to revive and adapt the standing committee on regional affairs. A memorandum setting out the proposal will shortly be sent to the Committee and I hope they will report on it in the near future.

European Political Institutions (Travel and Communications)

47. Mr. Jack: To ask the President of the Council when she plans to announce amended arrangements for travel to, and communications with, European political institutions. [66809]

Mr. Tipping: My right hon. Friend the President of the Council has said before that the scheme to allow Members to visit EU institutions would be extended. I can announce today that, from the next financial year, Members will be able to claim re-imbursement of travel and subsistence expenses for one visit either to the main EU institutions or to the national Parliament of any EU Member state. The Scheme will be reviewed after a year to see if it is possible to allow two visits in the second year.

Parliamentary Questions

49. Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to introduce a question period for questions without notice. [66811]

Mrs. Beckett: I take questions without notice every Thursday after announcing the business. The Prime Minister also takes questions without notice every Wednesday. I have no plans to extend this procedure.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Council if she will establish an ad hoc Select Committee on military action against Iraq. [66810]

Mrs. Beckett: I have no plans to do so.

Parliamentary Procedures Reform

Mr. Dismore: To ask the President of the Council what representations she has received concerning the procedure for putting non-contentious, technical law reform Bills recommended by the Law Commission before Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [67302]

Mrs. Beckett: I have recently met the Chairman of the Law Commission to discuss this matter. There already exists an expedited procedure for Law Commission bills. This issue may also be considered by the Modernisation Committee in the course of its current inquiry into a second forum or main committee.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to propose reforms of parliamentary procedure in respect of uncontroversial Bills implementing Law Commission recommendations. [67301]

Mrs. Beckett: Standing Order No. 59 already provides for the second reading of Law Commission bills to be taken in second reading committee rather than on the floor of the House. I have no immediate plans to propose other reforms of this procedure, but it may be relevant to the Modernisation Committee's current inquiry into the possibility of establishing a second forum or main committee.

Law Commission Recommendations (Bills)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the President of the Council how many Bills based on Law Commission recommendations have been enacted in each of the last five years. [67304]

Mrs. Beckett: The figures are set out in the table. The total of 20 includes two Statute Law Revision Acts and two Consolidation Acts with amendments giving effect to Law Commission recommendations.

Year	Number
1994	3
1995	7
1996	8
1997	1
1998	2

Mr. Dismore: To ask the President of the Council what was the length of time of the debates which took place at each parliamentary stage of each of the Bills introduced to implement Law Commission recommendations in each of the last five years. [67303]

Mrs. Beckett: The figures in the table relate to the total amount of debating time on the floor of the House of Commons and do not include any committee proceedings. Law Commission proposals formed only part of some of the bills. Bills taken through all their stages without debate are recorded as having taken less than one minute.

	Debating time
Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994	54 hours 54 minutes
Sale and Supply of Goods Act 1994	1 hour 44 minutes
Law of Property (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1994	2 minutes
Finance Act 1995	36 hours 46 minutes
Sale of Goods (Amendment) Act 1995	Less than 1 minute
Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995	33 minutes
Civil Evidence Act 1995	3 minutes
Law Reform (Succession) Act 1995	1 minute
Private International Law (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1995	1 minute
Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1995	1 hour 12 minutes
Law Reform (Year and a Day Rule) Act 1996	Less than 1 minute
Family Law Act 1996	19 hours 8 minutes
Trusts of Land and Appointment of Trustees Act 1996	Less than 1 minute
Damages Act 1996	3 minutes
Housing Act 1996	25 hours 24 minutes
Education Act 1996 (consolidation Act)	Less than 1 minute
Schools Inspection Act 1996 (consolidation Act)	Less than 1 minute
Theft (Amendment) Act 1996	Less than 1 minute
land Registration Act 1997	Less than 1 minute
Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act 1998	4 hours 8 minutes
Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1998	Less than 1 minute

Salary Payments (Euros)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to meet requests from right hon. and hon. Members for the payment of their salaries in euros. [67273]

Mr. Pearson: To ask the President of the Council if she will make arrangements for right hon. and hon. Members to have the option of receiving their salaries in euros. [66509]

Mrs. Beckett: There are no plans to offer right hon. and hon. Members the option of receiving their salaries in euros while the United Kingdom is outside the single currency zone.

Lords Amendments

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the President of the Council how many amendments to legislation made in the House of Lords were (a) approved and (b) rejected by this House in the 1997–98 session; and how many of each were Government amendments. [67607]

Mrs. Beckett: In the 1997–98 session, the House of Commons considered 1,685 amendments made by the House of Lords to bills originating in this House. This House agreed to 1,615 of these amendments (four with amendments of its own) and disagreed to 70. To give precise statistics as to how many of each were Government amendments would incur a disproportionate cost. However, the House of Lords Public Bill Sessional Statistics for Session 1997–98 is a document which is in the public domain. This contains information concerning Government defeats in the House of Lords, stating in each case whether these were subsequently reversed by the House of Commons.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many persons appointed to chair immigration appeal tribunals have left office before the end of their respective terms during the period of office of the present president of the immigration appeal tribunal; and how many of them are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities. [68482]

Mr. Hoon: No person appointed to chair Immigration Appeal Tribunals has left office before the end of their appointment during the period of the present President of the Immigration Appeal Tribunal, His Honour Judge David Pearl.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the duties of the Vice-President of Administration of the Immigration Appeals Authority; when the present appointment was made and at what salary; how many (a) informal and (b) formal complaints about the vice-president have been made since his appointment; and what was the outcome of the complaints. [68487]

Mr. Hoon: The post of Vice President of Administration of the Immigration Appellate Authority does not exist. The Immigration Appellate Authority consists of Immigration Adjudicators and the Immigration Appeal Tribunal. The Compliment of the Adjudicators consists of; one Chief Adjudicator; one Deputy Chief Adjudicator; 4 Regional Adjudicators; 29 full-time Adjudicators; and 213 part-time Adjudicators. The compliment of the Immigration Appeal Tribunal consists of one President; 4 Vice Presidents; 25 part-time legal members; and 26 part-time lay members. On the matter of complaints I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 1 February 1999.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) informal and (b) formal complaints have been made to his Department about the activities and attitudes of immigration appeal adjudicators by other adjudicators in each of the last five years; how many were from (a) women and (b) people from ethnic minorities; and what was the outcome of each complaint. [68486]

Mr. Hoon: No such complaints are recorded as having been made to the Lord Chancellor's Department between 1994 and 1996.

In 1997 there were three informal complaints. Two of them were from a female member of a minority ethnic community. One of these complaints was resolved by agreement between the parties and the other was superseded by further discussions and correspondence. The third complaint was discussed with the individual concerned and no further action taken.

In 1998 there were four informal and two formal complaints, all from a female member of a minority ethnic community. The complainant requested that the matters of substance raised in the informal and one of the formal complaints should be recorded but did not seek further action. The Lord Chancellor determined in relation to the other formal complaint that the adjudicator concerned should have made more careful enquiries in handling of complaint from solicitors and not have referred to the "promulgation" of a determination.

The Lord Chancellor is considering one informal complaint made this year by a female member of a minority ethnic community.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date the post of research and policy adjudicator at the Immigration Appeals Authority was created; how the person chosen was selected and by whom; and what steps were taken to ensure that the method of appointment was free from race and gender prejudice. [68485]

Mr. Hoon: Following an announcement in Parliament on 18 December 1996, Official Report, column 752, that the then Government intended to review Asylum and Immigration Appeals, the Regional Immigration Adjudicators asked one of their number, Dr. H. H. Storey, to prepare a paper which could be submitted to the Lord Chancellor's Department, setting out the Authority's response to that Review. Dr. Storey prepared the paper and it was submitted to the Lord Chancellor's Department in May 1997. From that date Dr. Storey has, with the endorsement of the present and previous Chief Adjudicator, continued to work on research projects for the Authority, in addition to his normal duties. Dr. Storey was originally chosen because the Regional Adjudicators considered him to be the person best qualified for the position. He is a former University Lecturer and an expert on European and Human Rights law.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department when the European panel of the Immigration Appeals Authority was established; for what purpose and by whom; how and by whom its membership was recommended and appointed; and what steps were taken to ensure that the method of appointment was free of race and gender prejudice. [68484]

Mr. Hoon: A European Panel was established in 1997 by the Chief Immigration Adjudicator as a result of specific concerns expressed by practitioners that it occasionally happened that cases with complex European issues were listed before relatively inexperienced Adjudicators. The intention was to create a core of Adjudicators who could be trained in European law, and that this core be widened as quickly as possible. The first group of Adjudicators were nominated by Regional Adjudicators. All full-time Adjudicators in post as at November 1998 have now been trained and are on the Panel.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if it is mandatory for the Chief Adjudicator of the Immigration Appeal Authority to report the nature and number of complaints of race or gender prejudice or discrimination by members of the authority about other members to his Department. [68483]

Mr. Hoon: The Chief Immigration Adjudicator is responsible, in liaison with the Lord Chancellor, his officials and the Court Service, for the efficient operation of the Adjudicators' system. The Lord Chancellor would expect the Chief Immigration Adjudicator, and all other Tribunal Presidents or Tribunal Heads, to inform him of any complaint against a member of the judiciary, whether it is from a member of the public or a fellow member of the judiciary.

Judiciary (Race and Gender Discrimination)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the standard of proof used to determine complaints of race or gender discrimination or prejudice against members of the judiciary by other members of the judiciary who are women or from a minority ethnic background. [68488]

Mr. Hoon: Having regard to the gravity of the allegation the Lord Chancellor requires clear and convincing proof before he would be satisfied that the complaint was made out.

Barristers' Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the sets of barristers' chambers in London who have rendered services for his Department since 1 May 1997 and the remuneration made in respect of such services in each case. [68623]

Mr. Hoon: The remuneration received by sets of barristers' chambers in London which have rendered services to the Lord Chancellor's Department over this period is set out in the table. This includes work done for the Court Service Agency and work by the Treasury Junior.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Carers (Further and Higher Education)

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what policies the Government are implementing to encourage carers to enter further and higher education. [67971]

Mr. Mudie: We are committed to widening participation in both further and higher education and our plans will enable many people, including carers, to pursue their studies. We are promoting flexible learning opportunities through our new initiatives such as the University for Industry and other possibilities for distance learning. Our enhanced student support arrangements for FE and HE will also promote access to learning; and the introduction of Individual Learning Accounts will give people the flexibility to decide what, how and when to learn, and empower them to take greater control of their own career and personal development needs.

Education (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the increase in standard spending assessment for education for Portsmouth Education Authority for 1999–2000. [67241]

Ms Estelle Morris: The provisional education SSA for Portsmouth in 1999–2000 represents an underlying increase of £4.1 million or 6 per cent. These figures illustrate the effect of allowing for local authority changes of function and taking account of new arrangements for funding music and student support.

Teachers (PE)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students enrolled for PE teacher training (secondary) in each year since 1980. [67740]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the number of new entrants to physical education (PE) initial teacher training for the years 1982–83 to 1998–99. Information for 1980–81 and 1981–82 is not available.

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding there is for in-service education for physical education. [67739]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This information is not collected or held centrally.

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 15 December 1998, Official Report, column 482, how many hours of training are given to primary teachers to deliver the whole physical education curriculum. [67858]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We do not specify the amount of training to be given for any subject. It is for individual providers of primary initial teacher training to ensure that their courses enable trainees to meet the standards for the award of Qualified Teacher Status.

Early Education (3-year-olds)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) of 14 January 1999, Official Report, column 261, what is the participation rate of 3-year-olds in early education in England. [67853]

Ms Hodge: The information is not available in the form requested. There were 222,000 or 35 per cent. of three-year-olds maintained nursery and primary schools in England in January 1998; this figure rises to 251,000 or 40 per cent. of three-year-olds if special and independent schools are included. In addition, the Government have set a target to double the national participation rate of three-year-olds in free early education places to 66 per cent. by 2002, using the maintained, voluntary and private sectors.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) of 14 January 1999, Official Report, column 261, what is the participation rate of 3-year-olds in early education in Southampton. [67857]

Ms Hodge: The information is not available in the form requested. There were 406 3-year-olds in maintained nursery and primary schools in the Southampton Local Education Authority in January 1998. In addition, the Government have set a target to double the national participation rate of 3-year-olds in free early education places to 66 per cent. by 2002, using the maintained, voluntary and private sectors.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the additional factors relating to young children used by his Department in determining the 50 local education authority areas which have been given preference in distributing funding for early education places for 3-year-olds. [68524]

Ms Hodge: The 50 Local Education Authorities which will receive Funding in 1999–2000 for early education places for 3-year-olds are those with the highest levels of social need measured by the Government's Index of Local Deprivation (ILD) augmented by two factors: low birth weight and the proportion of births to teenage mothers.

The indicators that were used to draw up the ILD are:

housing lacking amenities;
over-crowded housing;
17-year-olds no longer in full-time education;
derelict land;
income support;
dependent children of income support recipients;
low educational attainment (percentage of children gaining GCSE passes at grades D-G only plus those not gaining any GCSE passes);
long term unemployment;
unemployment;
insurance premiums;
non income support recipients in receipt of council tax benefit;
standard mortality ratios.

Education Standard Spending Assessment

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much weighting is given to pupil numbers in calculating the education SSA. [67653]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 26 January 1999]: Some 81 per cent. of the education SSA related to schools is allocated on the basis of pupil numbers.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the possibility of the local authority funding regulations enabling a local education authority to receive funding based on the SSA for education where there are no maintained schools. [67655]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 21 January 1999]: The Government have no plans to change the current education SSA system under which most of the national total is allocated on the basis of the number of registered pupils educated at maintained schools.

Autism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that current school-aged children with autism have suitable provision made for them; and if he will make a statement; [68201]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that every local education authority will make available for each registered pupil with special educational needs, with particular reference to autistic spectrum disorder, the special educational provision which that learning difficulty calls for; and if he will make a statement; [68202]

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that every local education authority places the most important component of an autistic child's education on the statement of special educational needs of each child it has identified as having autism; and if he will make a statement; [68203]

(4) what steps he is taking to ensure that every local education authority has a range of provision for children with autism that includes specialist provision; and if he will make a statement; [68204]

(5) what steps he is taking to ensure that every local education authority ensures that sufficient schemes are available to provide the opportunity of appropriate education for all pupils with autistic spectrum disorder in their area; and if he will make a statement; [68205]

(6) if he has obtained from each local education authority a copy of the guidance which they make available to the public on the educational services for children with autistic spectrum disorder; and if he will make a statement; [68206]

(7) what steps he is taking to ensure that the guidance on educational services for children with autistic spectrum disorder, available to the public from local education authorities, is fair and consistent throughout England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [68207]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Schools and local education authorities are under a duty to identify children with special educational needs, including those with autistic spectrum disorders, and to arrange provision which meets the needs of individual children. Statements of special educational need set out the range of difficulties and the special provision to be made for the education of children with the most severe and complex needs, including a proportion of the children whose needs arise from autistic spectrum disorders. When arranging provision, after consultation with parents, local education authorities are able to place children with autism in mainstream schools, SEN units in mainstream schools, special schools or specialist autism schools, either in the maintained, voluntary or independent sectors. The Department is funding five regional pilots which will be looking at arrangements for the co-ordination of SEN provision and services. It is expected that some of the projects will focus on provision for pupils with autism. The Department aims to extend regional co-operation arrangements to all areas from April 2000.

Under the Education (School Information) (England) Regulations 1998 local education authorities are required to publish annually information about the arrangements they make for children with special educational needs, including those with autistic spectrum disorders.

Authorities may, if they wish, publish specific guidance on the arrangements they make for children with autistic spectrum disorders. Any such guidance must be consistent with authorities' duties under the law and have regard to the SEN Code of Practice.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what grants have been made by his Department to Shropshire County Council in addition to revenue support grant in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; [68439]

(2) what grants have been made by his Department to Telford and Wrekin Council in 1998–99. [68440]

Ms Estelle Morris: Details of the grants, in addition to revenue support grant, made available by the Department for Education and Employment to Shropshire County Council in 1997–98 and 1998–99, and to Telford and Wrekin Council in 1998–99 are shown in the tables. For the Standards Fund the figures shown include the grant made by the Department and the contribution made by the local education authority.

Public Employment Services

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of increasing the capacity of the Public Employment Services as suggested in the explanatory memorandum on European Community document Com (1998) 641 final. [68350]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The measures referred to in the European Document are consistent with the existing role of the Employment Service in the delivery of the UK Employment Action Plan, which sets out the UK's approach to implementing the Employment Guidelines. No further costs are envisaged.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if his Department will continue to have the main responsibility in Wales for policy questions arising from the Commission communication "Modernising Public Employment Services" to support the European Employment Strategy after the establishment of the Welsh Assembly. [68348]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The proposals for the future role of public Employment Services, outlined in the Commission communication "Modernising Public Employment Services" to support the European Employment Strategy, relates to reserved matters for which the Secretary of State for Education and Employment will retain policy responsibility after the establishment of the Welsh Assembly.

Nursery Places

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the Government funds nursery places on the assumption of 100 per cent. take-up. [68326]

Ms Hodge: Early education places for 4-year-olds in maintained schools are funded through Education Standard Spending according to the number of eligible pupils in the Annual Schools' Census; places in the private and voluntary sectors, together with additional places in the maintained sector, attract a per capita grant calculated from termly headcounts.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provision his Department has made for the funding of early years provision in the private and voluntary sectors for 4-year-olds with special educational needs. [68323]

Ms Hodge: Local Education Authorities have a duty to arrange the provision specified in a child's statement of special educational needs. They also have the power to supply goods and services to providers of early years education in the private and voluntary sectors to help support 4-year-olds who have special educational needs but who do not have statements. The cost of providing additional support is reflected in each Local Education Authority's SSA allocation.

Pay and Performance Management

Mr. Darvill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the technical consultation document on pay and performance management following the Green Paper "Teachers: Meeting the Challenge of Change". [68913]

Mr. Blunkett: I am pleased to announce that, following up the Green Paper "Teachers: Meeting the Challenge of Change", my Department has today published a Technical Consultation Document on Pay and Performance Management. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library.

School Teachers Review Body

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the report of the School Teachers Review Body. [68914]

Mr. Blunkett: The 1999 report of the School Teachers' Review Body has been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library. I am grateful to the Chairman and members of the Review Body for their work.

In the Comprehensive Spending Review, the Government made it clear that public sector pay settlements would need to be fair, affordable, and consistent with the targets for public service improvements we have set. That is why new arrangements were announced in the CSR for the Pay Review Bodies, designed to ensure a closer and more effective link between pay settlements and departmental expenditure limits and service delivery targets. As part of these arrangements, the Prime Minister asked the School Teachers' Review Body to ensure that, in making its recommendations, four key considerations set out in the CSR were taken into account:

- recruitment, retention and motivation of the groups concerned
- the requirements on Departments to meet their output targets for the delivery of services
- requirements on departments to stay within their three year expenditure limits, and
- the Government's inflation target, requiring responsibility in pay settlements across the public and private sectors.

I am satisfied that the recommendations meet these considerations. Accordingly I have decided to accept the Review Body's main recommendations to restructure the pay of headteachers from September, at a cost of 0.1% of the total teacher paybill in 1999–2000 and 0.2% in a full year, and to award a general increase of 3.5% to the pay of all teachers from 1 April. The full cost of the settlement in 1999–2000 will be 3.6%. This will be affordable within my Department's Expenditure Limits announced in the CSR in July (Cm 4011), and is fully consistent with the targets for improved services set out in my Department's Public Service Agreement published in December (Cm 4181). It is in line with the Government's prudent and disciplined approach to public spending and its commitment to deliver high quality public services and low inflation.

The restructuring of headteachers' pay is necessary to enable schools, especially small primary schools, to recruit, retain and motivate headteachers of the quality that we need to improve standards of education. It recognises the role headteachers will play in making the proposals in the Green Paper "Teachers: Meeting the Challenge of Change" work, and it recognises the responsibility headteachers have always had for managing and improving the performance of their teachers and schools. The Review Body makes it clear that headteachers' pay should be linked to their performance against agreed targets, with no automatic increases. It recommends improvements in the performance management and review mechanism for headteachers and I propose those improvements, subject to consultation, with effect from September 1999.

I am grateful to the Review Body for recommending a general increase at a level which is fair and which I can implement without staging. I hope teachers will welcome the fact that they will receive their pay increase in full on 1 April this year.

The Green Paper published in December 1998 set out the Government's wide-ranging proposals for modernising and strengthening the teaching profession. An extensive consultation is now underway. This current pay settlement is an excellent springboard for the further changes from September 2000 which I hope to put in place following the consultation, and the continuing advice of the Review Body. These changes will make the teaching profession better paid and more attractive, and they will also create better links between pay and performance. I welcome the Review Body's constructive approach to the need to reward good performance, and I look forward to next year's exercise extending this approach to the determination of the pay of all teachers.

I will not initiate consultation with the teacher associations, the employers' organisations and other interested parties, as required under section (2)1 of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1991, before I make provision by order for teachers' pay and conditions in 1999–2000.

National Year of Reading

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the cost of the television advertisement and booklet accompanying the National Year of Reading. [68525]

Mr. Mudie: The cost of the television advertisement was £1,400,000.

The cost of producing the accompanying booklet was £177,000 for the English language version with a further £46,000 for ethnic minority language, Braille and audio cassette versions.

We had requests for 822,000 leaflets from parents and schools following the advertising campaign which emphasised the valuable contribution which parents can make to their children's reading.

Teachers (Pay)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the total cost of increasing teachers' salaries by (a) 0.1 per cent., (b) 3.5 per cent., (c) 4.0 per cent. and (d) 4.5 per cent. [68215]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The figures in England and Wales are as follows: (a) £12 million, (b) £423 million, (c) £484 million, and (d) £544 million. Figures for England alone are: (a) £11 million, (b) £398 million, (c) £454 million and (d) £511 million.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much of the extra expenditure on education over the next three years, announced in the Comprehensive Spending Review, has been set aside to fund increases in teachers' pay in each year. [68218]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The cost of teachers' pay awards in 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 will be contained within the Department Expenditure Limits announced in the Comprehensive Spending Review in July (Cm 4011). In respect of 2000–01 and 2001–02, up to £1 billion is available within the Departmental Expenditure Limits to support implementation of proposals in the Green Paper "Teachers: Meeting the Challenge of Change".

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the next teachers' pay award will be funded in full by central Government. [68718]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment today to my hon. Friend the Member for Poplar and Canning Town (Mr. Fitzpatrick), Official Report, columns 487–89.

Failing LEAs (Contractors)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) profit-making organisations and (b) non-profit-making organisations have requested details of his Department's proposals to allow contractors to take over key functions of failing local education authorities, in response to his Department's recent advertisement. [68530]

Ms Estelle Morris: Our recent advertisements asked for expressions of interest from organisations able to perform LEA functions and those able to provide management consultancy services. As of Wednesday, 27 January, my Department had sent out information about both consultancy and the provision of functions to 644 interested parties. The deadline for the receipt of formal expressions of interest is 15 February.

Teachers (Upper Salary Scale)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimates his Department has made of the number of teachers who would qualify to transfer to the upper salary scale proposed in his recent Green Paper, "Teachers: Meeting the Challenge of Change". [68529]

Ms Estelle Morris: In order to pass the new performance threshold proposed in the Green Paper "Teachers: Meeting the Challenge of Change" (Cm 4164), teachers would have to demonstrate that they had consistently achieved national standards centred on strong classroom performance. The number of teachers transferring to the upper salary spine will depend on the outcomes of individual assessments against these national standards. The Government expect that, over time, a majority of teachers will be of a standard to pass the threshold if they wish to do so.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment whether supply teachers will be eligible to apply for the performance assessment for transfer to the upper salary scale proposed in his recent Green Paper; and who would be responsible for carrying out such an assessment. [68526]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Technical Consultation Document on Pay and Performance Management following up the Green Paper "Teachers: Meeting the Challenge of Change" was published today. In it we confirm that unattached teachers and supply teachers employed by the local education authority will be able to apply for threshold assessment provided that they have reached spine point 9 for qualifications and experience and if they can demonstrate that they meet the national threshold standards. Normally, their applications would be assessed by the relevant head, teacher in charge or senior manager with appropriate line management responsibility, and validated by an external assessor. In exceptional circumstances, the teacher may need to apply direct to the external assessor through the local education authority.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate his Department has made of the additional cost to the teachers' salary bill of (a) 25 per cent., (b) 50 per cent. and (c) 75 per cent. of teachers progressing to the upper salary scale proposed in his recent Green Paper. [68528]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Green Paper "Teachers: Meeting the Challenge of Change" proposes that teachers successful at the new performance threshold could receive a salary increase of up to 10 per cent. It would be for governing bodies to decide, on the advice of the head, where on the upper pay spine to place teachers who had passed the threshold assessment, assigned on a combination of excellent performance and extra responsibility. This decision will determine the exact salary level for each teacher.

As estimated 220,000 full-time equivalent teachers in England will have reached spine point nine for qualifications and experience by September 1999 and will therefore be eligible to apply for assessment at the performance threshold to the new upper pay spine.

For every £1,000 of average salary increase, the annual paybill cost of 25 per cent. or 50 per cent. or 75 per cent. pa`sing would be some £65 million or £125 million or £190 million respectively.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what role he proposes for the School Teachers' Review Body in determining salaries for teachers on the upper salary scale proposed in his recent Green Paper. [68527]

Ms Estelle Morris: Following the outcome of the consultation on the Green Paper "Teachers: Meeting the Challenge of Change", the Secretary of State will be asking the School Teachers' Review Body to make recommendations which would also cover the values of pay points on the proposed upper salary spine.

Fair Funding Proposals

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will introduce regulations to prevent local authorities from funding the cost of any redundancies amongst local authority staff, arising from reduced use of local authority services by schools under the Government's Fair Funding proposals, from the Individual Schools Budget; and if he will make a statement. [68219]

Ms Estelle Morris: The statutory guidance on school financing schemes recently issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State does not envisage that redundancy costs should be met from schools' budget shares where the staff in question were not school-based. There would therefore seem to be no reason why local education authorities should wish to include provision for such costs in their Individual Schools Budgets. The Financing of Maintained Schools Regulations 1999 permit the central retention by LEAs of funds to meet redundancy costs which are not properly chargeable to individual schools.

GCSE (Digital Broadcasts)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultation he has undertaken with and what representations he has received from (a) the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority, (b) the teacher trade unions, (c) examination boards, (d) employers' organisations and (e) further and higher education institutions, on the principle of the establishment of digital broadcasting services to support the GCSE curriculum. [68214]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The potential role of digital broadcasting services was raised in consultation on the National Grid for Learning, launched in October 1997. As well as being publicly available, the consultation document ("Connecting the Learning Society") was widely distributed, including to the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA), teacher organisations, further and higher education institutions and examination boards, and employer organisations. DfEE received almost 1,000 responses to the consultation. The outcomes of consultation were published in 'The Grid—Your Views', and are available on the Internet at http://www.vtc.ngfl.gov.uk/vtc/library/pub.html.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment from which budgetary head funds will be made available for the provision of specific digital broadcasting services to support the GCSE curriculum. [68217]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Funds for any educational broadcasting service to support the GCSE curriculum will be paid from programme expenditure within DfEE's expenditure limit.

Schools (Digital Broadcasts)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools currently have facilities to enable the reception of digital broadcasting services; and what is his estimate of how many will have such facilities by the end of (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002. [68216]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Such equipment is only now becoming available and schools may deploy resources within the National Grid for Learning Standards Fund Grant to make appropriate purchases. Take-up will be assessed in the 1999 DfEE survey of information and communications technology (ICT) in schools.

Adjudicators

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 3 December 1998, Official Report, column 244, if he will make a statement on the appointment of adjudicators as provided under the School Standards and Framework Act 1998. [68531]

Ms Estelle Morris: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on Thursday 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 480.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about the role of the Advisory Committee members of the Equal Opportunities Commission; and what remuneration members of the Committee receive. [68521]

Ms Hodge: The Equal Opportunities Commission is an executive non-Departmental public body established under the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 with a statutory remit to work towards the elimination of discrimination, to promote equality of opportunity between men and women, and to keep under review the workings of the Sex Discrimination Act and the Equal Pay Act 1970. It is not an Advisory Committee. The Commission comprises up to 15 Commissioners. The Chair's salary for 1998–99 was set at £48,930. The two Deputy Chairs receive a daily fee of £237. Other Commissioners receive a daily fee of £123.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chevening House

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions he has made use of Chevening House; and how many of these occasions have included (a) official Government business and (b) the reception of official visitors. [66006]

Mr. Robin Cook: The running costs of Chevening House and Estate are borne not by the Government but by the Chevening Trust. I meet the costs of food, drink and laundry for myself, my family and private guests.

I chaired a meeting at Chevening House on 5 January 1999 to discuss medium-term strategy for the FCO.

I hosted a dinner for the US Foreign Minister, Mrs. Madeleine Albright, on 27 December 1997, and had a meeting with the Dutch Foreign Minister, Mr. Jozias van Aartsen, on 17 August 1998.

Government Communications Headquarters

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total cost of the compensation for loss of pension rights which his Department has agreed to pay to the 14 former employees of GCHQ. [66489]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 19 January 1999]: The additional pension benefits will be provided through a special scheme under the Superannuation Act 1972. That scheme will be limited to the fourteen who were dismissed. The level of compensation will reflect two factors; the impact on pensionable pay on retirement of the decisions about pay taken by GCHQ in the light of the refusal of the fourteen to resign from their trade union; and the loss of pensionable service. The cost will be met from within existing resources.

European Commission (Firearms)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the eligibility of European Commission protection officers to carry firearms in the United Kingdom. [67451]

Ms Quin: The eligibility of European Commission protection officers to carry firearms in the United Kingdom is the responsibility of the Home Office, and subject to the issuing of a permit by the Metropolitan Police under the authority of the Home Secretary. To date, no such permit has been issued to a Commission protection officer. One would be issued only in exceptional circumstances, and then only if the protection officer were accompanied by an armed Metropolitan Police Special Branch Officer.

Muslim Council of Britain

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent meeting with the Muslim Council of Britain. [67960]

Mr. Fatchett: I met a range of representatives of the British Muslim Community including the Muslim Council of Britain on 20 January. I briefed them on the situation regarding the British nationals currently being held in Yemen, especially the efforts made so far by Ministers and FCO officials on behalf of the detainees. I reassured them that all British Citizens are given equal consular protection and support, regardless of their creed, race or religion.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with the Special Envoy of the Prime Minister of India. [67958]

Mr. Fatchett: I had wide ranging talks with Mr. Mishra and Indian officials on various issues of mutual interest.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit India. [67959]

Mr. Fatchett: Neither my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary nor I have any plans to visit India at present. I visited India in November 1998, when I was able to hold a range of bilateral talks.

Entry Clearance Interviews

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to announce which post will be used as a pilot for the recording of entry clearance interviews. [67957]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department is consulting candidate Posts and preparing the necessary procedures for the pilot project. I expect this preparatory process to take several weeks. We will announce the name of the Post chosen for the pilot scheme as soon as possible.

Bangladesh

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to announce the name of the new British High Commissioner to Bangladesh. [67961]

Mr. Fatchett: There is no date for this announcement yet. It is normal procedure to announce appointments three to four months in advance of change over.

Electro-shock Batons

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what end use monitoring his Department has undertaken into the use of the electro-shock batons trans-shipped from the United States to Saudi Arabia via the United Kingdom in 1993. [68189]

Mr. Fatchett: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not routinely undertake end-use monitoring once an export licence has been granted; potential end-use considerations are taken into account as part of the licence handling process before export. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 65–66, a ban on the export of electro-shock equipment and other equipment which could be used for torture.

British Council

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the British Council's record of investment in (a) its premises and (b) information technology. [68307]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Council's investment strategy is discussed with the FCO as part of the process of agreeing the Council's Corporate Plan. The Council requires the prior approval of the FCO for investment of over £500,000 for property and £250,000 for other projects, and it is responsible for preparing post-project appraisals.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68401]

Mr. Fatchett: The information is as follows:

(a) None;

(b) None;

(c) None;

(d) In 1998–99, the FCO became the sole sponsor Department for the British Council's work as the UK's principal agency for cultural relations abroad. This will not affect the level of Government funding (previously shared with DFID).

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68417]

Mr. Fatchett: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

Chevening Scholarships

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Chevening scholarships have been awarded, and at what cost, in each of the past five years. [68337]

Mr. Fatchett: The numbers and costs of Chevening Scholarships awarded in the past five years are:

Year	Scholars[1]	£ million
1998–99	3,967	27.2
1997–98	4,053	27
1996–97	3,967	25.8
1995–96	3,967	26.9
1994–95	3,880	24.9

[1] Including both new scholars and continuing awards

These figures include the jointly funded Chevening awards, co-sponsored by the FCO, British universities, and commercial and other partners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the Chevening scholarship programme; how many scholarships, at what cost are planned for the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [68338]

Mr. Fatchett: The Chevening scholarship programme is our main scholarship scheme overseas. It is co-funded by the FCO and DfID. It has a well developed procedure for selection of students, and for maintaining contact when they return home. Chevening Scholars benefit from studying at Higher Education Institutions in the UK, experience the British way of life, make valuable contacts with British counterparts, and return home with a better understanding of the UK and of British values. On return home they make an important contribution to the life of their own countries.

The estimated numbers of Chevening awards and costs for the next three years, assuming the present basis of funding continues, are:

Year	Scholars[1]	£ million
1999–2000	3,985	30
2000–01	4,025	30.2
2001–02	4,065	30.6

[1] Including both new scholars and continuing awards

These figures include the jointly funded Chevening awards, co-sponsored by the FCO, British universities, and commercial and other partners. A cross-Whitehall study is being undertaken of how to attract more foreign students to the UK. An assessment of the Chevening scheme is included in this study.

Arms Exports

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will publish the first annual report on arms exports. [68791]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The report will be published as soon as possible.

Gibraltar

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) of 19 January 1999, Official Report, columns 436–37, for what reasons his Department describes the Bay of Gibraltar as the Bay of Algeciras; and when it first adopted this description. [68523]

Ms Quin: The bay to the west of Gibraltar is known both as the Bay of Gibraltar and the Bay of Algeciras. The extent of British Territorial Waters in the bay is as described in my answer of 19 January 1999, Official Report, columns 436–37, to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek).

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, columns 148–49, concerning Senator Pinochet, what discussions his Department held with the Chilean Embassy on 15–16 October about the possible arrest of Senator Pinochet. [68491]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The discussions with the Chilean Ambassador on 15 and 16 October referred to in my earlier answer took place before the receipt of the request from the Spanish authorities for the provisional arrest of Senator Pinochet and did not relate to that subject.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, columns 148–49, concerning Senator Pinochet, if his Department informed the Chilean Ambassador on 16 October that the Metropolitan Police were interested in Senator Pinochet's possible diplomatic immunity. [68490]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: No. The inquiry from the Metropolitan Police about Senator Pinochet's possible diplomatic immunity was received after the telephone conversation between this Department and the Chilean Ambassador.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, columns 148–49, concerning General Pinochet, if the discussions between his Department and the Metropolitan Police on 16 October 1998 took place before his Department was telephoned by the Chilean Ambassador on 16 October. [68489]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The contacts with the Metropolitan Police concerning immunity took place after the conversation with the Chilean Ambassador on 16 October. Contacts with the Metropolitan Police before the conversation on 16 October concerned only the request from the 5th Central Magistrate's Court in Madrid to interview Senator Pinochet, received on 14 October and of which the Chilean Ambassador was aware.

Export Licences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what export licences have been granted since 1 May 1997 for the export of land mines; if he will list the countries and the dates when the licences were granted; and how many land mines were included under each export licence. [64523]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

The export of land mines is controlled under entry ML4 in the Export of Goods (Control) Order, which also covers bombs, torpedoes, rockets, missiles and related equipment and accessories. The entry in the legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating.

The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 2 May 1997 and 4 December 1998, 890 individual licences were issued covering the export of goods with the relevant rating: 844 Standard Individual Export Licences and 46 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs).

It would entail disproportionate cost to determine if any of these licences covered land mines. However, I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Helen Jackson) on 21 May 1997, Official Report, columns 72–73, which set out the Government's policy on the import, export, transfer, manufacture and use of anti-personnel land mines.

The information on licences should be considered in light of the answer given by the then Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

The Government are also committed to reporting annually on the state of strategic export controls and their application. As the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), stated in his answer of 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 149, to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones), the annual report will list by country of destination the numbers of export licences issued in each equipment category and give details of the military equipment for which licences have been granted. This information will also be given in future reports.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hollis Industries Plc

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department received the letter of 15 July from the right hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), passed on by the Registrar of Companies, regarding alleged accounting offences by Hollis Industries plc. [65593]

Mr. Byers: On 17 July 1998.

Rt. Hon. Member for Hartlepool

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date the Permanent Secretary to the Department of Trade and Industry was informed of the loan from the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) to the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson). [65598]

Mr. Byers: On 17 December 1998.

Post Office

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what limits the Government have set on Post Office expenditure on acquisitions this year and next; and what is his current forecast of the Post Office contribution to the public sector's revenues; [66228]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the acquisition of German Parcels on (a) the Post Office's net cash generation and (b) the level of overall public borrowing. [66153]

Mr. Byers: Under the new financial framework for the Post Office, announced in the House on 7 December 1998, Official Report, columns 21–24, by my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), the proportion of profits removed from the business will be halved, enabling it to finance greater levels of investment.

In addition, the Government recognise that larger growth investments may require prudent borrowing. Post Office proposals for the largest strategic investments, including acquisitions, will be considered on a case-by-case basis.

The Post Office contribution to the public sector (apart from normal corporate taxes) was expected to be £310 million for 1998–99, and £207 million for 1999–2000, the latter based on an estimate of 50 per cent. of post-tax profits. Adjustments to these external financing limits to take account of UK borrowing to finance the purchase of German Parcels will be made shortly.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the cost to the Post Office of the acquisition of German Parcels. [66154]

Mr. Byers: The Post Office has asked that the precise details of this specific transaction not be released for reasons of commercial confidentiality. The financial implications of Post Office investments will properly be reflected in both published Government and Post Office accounts.

Regional Aid

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he intends to submit to the European Commission on the designation of new assisted areas for regional selective assistance. [66132]

Mr. Byers: No decisions have yet been made on the areas that will be proposed to the European Commission.

Siemens

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will require Siemens to repay their start-up grant. [66134]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to him on 9 November 1998, Official Report, columns 57–58.

Armscor

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what investigations Her Majesty's Government have carried out into the affairs of Armscor; [65125]

(2) what dealings representatives of Her Majesty's Government have had with Armscor. [65126]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Since the April 1994 democratic elections in South Africa, the Government, primarily through the Ministry of Defence, have had some contact with Armscor.

The DTI has not carried out any investigations into the affairs of Armscor. However, a Customs and Excise investigation into alleged breaches of UK export controls led to proceedings being initiated in 1984 against four South Africans connected with Armscor. The four were bailed, but failed to return for trial. The charges were withdrawn in December 1994.

Export Licences

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the quantity of small arms for which export licences were granted in each of the last five years in respect of (a) China, (b) Zambia, (c) the Sudan and (d) Serbia and Montenegro. [65884]

Dr. Howells: The export of specified small arms is controlled under entries ML1 and PL5018 in the Export of Goods (Control) Order, which also cover specified accessories and specially designed components. The entry in the legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating.

The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1998, 60 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Zambia of goods covered by these ratings. Two Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were also issued covering such exports on which Zambia was a permitted destination. It would entail disproportionate cost to determine the quantity of small arms covered by these licences.

Individual licences issued in each year covering the export to Zambia of goods with the ratings ML1 or PL5018

	Ratings ML1		Ratings PL5018
	Number of SIELs issued covering goods with rating	Number of OIELs issued covering goods with rating	Number of SIELs issued covering goods with rating	Number of OIELs issued covering goods with rating

1995	10	0	12	0
1996	12	0	6	0

In the same period, no individual export licences were issued for the export of goods with these ratings to consignees or end-users in the People's Republic of China, Sudan or the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

There is no internationally agreed definition of "small arms". It is possible that some weapons controlled under other ratings could be called small arms; for instance a 12-bore shotgun with a calibre greater than 12.7mm would be controlled under entry ML2.

Certain Open General Export Licences (OGELs) cover, for a range of specified countries (including Zambia), the return of weapons controlled under entries ML1 and PL5018, subject to the conditions of the licence in each case. These include the Open General Export Licence (Export After Repair: Military Goods). Zambia is also a permitted destination on the Open General Export Licence (Export After Exhibition: Military Goods). The export of such weapons to Zambia is also covered by the Open General Export Licence (Export for Repair/Replacement Under Warranty: Military Goods). Copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House. No OGELs cover the export of such goods to the People's Republic of China, Sudan or the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences have been granted for the export of military and paramilitary goods to Sri Lanka for the last five years, in each case listing the categories under which the licences were issued. [66377]

Dr. Howells: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating.

The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1998, 360 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and 34 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Sri Lanka of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List. Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings. Where this is so, the licence is included in the Table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

In addition, certain goods on the Military List may have been exported to Sri Lanka under certain Open General Export Licences; copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications for the export of (a) paramilitary, (b) security and (c) police equipment to Indonesia have been (i) granted, (ii) refused and (iii) revoked since 10 May 1998; and if he will indicate the export licence category in each case. [66616]

Dr. Howells: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating.

The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 11 May and 31 December 1998, 17 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and 8 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Indonesia of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List. In the same period, no such licences were revoked and one standard individual export licence application, covering goods with a rating of ML1, was refused.

Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings. Where this is so, the licence is included in the Table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

In addition, goods on the Military List may have been exported to Indonesia under certain Open General Export Licences; copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green said in her answers to my hon. Friend of 8 April 1998, Official Report, columns 345–46, and 3 June 1998, Official Report, column 227, it is not possible to break down these data in the manner requested as the equipment covered by many entries in the Military List could be used by military, paramilitary or police end-users.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what export licences are required for (a) military goods and (b) dual-use goods exported by the Crown. [66236]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 19 January 1999]: The export of controlled military goods is controlled under the Export of Goods (Control) Order, made under the provisions of the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939. As the 1939 Act does not bind the Crown, no licence is required. As regards exports of dual-use goods, I refer the hon. Member to the answer of 1 December 1998 to my hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Grogan), Official Report, columns 123–24.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what licences have been granted to the Crown Agents since 1 May 1997 for military or dual-use goods, by category; [66237]

(2) if he will list the export licences for tear gas or plastic bullets (a) given to and (b) applied for by the Crown Agents since 1 May 1997; [66239]

(3) how many export licences have been given to the Crown Agents since 1 May 1997 for goods in the ML7 category. [66240]

Dr. Howells [holding answers 19 January 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible, and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what export licences have been issued to International Military Sales Ltd. since 1 May 1997; [66242]

(2) what documentation has been required for export licences issued to International Military Sales Ltd. [66243]

Dr. Howells [holding answers 19 January 1999]: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated, and no standard or open individual licences are recorded as having been issued to this company between 2 May 1997 and 31 December 1998. This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what military or dual-use goods have been exported without licences by the Crown Agents since 1 May 1997, by category. [66238]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 19 January 1999]: The Export Control Organisation of the Department of Trade and Industry maintains records of applications for licences required under the Export of Goods (Control) Order (1994), EC Regulation 3381–94 and related Council Decision 94/942/CFSP, or the Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Regulations 1996. It does not compile records either of licensed exports or of exports for which no licence has been issued.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the export licences granted to Procurement Services International to export military equipment to Indonesia. [67593]

Dr. Howells: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible, and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list military equipment exported to Indonesia since 1 May 1997. [67602]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the then President of the Board of Trade on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 124–26, to the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) and my predecessor's replies of 8 April 1998, Official Report, columns 345–46, and of 3 June 1998, Official Report, column 227, and to PQ number 66616 tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd), answered today, Official Report, columns 502–03.

I would also refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 149.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce legislation to regulate the overseas licensed production and export of military, security and police equipment by a UK company in a second country; and what representations he has received on these matters. [66891]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 25 January 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) on 12 January 1999, Official Report, columns 149–50, and to the answers given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Ms Jones) on 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 364, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 151.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the operation by other states of a legal right to advance public scrutiny of export licence applications for military, security and police equipment transfers. [66893]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 25 January 1999]: In the course of our review of the proposals contained in the White Paper on Strategic Export Controls in the light of responses received, we are also examining, where it is relevant to do so, legislation and practice in other countries.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what measures are currently available to prevent British manufacturers of equipment entered in Part III of Schedule I to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, from licensing production in countries where such equipment might be used for internal repression or international aggression, or pose a risk to regional stability; [67896]

(2) what measures he is taking to ensure that UK and European export control mechanisms are not undermined by licensed production agreements; and if he will make a statement. [67892]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer of 12 January 1999, Official Report, columns 149–50, to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd).

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences for the export of goods entered in Part III of Schedule I to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 to Indonesia have been granted and denied since 1 May 1997. [67895]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 26 January 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the then President of the Board of Trade on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 124–26, to the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) and my predecessor's replies of 8 April 1998, Official Report, columns 345–46 and of 3 June 1998, Official Report, column 227 and to PQ number 66616 tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd), answered today, Official Report, columns 502–03.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences for the export of goods entered in Part III of Schedule I to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 have been granted since 1 May 1997 in respect of (a) Afghanistan, (b) Angola, (c) Rwanda and (d) Yugoslavia. [67898]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 2 May 1997 and 8 January 1999, 23 standard individual export licences (SIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in the specified countries of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule I to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List. In the same period, no such Open Individual Export Licences were issued.

Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings. Where this is so, the licence is included in the Table in the total for all the relevant ratings.

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

This information should be considered in light of my predecessor's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the planned contents of the annual report on strategic export controls and their application as proposed in the White Paper "Strategic Export Controls". [66894]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 25 January 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 149.

British Airways

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) on what issues more progress is needed before a final decision can be announced on the application for approval of the alliance between British Airways and American Airlines; [66641]

(2) when he expects to be able to announce a final decision on the proposed alliance between British Airways and American Airlines; [66642]

(3) if he will place in the Library a copy of his predecessor's letter to British Airways in reply to a letter dated 2 December seeking deferment of a final decision on the alliance with American Airlines; and if he will make a statement. [66643]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 19 January 1999]: The Alliance cannot be implemented until my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions has concluded a new liberalised air services agreement with the United States. I could not take a final decision on the alliance until the picture on the negotiations is clearer. Assuming satisfactory progress on the air services agreement, there would also need to be further work to be done on the details of slot allocation, and the industry wide issues identified by the Commission also need to be progressed. Given the current position, it is not possible for me to assess when I will be able to take a final decision.

The substance of my predecessor's letter to British Airways has already been made public. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), on 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 697.

Former Ministers

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many severance payments have been made to Ministers who have quit office in his Department since 2 May 1997; and if he will list (a) the former ministers concerned and (b) the sums paid. [66593]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 19 January 1999]: Severance payments to Ministers are made in accordance with the Ministerial and Other Pensions and Salaries Act 1991 which provides that Ministers who have not attained the age of 65, and are not reappointed to a relevant Ministerial or other paid office within three weeks of their leaving office are eligible for a severance payment of one quarter of the annual salary being paid.

Two Ministers who have left the Department since 2 May 1997 qualify for such payments—my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths), who was Under-Secretary of State at the time of his departure, and my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), who was Secretary of State.

Minister for Science

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what dates the Minister for Science resigned from the boards of (a) Diatech and (b) Innotech Innovation. [66695]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 20 January 1999]: The Minister for Science resigned as a Director of Diatech Limited and of Innotech Investment Limited on 31 July 1998.

Local Deprivation Indicators

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which measures of local deprivation his Department and its agencies use in considering allocation of funds to local projects. [66720]

Mr. Wills: The DTI does not use measures of local deprivation in considering allocation of funds to local projects. Applications for regional selective assistance are considered on their merits, in accordance with the requirements of the Industrial Development Act 1982.

Energy Agencies

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will (a) list (i) the number of energy agencies in the United Kingdom and (ii) give details of how they are funded and (b) state what plans he has to increase the number of energy agencies in the United Kingdom. [67686]

Mr. Meale: I have been asked to reply.

Seventeen energy agencies have been established in the UK under the European Commission's SAVE II energy efficiency programme, and I understand that a further five are completing the contractual procedures. Detailed funding arrangements are a matter for the Commission and the agency concerned, though, in general, the SAVE II programme provides up to 150,000 Euros of start-up funding: after three years, the agencies are expected to become self financing. We publicise the annual call for proposals under the SAVE II programme, and encourage and assist UK interests to submit effective applications.

Electricity Supply (North Yorkshire)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what applications he has received for the continuation of the supply carried by the Lackenby-Picton-Shipton line beyond Shipton; [67466]

(2) if he will make a statement on the requirement for the National Grid to apply for further consents to transfer electricity south of Shipton; [67464]

(3) if the National Grid has obtained the necessary consents for its proposals for the transfer of power supply south of Shipton. [67465]

Mr. Battle: The Lackenby-Picton-Shipton line, for which various consents were granted on 26 March 1998, will connect with an existing line from Shipton to Osbaldwick which forms part of the national transmission system and which was granted consent in 1964. This will allow the transfer of electricity south of Shipton. No further applications have been received in respect of this transfer.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67847]

Mr. Byers: We aim to make key departmental information as widely available as possible and to put departmental White and Green Papers on the DTI Internet web site. This is useful to people with visual impairments since they can adjust their software to increase the text size to meet their requirements.

It has not been our usual practice to offer texts on floppy disk simply because there has not been a demand. Availability of texts via the Internet may now be satisfying that demand but if we receive an ad hoc request for a text on disk we are happy to produce and supply it.

Officials are due to meet representatives of the RNIB in early February to discuss what further steps the Department could take to help the visually impaired access DTI material.

Death Penalty Equipment

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce a ban on the brokering, promotion and installation of death penalty technology and equipment by UK companies; and what representations he has received on these matters. [66892]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 25 January 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson) on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 65–66, which announced a ban on the export of certain, specified equipment that has been used in torture. I understand that there is no present intention to extend the scope of this ban, and that there is no accepted definition of "death penalty technology", which could encompass technology relating to the production and use of a very wide range of items. The Government's proposals for new powers to control trafficking and brokering of the goods covered by the ban announced by the Foreign Secretary were set out in the White Paper on Strategic Export Controls (Cm 3989), published in July 1998. The Government have received a number of responses to the White Paper, and regularly receive representations on various issues relating to strategic export controls.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 18 January 1999, Official Report, columns 359–60, concerning the tendering process for the award of a contract by Action 2000 (1) which of the companies invited to tender have previously done work for Action 2000; [67443]

(2) what the closing date was for the receipt of tenders; and on what date a decision was made as to which tender was successful; [67445]

(3) on what date the three companies were invited to tender; and in what way the tender opportunity was advertised; [67444]

(4) on what date and where the three companies presented their proposals to Action 2000 and an independent representative from Business Link; [67442]

(5) how many companies were visited prior to the issue of invitations to tender; and what criteria were used in deciding which companies should be invited to tender. [67446]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 25 January 1999]: This detailed commercial information is a matter for the company. The question has therefore been drawn to the attention of the Chairman of Action 2000.

BSkyB (Manchester United)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his predecessor received advice from the Permanent Secretary at the Department of Trade and Industry that there was no conflict of interest which prevented him from dealing with competition issues arising from the proposed takeover by BSkyB of Manchester United. [67356]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 25 January 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), on 27 October 1998, Official Report, column 134.

Departmental Staff (Travel)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [67492]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 26 January 1999]: Mileage rates paid to staff using their own cars for official business are as follows:

Engine Size	Up to 4000 miles (standard rate) (p)	over 4000 miles (lower standard rate) (p)
Up to 1500cc	35	20
1501–2000cc	45	25
over 2000cc	48	34

The rates for the two smaller categories of engine are Inland Revenue calculated Fixed Profit Car Scheme (FPCS) rates. However, for the over 2000cc category, DTI pays significantly lower rates than those published by the Inland Revenue. The DTI rates are 48p and 34p per mile compared to the FPCS rates of 63p and 36p per mile respectively. This policy was introduced to discourage use of large engined cars.

Other encouragements to use public transport, or less polluting forms of transport than cars are:

- a travel and subsistence policy that promotes the use of public transport over car use
- provision of interest free loans for season ticket and bicycle purchase
- provision of parking facilities for cycles in all DTI buildings and shower facilities in some.

DTI is currently reviewing its travel policy and will shortly be producing a green transport plan.

Football Clubs (Media Rights)

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on Government policy on football clubs buying media rights to football coverage. [67334]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 27 January 1999]: I understand that the hon. Member is referring to the general issue of closer ownership ties between football clubs and media companies, and the possible impact which any such ties may have on the televising of football matches, football merchandising, and the choice available to football supporters.

On the question of ownership, the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) advises on acquisitions which qualify for investigation under the Fair Trading Act 1973. Where a merger raises concerns it can be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) for investigation. All cases are considered on their individual merits.

Separately from the arrangements for scrutinising mergers, if any links between media companies and football clubs were to lead to allegations of anti-competitive behaviour or abuse of a dominant position, then, in the first instance, it would be the responsibility of the DGFT to investigate the matter.

In addition, in April 1996 the DGFT referred to the Restrictive Practices Court (RPC) the FA Premier League rules and certain restrictions in agreements between the Premier League, BSkyB and the BBC for televising football. The case is now a matter for the RPC. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has no role in the RPC's procedures. It is for the parties to the agreements to demonstrate to the RPC that the restrictions in the agreements are not contrary to the public interest.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a specimen contract between BNFL and a German utility covering reprocessing services, excluding any commercially confidential information. [68427]

Mr. Battle: The contracts between BNFL and its German customers are commercially confidential in their entirety, and therefore we are unable to do so.

Electronic Warfare

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for the Home Department of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 75, on electronic warfare, what responsibilities of his Department for measures against information warfare will come within the lead responsibility of the Secretary of State for the Home Department. [68313]

Mr. Wills: The Home Secretary's new responsibilities to coordinate action across government and work with the private sector to ensure adequate protection for the UK's critical infrastructure were set out in his reply of 25 January. The specific responsibilities of individual Departments have not changed. The Department of Trade and Industry's responsibilities include the promotion of BS7799 (the Code of practice for Information security management) and the c:cure scheme (the scheme for accredited certification against BS7799). Responsibilities also include the relevant initiatives falling within industry sectors (such as telecommunications, oil, gas, electricity). This includes ensuring that these sectors have sufficient systems and controls to protect themselves against the possibility of attack.

Electricity Trading

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that the reform of electricity trading arrangements are subject to an environmental assessment under the environmental policy guidelines. [68318]

Mr. Battle: An environmental appraisal was undertaken in respect of the Government's proposed electricity market reforms, including the reform of electricity trading arrangements, and this was published as part of the Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation (Cm 4071). Environmental concerns will continue to be a central consideration throughout the process of implementing new electricity trading arrangements.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of proposals to extend the Working Time Directive to the United Kingdom sector of the Continental Shelf in respect of (a) cost and (b) safety; and if he will make a statement. [68368]

Mr. Ian McCartney: On 18 November, the European Commission proposed to extend the Working Time Directive to the excluded sectors. This includes an estimated 20,000 offshore workers in the UK. We are considering the proposals carefully, and will seek to ensure they are balanced, sensible and do not adversely affect the competitiveness or the safety requirements of the industries concerned.

Due to difficulty in identifying workers within the excluded sectors the cost of applying the Working Time Directive to offshore workers was covered in the original assessment. A copy of this assessment has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Central Arbitration Committee

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the current responsibility of the Central Arbitration Committee and his plans for extending it. [68628]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Central Arbitration Committee (CAC) currently hears complaints under section 181 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 that an employer has failed to disclose information to a recognised trade union for the purposes of collective bargaining. Under section 212 of that Act, it may also arbitrate in trade disputes referred to it by ACAS, though it has not done so for several years.

The Employment Relations Bill introduced on 27 January contains the Government's proposals both to extend the role of the CAC to deal with applications for trade union recognition and to revise the statutory administrative provisions governing the CAC.

Domestic Gas

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had about extending the domestic gas supply network in the United Kingdom; and what proposals there are for such extensions. [68377]

Mr. Battle: This is a matter for the Director General of Gas Supply (DGSS) who has duties under the Gas Act 1986 (as amended) to exercise his relevant functions to ensure that reasonable demands for gas conveyed through pipes are met where it is economical, and that there is effective competition in the conveyance of gas to new areas. There are now some seven Public Gas Transporters (PGTs). A consumer seeking a gas connection can either seek a connection from a PGT; purchase and lay the pipe himself, or his PGT can use the system of supplemental charges whereby the cost of the connection is recovered over a protracted period of time through an additional charge on each unit of gas used. I understand that a number of PGTs continue to be granted geographical extensions to their licences and that a growing number of premises is being connected to the main gas system.

SMEs (Internet)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to assist the establishment of free local telephone calls to encourage wider use of the Internet among small and medium enterprises. [68464]

Mr. Wills: Providing a local call service is not cost-free. Where free local calls are offered, this is usually tied to higher monthly standing charges. BT are free to package their tariffs as they wish as long as their overall prices fall within the price cap set by OFTEL. Other operators are not subject to this price cap. However, BT are not able to price their services below cost as this would be anti-competitive. Average UK business and consumer telecommunications prices as a whole (combining standing charges and call charges on various tariffs) are below US, EU or OECD averages.

Electronic Commerce Support Centres (North-West)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the local electronic commerce support centres in the North-West; and how many small and medium enterprises use their services. [68462]

Mr. Wills: Information Society Initiative centres are based in the following TEC areas:

Bolton/Bury Cumbria
ELTEC
Manchester
North and Mid Cheshire
Oldham
Rochdale
South and East Cheshire
Stockport and High Peak
Wigan
CEWTEC
St. Helens

The North West Technology Web also has a network of Technology Management Centres in:

Blackburn
Bolton
Daresbury
Manchester
Oldham
Preston
Skelmersdale
(A further centre is currently being set up in Cumbria)

Other centres which provide similar support to businesses include Connect in Liverpool, which covers Merseyside, and ISaware and Gemisis, which cover Greater Manchester.

Information on the number of companies using these centres will take time to compile and I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of that letter in the Libraries of the House.

Job Creation (Chorley)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will bring forward proposals for grants towards the creation for new jobs in the Chorley constituency. [68461]

Mr. Wills: The Government are currently reviewing the Assisted Areas Map. Following a public consultation last summer, it will make proposals to the European Commission for new Assisted Areas Map which will operate from 1 January 2000. No decisions have yet been made on the areas to be proposed. The Competitiveness White Paper announced a range of measures to improve competitiveness and create new jobs throughout the UK.

Indigenous Industries (Assistance)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for assistance to indigenous industries located outside areas qualifying for regional selective assistance. [68460]

Mr. Wills: As announced in the Competitiveness White Paper, the Government are considering new measures to support the growth of smaller businesses in selected areas with particular needs. By working in partnership with the private sector to support the Enterprise Fund, the Government are also committed to ensuring that small businesses have access to appropriate funding.

Correspondence

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to reply to the letter of 8 January from the hon. Member for Aylesbury about an export licence application of Aylesbury Automation Ltd. [68769]

Dr. Howells: The hon. Gentleman was sent a reply to his letter on 1 February.

Ex-miners (Compensation Scheme)

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the compensation scheme for ex-miners suffering from chronic bronchitis and emphysema to become operative. [68542]

Mr. Battle: We are close to agreeing with the plaintiffs' solicitors the arrangements for dealing with the 65,000 claims received to date and the further 35,000 claims expected. We are currently tendering for a national spirometry testing programme which we aim to start by the end of March. This should ensure that interim payments and, in some cases, full and final settlements, can begin to be offered to miners who are most severely disabled in the Spring. We hope that full examinations under the agreed Medical Assessment Process will commence in early Summer.

EU Code of Conduct (Arms Sales)

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements will be made to make available in the United Kingdom the annual report on the EU code of conduct on arms sales. [68110]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

Member States have yet to decide whether the consolidated report to the Council on the operation of the Code should be made public. This is likely to depend on the content of the report, for example whether it contains information which Member States have agreed should remain confidential, such as details of individual licence refusals and consultations between Member States. Any changes to the Code as a result of the report will by definition be made public.

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to extend the principles of the EU code of conduct on arms exports to non-EU nations. [68106]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

Following the adoption of the Code of Conduct in June 1998, the UK drew the Code to the attention of other arms exporting states and, in line with paragraph 11 of the operative provisions, encouraged them to subscribe to its principles. We understand that other EU Member States have taken similar action. The Associated Countries of Central and Eastern Europe and Cyprus have aligned themselves with the criteria in the Code of Conduct. The UK welcomes the decision of Canada to subscribe to the principles and criteria developed in the Code of Conduct.

East Timor

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment the Minister has made of the allegations by the Defence Attaché to the Indonesian Embassy in London that British-made military equipment, including Saracen and Saladin armoured vehicles, are currently in use in occupied East Timor; and if he will make a statement. [67935]

Mr. Fatchett: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 394. Saracen and Saladin armoured vehicles were exported to Indonesia in the 1960s.

CABINET OFFICE

Ministerial Group on Older People

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office who is the Chair of the Ministerial Group on Older People; and if he will list the Group's full membership. [67246]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Prime Minister has asked the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms), to take on the Chair of the Ministerial Group on Older People from Easter. The Minister of State, Department of Health is continuing to chair the Group until then.

Membership of the Group comprises those Ministers who have particular responsibilities for policy areas which affect older people. It includes the Minister for Women, and Ministers from the Department of Health, the Department of Social Security, the Cabinet Office, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Home Office, HM Treasury, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, the Department for Education and Employment, the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Ministry of Defence, the Northern Ireland Office, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office.

Marsham Street

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what further progress has been made on formulating plans for vacating the Marsham Street offices and demolishing them. [68316]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to Property Advisers to the Civil Estate. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. John Locke, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John C. Locke to Mr. Edward Leigh, dated 29 January 1999:

The Parliamentary Secretary for the Cabinet Office, Peter Kilfoyle, has asked me as Chief Executive of Property Advisers to the Civil Estate (PACE) to respond to your Parliamentary Question about further progress on the future of 2 Marsham Street as management responsibility for the building rests with this Agency.

As you are already aware, 2 Marsham Street is a Government freehold and until April last year was occupied by the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR). Since your earlier question on 10 June the building has remained vacant, save for the use of a limited part as a winter shelter for some of London's homeless. This Government initiative will end on 31 March, by which time a decision may well have been taken about the possible reuse of Marsham Street as temporary decant accommodation for another Government Department while its premises are refurbished. Such temporary re-use might last for 3 to 4 years. If re-use of the building cannot be justified in Exchequer terms, arrangements will be made to commence demolition.

PACE has already advertised the demolition contract through the Official Journal of the European Community (OJEC) and retains in its possession the expressions of interest that were received in response to the advertisement. Should Marsham Street remain unoccupied, PACE will review these expressions of interest together with all the other considerations related to the demolition of such a large building in a heavily built-up area like Westminster. On completion of the review, our intention would be to seek Ministerial approval to announce a start date for demolition. The work would be expected to take some 18 months following the letting of a contract.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68394]

Mr. Kilfoyle: (a) The Security Facilities Division will be closed by 31 March 2001. (b) The Freedom of Information Unit transferred to the Home Office. (c) No responsibilities will be transferred to an executive agency. (d) The Women's Unit and Women's National Commission (NDPB) transferred from the Department of Social Security, UK Anti Drugs Co-ordination Unit from the Privy Council Office, and Head of Government Information & Communications Service from the Home Office. The Performance and Innovation Unit and the Centre for Management & Policy Studies have been newly established within the Department. The Royal Commission on House of Lords reform to be established in March 1999.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68410]

Mr. Kilfoyle: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he discussed working families tax credit with the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) as a policy which might be discussed by the Joint Consultative Committee. [68366]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: No.

HEALTH

Dental Care

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the forthcoming White Paper on Health is planned to be published; and if it will contain a section on dental care. [67108]

Ms Jowell: The "Our Healthier Nation" Green Paper included oral health in an indicative list of areas which might be suitable for local health improvement targets to tackle health inequalities. The consultation asked how opinion on fluoridation could best be tested at local level. The forthcoming "Our Healthier Nation" White Paper will take full account of the responses to the consultation. We plan to publish the White Paper in the spring.

Neurology Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the specialist indicators which will be used to assess neurology services under the new NHS National Performance Framework. [66875]

Mr. Denham: "The New NHS Modern and Dependable: A National Framework for Assessing Performance" was published for consultation in January 1998 to signal our commitment to a broader based approach to assessing National Health Service performance. It included an initial set of high level performance indicators, which included two composite indicators in the "Effective Delivery of Appropriate Healthcare" area relevant to neurological services. The first was a chronic care management indicator including age and sex standardised admission rates for epilepsy. The second was a discharge from hospital indicator which included the rate of discharge home within 56 days of emergency admission from home with a stroke. Following consultation, the revised NHS performance assessment framework will be published shortly, together with a revised set of initial high level performance indicators. The high level performance indicators will continue to develop over time to ensure they focus on the outcomes that matter most to patients and the public.

Hospital Merger (Leicester)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received on the proposed merger of NHS acute hospital trusts in Leicester; [66916]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact (a) on public funds and (b) on health service provision of the proposed merger of hospital trusts in Leicester; and if he will make a statement; [66919]

(3) when he intends to start the consultation process on the proposed merger of acute hospital trusts in Leicester; who will be consulted; when he proposes to give his final approval for the proposal; and if he will make a statement. [67951]

Mr. Denham: When considering merger proposals the main factor must be the benefits any merger would bring to patients. Any proposal to merge National Health Service trusts will be expected to realise management cost savings of a minimum of £500,000 within two years. These savings would be retained locally for investment in frontline NHS services.

Ministers have not received direct representation on this issue. However, on 28 January 1999 I announced that a public consultation would be initiated on proposals to merge Glenfield Hospital NHS Trust, Leicester General Hospital NHS Trust and Leicester Royal Infirmary NHS Trust. The consultation will be carried out by NHS Executive Trent and will last from 22 February to 22 May. There is a formal requirement for the Department to consult with the Community Health Council but arrangements will also be made locally for the wider public to be invited to make their views known. Ministers will make a decision after the consultation has completed and all representations have been fully considered.

Correspondence

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health took 17 weeks to reply to the letter dated 9 September 1998 from the hon. Member for Christchurch about the continued availability of animal insulin for diabetics; and if he will make a statement. [67344]

Ms Jowell: I apologise to the hon. Member for the exceptional length of time taken to reply to his letter. Unfortunately it was misplaced within the Department. As soon as it came to light my noble Friend the Under-Secretary replied immediately.

Organophosphate Poisoning

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what procedures are in place to inform doctors of the symptoms of organophosphate exposure; [67123]

(2) what measures his Department has taken to educate doctors regarding the recognition and treatment of chronic organophosphate poisoning. [67121]

Ms Jowell: The Chief Medical Officer wrote to all doctors in England in 1991, and again with the Chief Executive of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate in June 1993, to alert doctors to the possibility of adverse effects from exposure to pesticides and certain veterinary medicines and to remind them of the reporting schemes for human adverse reactions to veterinary products operated by the Employment Medical Advisory Service and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's Veterinary Medicines Directive. The Chief Medical Officers in Scotland, in Wales and in Northern Ireland also wrote to doctors in those countries.

An article in the October 1995 edition of Chief Medical Officer's Update, a quarterly publication sent to all doctors in England, dealt with both the acute and chronic effects of organophosphates (OPs) and the methods for reporting adverse reactions to them.

A further article, in the April 1996 edition of Update (England only) informed all doctors of the publication, in the same month, of the new edition of the book "Pesticide Poisoning: Notes for the Guidance of Medical Practitioners". This book contains a section on the acute and chronic toxic effects of OP insecticides and was sent by all United Kingdom Health Departments to general practices, accident and emergency departments and consultants in communicable disease control (and equivalents) with a covering letter.

Copies of this book were also sent to the presidents of the Royal Colleges (Royal College of Physicians, Royal College of Surgeons, Royal College of Anaesthetists, Royal College of General Practitioners, Royal College of Pathologists, Faculty of Public Health Medicine and Faculty of Occupational Medicine) under cover of an explanatory letter which encouraged them to draw the book to the attention of their Fellows/Members through their continuing medical education programmes.

Copies of the book "Pesticide Poisoning: Notes for the Guidance of Medical Practitioners" are available in the Library.

A report of a joint working party of the Royal College of Physicians of London and the Royal College of Psychiatrists set up at the invitation of the Department to advise on clinical aspects of long-term low-dose exposure to OP sheep dips was published in November 1998. An article in the February 1999 edition of the CMO's Update will draw doctors' attention to the report and the recommendations it contains on diagnosis and management of patients.

Over the coming months, we will also be discussing with other bodies such as the National Poisons Information Service, the working party's recommendations for improving awareness amongst general practitioners and other measures which might improve aspects of the diagnosis and management of this group of patients.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those NHS trusts in Britain which offer specialist treatment to patients suffering from chronic fatigue syndrome. [67008]

Ms Jowell: The information is not available in the form requested. The organisation of health services, including services for people suffering from chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis, and the manner in which they are delivered, are matters for National Health Service trusts and health authorities, taking account of the needs of the local population and the priorities set for the use of the available resources.

Orthopaedic Consultants

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the ratio of orthopaedic consultants to (a) adults and (b) pensioners in each health authority. [67000]

Mr. Denham: Copies of a table showing the latest available information on the ratio of orthopaedic consultants to (a) adults and (b) pensioners in each health authority will be placed in the Library.

Ongar War Memorial Hospital

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce his decision on the proposed closure of Ongar War Memorial Hospital. [67640]

Mr. Denham: A decision on the proposed closure of Ongar War Memorial Hospital will be announced shortly.

Winter Pressures Money

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much extra money was put into the NHS to help deal with the 1998–99 winter pressures; when this money was made available; and what it was spent on. [67375]

Mr. Denham: An extra £250 million (£209 million for England) was announced in November to help the National Health Service and social services manage this winter's pressures, £159 million of which was made available immediately in England. £50 million was held as a central contingency fund, £44 million of which has been allocated in January to relieve particular pressure points.

The additional moneys have funded well over 2,000 projects to manage emergency admissions and maximise bed availability, including many joint NHS/social service schemes aimed at providing appropriate support for patients in the community.

Aricept

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation he has made of the clinical trials regarding the use of Aricept in treating patients suffering from Alzheimer's disease. [67993]

Mr. Hutton: Information regarding the use of Aricept in patients suffering from Alzheimer's disease from clinical trials has been considered by the Medicines Control Agency.

The Standing Medical Advisory Committee, which advises health ministers, also considered available evidence from clinical trials and has reflected these in the clinical statement issued in April 1998.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what circumstances the drug Aricept is currently available by prescription for the treatment of Alzheimer's disease. [67992]

Mr. Denham: Aricept (donepezil) is licensed in the United Kingdom for the treatment of mild to moderate Alzheimer's disease, and can be prescribed by doctors on the National Health Service. The Standing Medical Advisory Committee has recommended that this treatment should be initiated only following a specialist assessment.

Practice Dispensing

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when arrangements were introduced through which general practitioners may earn additional income related to the volume and costs of drugs they dispense. [68448]

Mr. Denham: Payments to general practitioners in respect of practice dispensing have included arrangements to reflect the volume and cost of the drugs since the inception of the National Health Service.

The level of fees and allowances payable to GPs are set by the independent pay review body to deliver and distribute their recommended level of net incomes for GPs, taking account of the costs, pressures and workload of practice in different areas. Earnings from practice dispensing are an integral part of the overall recommendations of the review body.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of GPs dispense drugs. [68443]

Mr. Denham: Based on October 1997 data, some 16 per cent. of general practitioners in England are dispensing doctors.

Dental Services

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much was spent on NHS general dental services in each health authority in each year since 1995–96; [67260]

(2) if he will list, by health authority, the number of dentists with an NHS list and the average number of patients on each dentist's NHS list for (i) the most recent period for which data are available, (ii) March 1994 and (iii) March 1997; [67261]

(3) if he will list by health authority or council area the number of (i) children and (ii) adults registered, and the number of patients registered per 100 residents for (a) the last date for which figures are available, (b) March 1995, (c) March 1996, (d) March 1997 and (e) March 1998. [67262]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 28 January 1999]: Copies of the information requested have been placed in the Library. Data are not directly comparable from year to year because of health authority boundary changes.

Residential Care

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will respond to the report of the Centre for Policy on Ageing on National Required Standards for Residential Care and Nursing Homes; and if he will provide an estimate of the costs of compliance. [68222]

Mr. Hutton: The Centre for Policy on Ageing submitted their report on national standards for older people in residential care only very recently. We intend to publish the proposed standards for consultation shortly. Following consultation, we will consider the cost implications of introducing the standards prior to taking any decision about their implementation.

Beta-interferon

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify the unanswered questions about the appropriate use of beta-interferon referred to in his answer of 17 November, Official Report, columns 566–67, on which his Department is commissioning new research. [68429]

Mr. Hutton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 211.

A range of research questions are under consideration, broadly relating to the long-term clinical effectiveness of beta-interferon and its cost effectiveness relative to other treatments for multiple sclerosis.

Nurses' Uniforms

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the charging of nurses for their uniforms by colleges. [68465]

Mr. Denham: Uniforms are provided free of charge to nursing students. They are provided either by the local National Health Service trust or by the higher education institution; in the latter case, the costs are met through NHS contracts. A case came to our attention last week where a university was seeking to charge for nurses' uniforms, in a way not sanctioned by their contract. As soon as we heard about the proposal we asked officials to investigate and the university concerned has now withdrawn its proposal. NHS education commissioners have been reminded of the policy in this area.

Pay Review Body Recommendations

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the reports and recommendations of the Health Pay Review bodies. [68859]

Mr. Dobson: I am responding on behalf of my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for Wales and the Secretary of State for Scotland to the reports of the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration (DDRB) and the Review Body on Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine (NPRB), which have been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library. I am grateful to the chairmen and members of these Review Bodies for their hard work.

Nurses are to get their biggest real terms increase for 10 years, and for the first time in 5 years the award is being paid nationally in full with no staging. The NPRB have recommended an across the board increase of 4.7 per cent. for nurses, midwives and health visitors. Around 70,000 D grade staff nurses will receive 8.2 per cent.-8.4 per cent., worth an extra £1,100-£1,200 a year. In addition, minimum starting pay for newly qualified nurses will rise to £14,400, an increase of 12 per cent. In inner London starting pay for a newly qualified nurse will be at least £17,325 including London Allowance. The guaranteed London Allowance affecting 50,000 nurses will increase by 15.4 per cent. On top of these pay increases, almost half of all nurses will receive pay increments worth at least a further 3.4 per cent. With these increases, more than two thirds of qualified nurses will earn £20,000 or more per year.

The NPRB have also recommended an across the board increase of 4.7 per cent. for physiotherapists, radiographers and other professions allied to medicine (PAMs). Starting pay for basic grade PAMs with a degree after four years' training will increase on 1 April from £14,180 to £15,405, a rise of 8.6 per cent., with similar rises for other basic grade PAMs. The maximum of scale for highly skilled Senior 1 grade PAMs will increase from £21,485 to £23,130 from 1 April, a rise of 7.7 per cent.

The Government have decided to accept all the NPRB pay recommendations for 1999–2000, with no staging. The headline settlement of 4.7 per cent. for nurses and other NPRB staff groups is significantly higher than for any of the other Review Body groups announced today, and more than we would expect for pay settlements in the public sector generally or elsewhere in the National Health Service. However, this is justified by the exceptional problems of nurse recruitment and retention which result from the failure of the last Government to put in place an adequate training and pay system for the profession. We are pleased that the NPRB have recommended an exceptional increase for an exceptional problem.

The Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body (DDRB) has recommended a general pay increase of 3.5 per cent. for salaried doctors and dentists and for the pay element of fees for general medical practitioners. General practitioners will also receive the £60 million additional income recommended by DDRB last year for payment from 1999–2000. General dental practitioners' fees will also increase by 3.5 per cent. once the 0.9 per cent. addition to the feescale, awarded in 1998–99 only, has been removed. The DDRB has also recommended an additional £500 per year on the consultant scale maximum. The Government have accepted these recommendations for the coming year in full, with no staging.

The DDRB also recommended an extra £50 million a year from 2000–2001 to reward individual consultants for increases in workload and intensity of work. Our negotiations with the profession on a new consultant contract are covering these issues. We will consider this recommendation very carefully in the context of the negotiations, and are willing to make an investment in rewards and incentives if the negotiations deliver a better service for patients. We will, therefore, decide on the level of any extra funding for future years, and how such funding might be allocated, when the negotiations are complete.

Health authorities and NHS trusts can now use these opportunities to support a modern approach to recruiting, retaining and motivating key staff. I can announce today we are backing this with an allocation from the Modernisation Fund of £100m already earmarked for staff, which will go to all health authorities in England. This is in addition to the 6.5 per cent. increase in allocations to health authorities; and it will not affect the sums already announced within the Modernisation Fund for waiting lists, capital, mental health, primary care and information technology which already come to almost £1 billion for the coming year. The pay increases are therefore affordable both nationally and locally.

This extra funding will help us get the nurses and other staff in place to take forward effectively the Government's programme for modernising the NHS. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will be releasing an additional £20m to Health Boards from his Modernisation Programme. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is making £6m available as a contribution to modernising the service including recruitment and retention initiatives.

In its evidence to the Nursing Pay Review Body, the Department drew attention to recruitment and retention concerns and asked for changes to address this by starting to modernise the nursing pay scales. The Review Body has responded by improving starting pay for nurses, as well as continuing the discretionary points for staff at the top of pay scales.

We are supporting local recruitment plans with a high-profile, recruitment campaign for nurses which starts tonight on television. The aim is to attract more people into nursing and encourage qualified nurses and midwives to come back to work in the NHS. The focus of the campaign is on the value and rewards of a career in nursing and is intended to help recruit the extra nurses and midwives the NHS needs. The TV campaign will run for a month, backed by activity through to March in the national and regional press, in magazines and on radio.

These settlements are fair and are being paid in full. They provide a platform for us to move forward on pay modernisation. We will publish detailed proposals for modernising the NHS pay system shortly. The kind of pay system needed in a modern NHS will:

- enable staff to give their best for patients, working in new ways and breaking down traditional barriers
- get away from the rigid and outdated grading structures which restrict career progression for experienced staff
- pay fairly and equitably for work done, with career progression based on responsibility, competence and satisfactory performance
- simplify and modernise conditions of service, with national core conditions and appropriate local flexibility.

These changes are crucial to the modernisation of the NHS. They respond directly to concerns expressed by the Review Bodies, and are the only realistic way to satisfy nurses' aspirations for fewer pay ceilings and better reward for the job done. They provide the essential background for future investment in pay and staff development.

Health Authority Funding (West Midlands)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each health authority in (a) the West Midlands and (b) shire counties (i) the total funding allocation for health services and (ii) the funding per capita for (1) 1996–97 and (2) 1997–98. [68332]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

For the per capita figures crude populations have been used. No account has been taken of the differences in age or other factors which influence the allocations which have been made.

1. Final cash limit is the sum of the initial cash limit plus all in year adjustments. Cash limit adjustments in respect of the temporary loan of cash limits to other authorities have been excluded.
2. Health authorities are not co-terminous with local authorities. The list of health authorities under "other" is intended to broadly equate to shire counties. It excludes health authorities whose areas mainly relate to metropolitan councils and London boroughs.
3. The 1996–97 population figures used are mid-year population projections based on 1993 estimates. The 1997–98 population figures used are mid-year population projections based on 1995 estimates.

Stereotactic Radiosurgery

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities fund the use of stereotactic radiosurgery; and what constraints are imposed by him in respect of the funding of clinical procedures capable of being classified as in the realms of research. [67709]

Mr. Hutton: Stereotactic radiosurgery is available in eight of some fifty radiotherapy centres in the United Kingdom. The technique is well established for certain well-defined conditions which would be expected to occur in patients spread fairly evenly across all health authorities. Health authorities make resource allocation decisions according to local priorities.

We encourage National Health Service bodies to undertake experimental treatments only within an evaluative framework. Any decisions to fund experimental treatments as research will be influenced by their importance to the health service and assessments on the value of the research.

WALES

GPs

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioners were registered in Wales in May 1997; and how many are currently registered in Wales. [68456]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Data on numbers of general medical practitioners were collected on a six monthly basis (as at 1 April and 1 October) until 1 October 1997 after which only annual data (at 1 October) are being collected.

At 1 April 1997 there were 1,840 general medical practitioners in Wales, of which 1,740 were unrestricted principals. By 1 October 1997 the figures had risen to 1,874 and 1,753 respectively.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

General Pinochet

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received in respect of possible private prosecutions being taken out against General Pinochet; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement. [67970]

The Attorney-General: On 26 October 1998, I received an application from Winstanley-Burgess, Solicitors, acting for a number of individuals who complained of acts of torture in Chile in the period 1973–1990. The application was of Law Officer consent to prosecute Augusto Pinochet for offices of torture contrary to section 134 Criminal Justice Act 1988. By letter dated 28 October 1998, Winstanley-Burgess were advised that I had considered their application and had declined to grant consent on the basis that the application revealed insufficient admissible evidence for there to be a realistic prospect of a conviction.

On 26 October 1998, I received an application from Bindman & Partners, Solicitors, acting for a number of individuals who alleged that they had suffered criminal offences in Chile at a time when Augusto Pinochet was in power. The application was for Law Officer consent to prosecute Augusto Pinochet for offences of torture, contrary to section 134 Criminal Justice Act 1988, and for hostage taking, contrary to the Taking of Hostages Act 1982. By letter dated 28 October 1998 Bindman & Partners were advised that I had considered their application and had declined to grant consent on the basis that the application revealed insufficient admissible evidence for there to be a realistic prospect of a conviction.

Bindman & Partners have on a number of occasions renewed their application for Law Officer consent to prosecute Augusto Pinochet with further material. To date, their applications have been declined on the same basis as before. Their latest application is under consideration.

Individuals have communicated with me and my office concerning a prosecution of Augusto Pinochet in this jurisdiction. Replies have been limited to factual explanations of the decision making process and the state of any application for Law Officer consent to a prosecution.

Councillor Frank MacGrath

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost to the public purse of the conduct and arrangement of proceedings in the case of Councillor Frank MacGrath of Preston. [66332]

The Attorney-General [holding answer 20 January 1999]: Councillor Frank MacGrath was the subject of three separate sets of criminal proceedings which arose out of an investigation by the Lancashire Constabulary known as Operation Angel involving allegations of fraud and corruption. Expenditure identified by the CPS as attributable to this series of cases comprises Counsel's fees £250,134 and payments in relation to witness expenses of £2,496. However, the complexity and inter-relationship of these cases make it impossible to attribute specific expenditure to Councillor MacGrath. The CPS staff working on the case did so as part of their ordinary department duties and their salary and associated cost cannot be separately apportioned.

I understand from the Lord Chancellor's Department that information about the passage of the case through the magistrates court is held only in manual records and therefore is not readily available. It could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I am further informed by the Lord Chancellor's Department that, according to information readily available, Frank MacGrath was granted legal aid in the Crown Court and the total amount paid to defence lawyers was £120,936.46. In addition, there were payments amounting to £47,153.88 from Central funds. Just over 71 hours were spent in Crown Court hearings and this cost an estimated £21,200.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Aspartame

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what research his Department has commissioned into the possible (a) health dangers and (b) side-effects of Aspartame; [66678]

(2) what assessment he has made of the health risks posed by Aspartame. [66677]

Ms Jowell: The Department has not commissioned any research in this area. However, the Department regularly reviews new information on food chemical safety and, when appropriate, seeks advice from its expert advisory committees. In 1992 the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) completed a thorough review of the toxicity of aspartame and reaffirmed its earlier advice that aspartame was safe to use. The COT also considered reports linking aspartame with a variety of adverse effects such as headache, seizures and behavioural difficulties in children. There was insufficient evidence to support such claims. Aspartame has also been given safety clearance by the European Commission's Scientific Committee for Food. A study published in 1996 which suggested a link between aspartame and brain cancer was rejected by the Committee on Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the expected cost of (a) setting up and (b) annually operating the Food Standards Agency; and if he will make a statement. [67713]

Mr. Rooker: Setting up the FSA is expected to involve additional one-off costs of around £12 million per annum over three years and additional ongoing costs of about £29 million per annum, taking account of the collection costs associated with the proposed levy. In addition, current food safety and standards functions, and their associated expenditure, will transfer to the Food Standards Agency from MAFF, DH, and the devolved administrations.

Slaughterhouse Closures

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many slaughterhouse premises have closed in the last 12 months; and what effect this has had on reducing journey times of livestock to slaughter within the UK. [67872]

Mr. Rooker: During 1998, 28 slaughterhouse licences (red meat and poultry meat) were revoked because they had ceased operating. The effect on journey times will vary according to the location of the farm of origin and the nearest slaughterhouse. Whilst we would prefer animals to be slaughtered close to the farm, this may not occur for a variety of reasons. Legislation lays down clear rules to protect the welfare of animals during transport, and there is no reason why animals should not be transported safely and humanely.

Enrofloxacin

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received in support of a ban on the use of enrofloxacin in animals. [67741]

Mr. Rooker: None. However, the House of Lords Science and Technology Committee, in its report of 17 March 1998 "Resistance to Antibiotics and other Antimicrobial Agents", recommended extreme economy of use of fluoroquinolones in veterinary practice (recommendation 11.21). The report also recommended the development of a Code of Practice on when such compounds should be prescribed. The Government accept this recommendation and their response to the report is available in the Library of the House.

Genetically Engineered Crops

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the (a) nutritional need for and (b) alternatives to the production of genetically engineered crops in the United Kingdom. [67660]

Mr. Rooker: Genetically modified crops will not be grown until they have passed all the relevant statutory procedures. Once they have done so, it will be for the market to determine whether they provide nutritional or other benefits over alternative varieties.

Research Projects

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the capability of the length of time for which (a) agricultural, (b) agroforestry and (c) horticultural research projects are funded by his Department with the biological systems which they are designed to assess; and if he will assess the benefits of more long term research funding in respect of the longer rotations in organic systems. [67661]

Mr. Rooker: Research is funded for an appropriate length of time bearing in mind the particular biological and agricultural systems being investigated. However, in many cases it is not appropriate to let an individual contract which covers the whole period of the research. Instead, the research is funded by a number of consecutive contracts. This assists the management of the research and allows changes of priorities and redirection during the course of the work. This holds for all of the Ministry's agricultural research including that on organic systems.

Sustainable Agriculture

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those (a) persons and (b) organisations who submitted responses to his Department's consultation on indicators for sustainable agriculture; and if he will make a statement. [67662]

Mr. Rooker: A list of the individuals and organisations who responded to my Department's consultation on a set of indicators for sustainable agriculture follows. Copies of the responses are available in the MAAF Main Library. These indicators are intended to complement the wider set of indicators on sustainable development for the UK which is being developed by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The aim is to publish the agriculture indicators as a pilot set later this year, and to develop them further over the next three to five years.

Respondents to the MAFF consultation on the development of a set of indicators for sustainable agriculture (June-September 1998)

Orchards

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to increase the acreage of orchards in England. [68050]

Mr. Rooker: Decisions on the area to be cultivated are taken by growers in response to the needs of the market.

Meat Inspection

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by what date the UK will be in full compliance with EU rules on meat inspection. [68128]

Mr. Rooker: Full compliance with EU rules on veterinary supervision in licensed meat plants in Great Britain is not possible in the short term, essentially because of a shortage of veterinarians willing to undertake meat hygiene work in the UK. It is not known how long it will take to achieve full compliance, as this will depend on the Meat Hygiene Service's ability to secure the services of additional Official Veterinary Surgeons, and on future changes in the size and structure of the meat industry. Therefore, it may be some years before the levels and frequency of veterinary supervision required by the EU meat hygiene Directives are achieved in all GB licensed meat plants.

Abattoirs

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many abattoirs continue to operate under derogation for low throughput. [68130]

Mr. Rooker: At 1 January 1999, there were 210 permanently derogated (low throughput) slaughterhouses in England licensed to produce meat for sale for human consumption. Of these, 162 were red meat slaughterhouses and 48 were poultry slaughterhouses.

Pork Imports

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce compulsory labelling for imported pork products which do not meet UK welfare, veterinary and feed standards. [68143]

Mr. Rooker: None; but I welcome the initiatives taken by many retailers to introduce voluntary labelling schemes giving consumers more information about rearing standards. My right hon. Friend the Minister has received assurances from the major supermarkets that all their own label fresh pork, bacon, ham, sausages and pork pies will come from stall and tether and meat and bone meal free production systems; also, they will not label as British processed products produced from imported fresh port.

I am sure the launch earlier this month by the Meat and Livestock Commission of the quality pigmark scheme will help consumers to identify pigmeat products in the shops which have been produced to British standards.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the annual tonnage of pork meat products entering the UK; and what estimate he has of the percentage of this imported meat which is produced from animals that would not meet UK (a) welfare, (b) veterinary and (c) feed regulation standards. [68142]

Mr. Rooker: In the five years 1994–98, the UK imported around 160,000 tonnes of pork on average every year from other EU member states (imports from third countries are minimal). All would have met EU welfare, veterinary and feed requirements. Since March 1996, the UK has not permitted mammalian meat and bone meal to be fed to farm animals, a ban which is not in place in all member states. Also, since 1 January 1999, the UK has had a ban on housing pigs in close confinement stall and tether systems; although it is impossible to say what proportion of imported pork has not met these production standards since their introduction, it is likely to be very small.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statutory provisions prevent the introduction of a ban on the import of pork products where the pork does not meet UK welfare, veterinary and feed regulation standards. [68161]

Mr. Rooker: Single Market Legislation and European Court of Justice Rulings protect the free circulation of goods in the EU. In areas where there is a common market, such as pigmeat, if products conform to EU requirements, individual member states cannot introduce a unilateral ban. In respect of third country trade, the World Trade Organisation Agreement on the Application of Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures gives WTO members the right to take measures necessary for the protection of human, animal or plant life or health, provided that these are based on scientific principles and are not maintained without sufficient scientific evidence.

Welsh and English Lamb

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to assist Welsh and English lamb producers in meeting the demand for bulk food supplies. [68596]

Mr. Rooker: If there is a demand for bulk supplies of lamb, then it is surely a matter for the industry to find a means of supplying that demand.

DEFENCE

Air Squadrons

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the location of the University of London and Cambridge University Air Squadrons. [69144]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The basing of Cambridge University Air Squadron and the collocated No. 5 Air Cadet Air Experience Flight, at Cambridge Airport, has been the subject of review to determine whether their operations could be undertaken more effectively at another location. At the same time it has been necessary to identify a new location for the University of London Air Squadron and part of the No. 6 Air Cadet Air Experience Flight task, due to increased helicopter operations at RAF Benson, their current location.

RAF Wyton has been identified as the most cost-effective and operationally suitable location for the two Squadrons and the Air Experience Flights. On current plans the transfer of these units will commence in September 1999.

Infra-red Technology

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investment his Department has made in infra-red technology for use in (a) the defence industry and (b) elsewhere in each of the last 10 years. [66661]

Mr. Spellar: Infra-red technology has a wide spectrum of defence applications, and information on the totality of expenditure specifically involving this technology is not available.

Service Personnel (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the aggregate total of British service personnel, including members of the Ulster Defence Regiment and RIR, who have served at least one tour of duty or have been employed for six months or more in Northern Ireland since August 1969; and how many service personnel have (a) lost their lives and (b) been injured in connection with their military duties and responsibilities in Northern Ireland. [67427]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Since August 1969, the total number of soldiers who have served or are currently serving in Northern Ireland for six months or more is 152,769. The total number of officers who have served or are currently serving in Northern Ireland is 25,098. The latter figure contains tour lengths of three to four months as well as those of six months or more.

The number of service personnel who have lost their lives since August 1969 in connection with their military duties and responsibilities in Northern Ireland is detailed in the table.

	Number
Army[1]	651
RN[2]	11
RAF[2]	4

The number of British service personnel injured in Northern Ireland since August 1969 is detailed in the table.

	Number
Army[3]	6,076
RN[4]	163
RAF[4]	143

[1] Figures are from August 1969 to 31 December 1998 and relate to terrorist activity.

[2] Figures are from 1 January 1974 to 31 December 1998 and include injuries/deaths from all causes.

[3] Figures are from August 1969 to 31 December 1998 and relate primarily to injuries which were incurred whilst on duty; however, the manner in which data have historically been compiled means some injuries incurred whilst off duty may also be included.

[4] Figures are from 1 January 1976 to 31 December 1998 and relate primarily to injuries which were incurred whilst on duty; however, the manner in which data have historically been compiled means some injuries incurred whilst off duty may also be included.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the number of civilian casualties in Iraq caused by military action since the conclusion of Operation Desert Fox. [68352]

Mr. George Robertson: We believe that the only military action since the conclusion of Operation Desert Fox which could have caused civilian casualties was an incident on 25 January. Coalition aircraft patrolling the Iraqi Southern No-Fly-Zone in accordance with their humanitarian mission encountered four Iraqi MIGs who were attempting to draw them into a pre-arranged Surface to Air Missile (SAM) trap and were fired at by Iraqi anti-aircraft artillery. US aircraft responded by attacking a SAM site and related air defence and communications systems north of Basra. The US has confirmed that a rocket propelled bomb went astray and landed in a residential district several kilometres from its target. It could have caused civilian casualties, but the US is still investigating and cannot confirm. I deeply regret any civilian casualties but must stress that the US acted in self-defence responding to a serious and immediate threat to the safety of coalition aircraft.

Aer Lingus Crash

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the documentation held by his Department on the crash of the Aer Lingus Viscount in the Irish sea on 24 March 1968, and the subsequent search and rescue operation; and if he will make this material available to the Irish Government. [67434]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Copies of the UK report on the initial surface search and rescue operation for the Aer Lingus Viscount 712, and on the subsequent sea bed search and salvage operation undertaken at the request of the Irish Government, were placed in the Library of the House and given to the Irish Government in September 1998.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the naval vessels engaged in search operations for the wreckage of the Aer Lingus Viscount in the Irish sea from 24 March 1968 until the search was abandoned and in each case the dates on which searches took place; how many bodies were (a) recovered and (b) identified; where the wreckage was taken to be examined; and where the wreckage is currently stored. [67437]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Details of British naval involvement in the search operation for the Aer Lingus wreckage are contained in the report which my department placed in the Library of the House in September last year. Although the report contains information on the recovery of bodies and wreckage, which were taken to Rosslare for examination by the Irish Authorities, it does not provide the identities of the dead. This, and the current condition and location of the wreckage, is a matter for the Irish Government.

HMS Penelope

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the recorded version or notes of the RAF briefing given to officers of HMS Penelope on 26 March 1968; and if he will make this material available to the Irish Government. [67436]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have no record of such a briefing having taken place. HMS Penelope played no part in the search operation after 25 March.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PDVN and Intranet

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee how many hon. Members currently have access to (a) the PDVN and (b) the Parliamentary Intranet. [68434]

Mr. Allan: There are currently 227 Members registered to access the PDVN in their own name. However, many Members have connected their offices by requesting access for one or more staff members but not for themselves. Analysis of all login IDs issued in the names of Members shows that 517 Members' offices currently have access to the PDVN.

Access to the Parliamentary Intranet is through the PDVN and is unrestricted, so the numbers are the same. All PDVN users have access to the Intranet.

Website Addresses

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee if he will include hon. Members' website addresses in the Palace of Westminster telephone directory. [68435]

Mr. Allan: When the production of the existing telephone directory is changed to a print out from the Serjeant at Arms/Telecomms database at the end of this year's summer adjournment, there will be an opportunity to include details of Members' web sites and e-mail addresses in the directory provided Members indicate their wish for it to be done.

TREASURY

Financial Services and Markets Bill

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future recognition requirements for recognised investment exchanges and clearing houses under the Financial Services and Markets Bill. [69148]

Ms Hewitt: The new Financial Services and Markets Bill carries forward the main features of the existing recognition and exemption regime for investment exchanges and clearing houses, which has worked well. In order to become recognised, such bodies must fulfil certain regulatory criteria. These are currently contained in the Financial Services Act 1986 and the Companies Act 1989. Under the new Bill the requirements will be set out in secondary legislation. Putting the recognition requirements in secondary legislation will make it easier to respond to any market developments in this area.

The Treasury has today issued a consultation document on the new draft recognition requirements. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House. The deadline for comments is 30 April. We are consulting on these regulations well in advance so that we have the longest possible time to get them right.

European Budget

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what categories of expenditure are legalised by Article 138a of the Treaty of the European Community; and if he will state what appropriation and what expenditure in the Budget of the Community for the year 1999 are under that Article. [67929]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

Volume 2, Section 1 of the budget (Staffing, revenue and expenditure of the European Parliament) lists budget lines which cite Article 138a as a justification for spending. The lines are:

		1999 Appropriations
3705	Contribution to secretarial expenses and administrative expenditure of the political groups and expenses of the non-attached Members.	£9 million (12.7 Meuro)
3706	Other Political activities	£5 million (7.1 Meuro)
3708	Information work	£3.9 million (5.25 Meuro)

This expenditure is intended to cover activities other than those financed from budget lines 3705 and 3708, as well as the political activities of the non-attached Members.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Radio Licences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if a holder can be granted more than one concurrent radio licence; and if he will make a statement. [67684]

Janet Anderson: Under the terms of the Broadcasting Acts 1990 and 1996 no one person may hold more than one national analogue licence, national digital multiplex licence or national digital sound programme service licence. A person may hold one FM and one AM licence for areas which share a potential audience overlap of over 50 per cent. and may apply to hold one further licence for the same area on either waveband subject to a public interest test operated by the Radio Authority.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what questions are asked of applicants for a radio licence; and if he will make a statement; [67681]

(2) what inquiries are made as to the background of people who apply for licences to run independent radio stations. [67680]

Janet Anderson: The Radio Authority is responsible for determining the process of the award of independent radio licences according to the provisions of the Broadcasting Acts 1990 and 1996. The Authority decides the questions asked of licence applicants. I understand that the Authority's standard application form requests details of the background of licence applicants, and details of others whose involvement in the preparation of a licence application has been substantial. The Radio Authority published on 29 January details of its licensing award procedures for commercial radio.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68415]

Mr. Chris Smith: There is a longstanding convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

Radio Authority

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he intends to reappoint the current Chairman of the Radio Authority; and if he will make a statement; [68807]

(2) if he will make it his policy to require the Radio Authority to publish its minutes of proceedings; [68809]

(3) what assessment he has made of the accountability procedures (a) within the Radio Authority and (b) between the Radio Authority and his Department. [68808]

Janet Anderson: The current appointment of the Radio Authority Chairman expires on 31 December 1999. An announcement will be made in due course on the Chairmanship from 1 January 2000.

The Radio Authority is a statutory public corporation independent of Government and is responsible for interpreting its statutory duties under the Broadcasting Acts 1990 and 1996. Radio Authority members are bound by the Authority's detailed code of best practice, a copy of which is in the Libraries of the House. My Department has no supervisory role in its day-to-day activities and has no locus to direct the Authority to make public details of its proceedings. However, I welcome the recent publication by the Authority of details of its licensing award procedures for commercial radio.

Analogue and Digital Television

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will provide financial support to households that currently receive analogue terrestrial television, but which cannot receive digital terrestrial television to enable them to receive the digital television service (a) via digital satellite television and (b) by other means; [68588]

(2) when the switch-off date will be announced for analogue transmissions; [68593]

(3) if he will ensure that the proceeds from auctions of analogue spectrum are used to assist consumers and communities in the United Kingdom to receive the same quality of digital television service; [68592]

(4) what estimate he has made of the number of households in the UK which will not be directly served by digital terrestrial television; [68589]

(5) when he will respond to the consultations received following the publication of "Television: the Digital Future". [68587]

Janet Anderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave on 10 November 1998, Official Report, columns 122–23. We are still considering the wide variety of opinions expressed in the responses to the consultation paper: "Television the Digital Future" and will make an announcement in due course.

Pop Music Industry

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans his Department has to provide support to the pop music industry. [68863]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department, in consultation with other Departments, and with advice from the Music Industry Forum, plans to continue working closely with the music industry to identify areas where Government might be able to help it. The Forum has considered such issues as copyright, the New Deal, training, and provision of venues for live music. My aim is to help create the conditions in which this highly successful business can flourish further.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Racially Motivated Offences

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of racially motivated offences there were in the last year for which figures are available. [68220]

Mr. Boateng: Individual forces submit their racial incidents figures to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary at the end of each year. These are incidents recorded under the Association of Chief Police Officers' definition of a racial incident:

"Any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation; or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person".

Incidents included here are wider than the normal definition of a crime in the crime statistics and include low level harassment.

The latest available figure for the number of racial incidents recorded by the police in England and Wales is 13,878 in 1997/98. A breakdown of the number of incidents recorded by the police by each police area in 1997/98 is given in the Home Office publication "Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System" 1998, a copy of which is available in the Library.

The Home Office has requested all forces to provide separate recorded crime statistics for the racially aggravated offences of wounding, harassment, common assault and criminal damage (in line with the new offences contained in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998) from April 1999, and first figures will be published in January 2000.

Parole

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to give new directions to the Parole Board following the implementation of section 103 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [69273]

Mr. Straw: Section 103 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 was commenced on 1 January 1999. As a result, all short-term prisoners whose original offences were committed on or after that date and who are subsequently released on licence will be subject to recall by the Parole Board in the same way as those released from long-term sentences.

I have, therefore, prepared new Directions for the Board as to the matter to be taken into account in dealing with such recalls. These Directions are being made under the powers given to me by section 32(6) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 and are based very closely on the existing Directions in respect of long-term prisoners.

The new Directions also make it clear that there should be a clear presumption in favour of recall in cases where a licensee is charged with an offence committed whilst subject to Home Detention Curfew (HDC). This is because the commission of an offence by a prisoner subject to HDC is clearly a breach of the trust placed in that individual.

I have written to Usha Prashar, Chairman of the Parole Board, informing her of the new Directions. Copies of the new Directions have been placed in the Library.

Deportation Orders

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently in custody awaiting deportation. [68987]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Regrettably, reliable information on the numbers of persons in custody, or otherwise detained, who are the subject of deportation action is available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were removed from the United Kingdom as a result of the enforcement of a deportation order in each year since 1992; [68988]

(2) how many people were removed or departed voluntarily in each year since 1992, following the initiation of deportation action against them but without a deportation order being made. [68984]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available annual information is given in the table.

Removals and voluntary departures following deportation action, 1992 to 1997

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Deportation orders enforced	880	850	670	700	900	800
Other removals and voluntary Departures[1]	1,710	1,430	1,250	1,200	1,110	1,250

[1] Removals and voluntary departures following the initiation of deportation action but without a deportation order having been made. Figures are rounded.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders were made in each of the first five months of 1997. [68986]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is given in the table.

Deportation orders made, 1 January to 31 May 1997

	Number of deportation orders made
January	110
February	90
March	90
April	130
May	60

Note:
Figures are rounded

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders were made in each year from 1992 to 1996; and how many have not yet been executed. [68985]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table. It should be noted that some deportation orders may not have been executable for legal reasons.

Deportation orders made and numbers of those not executed [1], 1992 to 1996

Year	Number of deportation orders made	Of which: number not executed [1]
1992	890	[2]—
1993	1,240	[2]—
1994	1,540	570
1995	1,690	730
1996	1,880	980

[1] Relates to the number of deportation orders made in the year concerned which had not been executed by January 1999. The figures exclude deportation orders enforced and cases where deportation is no longer appropriate.
[2] Data not available
Note:
Figures are rounded

Badgers

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been for offences in relation to badgers in each of the last three years. [68728]

Mr. George Howarth: Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database is given in the table.

Number of defendants prosecuted for offences under the Protection of Badgers Act 1992, England and Wales, 1995–1997

Offence	1995	1996	1997
Offences of cruelty to badgers and special protection for badgers and their setts (excluding section 13 of Act)	41	31	44
Failing to give up a dog for destruction or having custody of a dog while disqualified (section 13 of Act)	7	6	7

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have resigned from the Metropolitan Police in each of the last 10 years. [68496]

Mr. Boateng: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the numbers of officers who resigned from the Metropolitan Police in each of the last ten years, were:

Year	Number
1989	605
1990	471
1991	246
1992	132
1993	139
1994	146
1995	171
1996	183
1997	223
1998	327

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average age of police officers in the Metropolitan Police; and what has been the average age in each of the last 10 years. [68498]

Mr. Boateng: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the average age of police officers in the Metropolitan Police is 37 years and 3 months. The average age of Metropolitan Police officers in each year since 1993 was:

Year	Average age
1993	35 years 2 months
1994	35 years 7 months
1995	35 years 5 months
1996	36 years 5 months
1997	36 years 2 months
1998	38 years 4 months

Information for previous years is not readily available.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers currently serving in the Metropolitan Police have more than (a) 25 years' service and (b) 30 years' service. [68492]

Mr. Boateng: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that there are 3,359 officers currently serving in the Metropolitan Police who have more than 25 years' service and that 1,074 officers have more than 30 years' service.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications for early retirement on health grounds made by police officers in the Metropolitan Police were (a) approved and (b) refused in each of the last 10 years; [68493]

(2) how many police officers retired on health grounds from the Metropolitan Police in each of the last 10 years. [68495]

Mr. Boateng: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the Metropolitan Police do not keep aggregated records of refusals of applications to retire on the grounds of ill health. Once approval is given to retire on medical grounds, the officer must retire within six weeks. The number of applications by officers to retire on medical grounds which have been approved in each of the past ten years were:

Year	Number
1989	300
1990	224
1991	275
1992	312
1993	342
1994	380
1995	433
1996	431
1997	412
1998	549

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers currently serving in the Metropolitan Police have ill-health retirement applications outstanding; and how many such officers are (a) on full pay, (b) on half pay and (c) on no pay. [68494]

Mr. Boateng: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that, at the end of November 1998, applications from 55 officers to retire on the grounds of ill health were outstanding. Of these officers, 44 were on full pay, seven on half-pay and four off pay.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers (a) applied for transfer and (b) were transferred from the Metropolitan Police in each of the last 10 years. [68497]

Mr. Boateng: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that records for officers applying for transfers are not kept centrally. The numbers of officers who transferred to other forces over the last ten years were:

Year	Number
1989	249
1990	239
1991	198
1992	233
1993	179
1994	190
1995	180
1996	255
1997	285
1998	236

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of service of police officers currently serving in the Metropolitan Police; and what was the average length of service in each of the last 10 years. [68499]

Mr. Boateng: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the average length of service of police officers currently serving in the Metropolitan Police is 14 years and 4 months, and that the average length of service in each year from 1991 was:

Year	Average length of service
1991	12 years 8 months
1992	12 years
1993	12 years 6 months
1994	12 years 10 months
1995	13 years 6 months
1996	13 years 8 months
1997	13 years 9 months
1998	13 years 8 months

Information as to earlier years is not readily available.

Prisoners (Former Armed Forces Personnel)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the proportion of the prison population who are former members of HM Armed Forces. [67430]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is not available. No information regarding an individual's professional status, prior to reception into a Prison Service establishment, is recorded centrally.

Young Offenders

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what (a) proportion and (b) number of young offenders were (i) white, (ii) black, (iii) Asian and (iv) other in each of the last five years; [68095]

(2) what estimate he has made of the proportion of persistent young offenders who are (a) white, (b) black, (c) Asian and (d) other in the last year for which figures are available. [68093]

Mr. Straw: Because ethnicity is not currently recorded at the point of conviction, there are no national data on the ethnicity of young offenders, or, it follows, of persistent young offenders.

Statistics on the ethnicity of the sentenced prison population are shown in the table. Additional research carried out in 1993 shows by ethnic origin the proportion of young persons aged 17–25 who reported they had committed offences. (Young People and Crime, Home Office Research Study No.145, 1995).

The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales, which was established on 30 September 1998 under section 41 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, has the function of monitoring the operation of the youth justice system. The Board is currently considering its data collection requirements in carrying out this function. These are likely to include information about the characteristics of young offenders and the effectiveness of intervention work with them in preventing reoffending. This information will be collected from youth offending teams, established under section 39 of the 1998 Act, which the Government expect to implement nationally in April 2000.

[1] 1998 data at end September 1998

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the elements of the Government's strategy for preventing youth crime which have been specifically targeted at ethnic minorities, [68092]

Mr. Straw: The Government set out their strategy for preventing youth crime in the White Paper "No More Excuses—a New Approach To Tackling Youth Crime in England and Wales". The clear aim of that strategy is to prevent offending and re-offending by juveniles. This is now the statutory principal aim of the youth justice system, as set out in section 37 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998.

The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 provides a range of new measures designed to be effective in preventing youth crime, irrespective of the ethnic background of those who seek to break the law. The Government are currently piloting new measures in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, including the final warning scheme, new community-based court disposals, and youth offending teams, with national implementation planned for around April 2000. To date, the Government have also introduced a range of measures to speed up the youth justice system, and have established the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales which will provide advice on the operation and performance of the youth justice system.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many assaults have been committed in each of the past five years by (a) white individuals against black individuals and vice versa, (b) white individuals against Asian individuals and vice versa and (c) Asian individuals against black individuals and vice versa; [68094]

(2) what categories of recorded crime were most frequently committed by each of the following ethnic groups (a) white, (b) black, (c) Asian and (d) others, in each of the last five years; [68065]

(3) how many street robberies were carried out (a) in total and (b) by each ethnic group in each of the last five years; [68063]

(4) for each of the past five years, how many and what proportion of crimes were committed by offenders who were (a) white, (b) black, (c) Asian and (d) other. [68096]

Mr. Straw: Data on ethnicity are currently collected by the police, prison and probation services, but not as yet by the courts. The only data on crimes committed by ethnic group would come from court convictions. It follows, therefore, that there are at present no national data on the ethnicity of offenders as a whole.

The Home Office regularly summarises the available information on ethnicity and the criminal justice system in statistical reports published under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. The latest of these was published on 8 December 1998 and is available in the Library and on the Internet at: http:www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/index.htm

It is likely that a number of the crime and disorder audits carried out by local authorities under the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 may in appropriate cases include local data of the kind which the hon. Member seeks. One such is that recently published by the London Borough of Lambeth and the relevant Divisions to the Metropolitan Police Service. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the benefits of introducing a category of racially motivated crime in crime statistics. [68064]

Mr. Straw: All police forces collect information on racial incidents, based on the Association of Chief Police Officers definition of

> "Any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation; or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person".

Incidents included here are wider than the normal definition of a crime in the crime statistics and include general threatening behaviour. These statistics are regularly published under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

The Home Office, police and Crown Prosecution Service monitor the provisions covering racially aggravated offences established by sections 28–32 and 82 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. These findings will first be published under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 in January 2000.

Given the widespread concern about racially motivated crimes, and the recent approval of Parliament for specific racially aggravated offences in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 it is essential that such data should be collected. The benefits are clear.

Millennium Compliance (Hampshire)

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of progress on millennium compliance for the emergency services in Hampshire. [68131]

Mr. Straw: Fire and police services provide quarterly reports to Cabinet Office about progress towards Year 2000 compliance. These reports are published in summary in the Library and in detail on the Internet. The NHS Executive also publishes details of ambulance service quarterly progress reports on the Internet.

My Department monitors the progress reports from fire and police services. It is working with Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Fire Services, and Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary and the Association of Chief Police Officers respectively to encourage fire brigades and police forces to take the necessary action. I understand that the NHS Executive works with ambulance trusts to ensure that their Year 2000 preparations are on course.

The latest reports from the emergency services in Hampshire give the following dates for Year 2000 compliance:

Constabulary: March 1999

Fire service: June 1999

Ambulance service: Now compliant.

A programme of independent assessment of the Year 2000 preparations being made by key elements of the national infrastructure is taking place under the auspices of the National Infrastructure Forum. This is facilitated by Action 2000 and the Cabinet Office. The outcome of the assessment of the emergency services should be published in the Summer.

Electro-shock Batons

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the company that was responsible for handling, storing and distributing the electro-shock batons that were trans-shipped from the United States to Saudi Arabia via the United Kingdom under the 1993 trans-shipment licence granted by the Department of Trade and Industry had been issued with the relevant licences under section 5 of the Firearms Act 1968; [68190]

(2) if the companies that were granted export licences by the Department of Trade and Industry for the export of electro-shock batons from the United Kingdom between 1989 and 1994 had been granted the relevant licence under section 5 of the Firearms Act to (a) handle, (b) store, (c) distribute and (d) manufacture such weapons; [68191]

(3) what actions his Department has taken against (a) companies and (b) individuals that were not in possession of the relevant firearms licences for the handling, storage, distribution or manufacture of electro-shock batons. [68240]

Mr. Boateng: Two of the four companies in question had authority to deal in weapons prohibited by section 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968, which would include electro-shock weapons as well as other types of weapons capable of discharging a noxious liquid, gas or other things. The other two companies, one of which was the company granted the trans-shipment licence, did not have such authority.

The investigation of possible offences under the Firearms Acts is a matter for the police, who will consider whether there are grounds to bring criminal charges. The decision as to whether or not to prosecute in an individual case rests with the Crown Prosecution Service. The Home Office have no powers to intervene. However, information about the two companies that did not have authority to deal in prohibited weapons was forwarded by the Home Office to the relevant police forces for their consideration. I understand that, in both cases, the police have decided to take no further action.

Police Officers (Criminal Proceedings)

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the guidance in Home Office Circular 4/1998, relating to the payment of money to officers, either former or serving, involved in criminal proceedings, applies (a) to officers who have retired on health grounds with outstanding disciplinary charges against them and (b) to officers against whom outstanding disciplinary charges have been dropped because of a retirement on health grounds of another officer. [68225]

Mr. Boateng: There is no express statutory provision enabling police authorities to provide financial assistance to officers involved in criminal proceedings. The circular makes it clear that it is entirely for individual police authorities to decide in the particular circumstances of a case and, on the basis of legal advice, whether to make financial assistance available to officers, either former or serving, in criminal proceedings. It does not seek to offer guidance on the specific circumstances of a case.

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review Home Office Circular 4/1998 relating to the payment of money to officers, either former or serving, involved in criminal proceedings in respect of the payment of the defence costs of officers from the police budget. [68845]

Mr. Boateng: Home Office Circular 4/1998 was issued after full consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Police Superintendents Association, the Police Federation and the Association of Police Authorities. We have no plans at present to review it.

South Yorkshire Police Authority

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average annual cost in the South Yorkshire Police Authority area of keeping a police constable on the beat. [68224]

Mr. Boateng: I understand from the South Yorkshire Police Authority that the full average annual cost of a beat constable is around £41,300. This includes pay, pensions, and running costs.

Ethnic Minorities (Crime)

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has (a) undertaken and (b) commissioned in the past year into crime among ethnic minorities; and when the results of any such research will be made available to the public. [68111]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 28 January 1999]: Since 1 January 1998, the Home Office has undertaken or commissioned a number of pieces of research which have included consideration of issues of ethnicity in the criminal justice system, patterns of offending between different ethnic groups, patterns of ethnic minority victimisation, and the operation of the criminal justice system in relation to ethnic minorities as suspects, offenders and victims of crime.

All commissioned research is published as a matter of course. I have strengthened the procedures for securing the integrity of regular statistical services by ensuring that they are published by the Director of the Research and Statistical Directorate and not Ministers, and on dates set well in advance.

I receive regular advice from my officials in the form of submissions and briefing papers about the research and statistical data available in the Department.

The current list, with dates of publication in brackets, is as follows:

Tackling Street Robbery: a Comparative Evaluation of Operation Eagle Eye
Stockdale J. E. and Gresham P. J.
PRG Crime Detection and Prevention Series 1998
(March 1998)

Ethnicity and Victimisation: findings from the 1996 British Crime Survey which is expected to provide information on many aspects of young people's lifestyles including fear of crime, victimisation and self-reported offending.

Burials

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the provisions of the Local Authorities Cemeteries Order 1977 relating to the sale of exclusive right of burial to individual families. [68560]

Mr. George Howarth: No. Burial authorities have a wide discretion under the 1977 Order as to the length of time for which they may grant an exclusive right of burial, up to a maximum of 100 years. We understand that these arrangements generally work satisfactorily.

Struck-out Court Cases

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines exist for striking out court cases on the basis that they are an abuse of process; and if he will make a statement. [68242]

Mr. Hoon: I have been asked to reply.

Any application to stay proceedings on the grounds that they are an abuse of process is for the court to determine in accordance with the principles established in case law.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration has been given to the financial cost to local authorities of provision for the educational needs of school-age children of asylum seekers in the assessment of any special grant settlement. [67728]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

Through the Local Government Finance Settlement, Local Education Authorities are funded to provide education for school aged children of asylum seekers on school roll, in the same way as they are for other children on school roll. This arrangement will not be affected by the current review of the asylum seeking process, or any changes to the funding of other costs incurred by Local Authorities in meeting the needs of asylum seekers.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Waiting Lists

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were on the waiting list in each health and social services board for fracture operations in (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997 and (d) at the latest available date. [67859]

Mr. McFall: Patients requiring fracture operations are treated on an emergency basis and therefore are not, routinely, placed on waiting lists for surgery. From time to time a small number of patients may have to wait for treatment. On 29 January, 31 patients were awaiting fracture operations, and 19 operations were scheduled for that day.

RUC Stations (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the Royal Ulster Constabulary stations to which she has paid a visit since 1 May 1997, indicating the date and the time spent at each such police station. [67658]

Marjorie Mowlam: The location, date and duration of each such visit are shown in the table.

It should be noted that the durations above have been taken from the programme schedules arranged prior to each visit, as opposed to exact times on the day (which are not readily available). Visits of this kind regularly exceed the arranged times.

Prisoners (Early Release)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons given early release from prison under the Belfast agreement have been charged with an offence since their release. [68867]

Mr. Ingram: None.

WALES

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67850]

Mr. Michael: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296. In considering the changes in IT needed in preparation for the arrival of the National Assembly for Wales, I have asked my officials to make provisions for making documents and information accessible to people for whom the standard printed form is not appropriate. This will include floppy disk versions which are in a format which facilitates access for the visually impaired. Guidance on how to reach the largest possible target audience when producing documents for use by people outside the Department, including White and Green Papers, has been issued to staff at the Welsh Office. The Guidance will also be incorporated into a revised Equal Opportunities Handbook.

Tourism

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policies for the tourism industry in North East Wales. [68361]

Mr. Hain: The development of regional policies is an operational matter for the Wales Tourist Board within the Wales Tourism Strategy published in 1994 and endorsed by Ministers.

It is currently working with the Regional Tourism Company, local authorities and local businesses to implement a number of initiatives including growth in the short break/additional holiday market and development of business travel markets. North East Wales is particularly well placed to benefit from these matters.

I have asked the Board's Chief Executive to provide my hon. Friend with more details. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Rural Transport

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by how much he has increased spending on rural transport in real terms between 1998–99 and 1999–2000. [68356]

Mr. Hain: The bus subsidy grant scheme will make £5 million available to local authorities in 1999–2000, of which £3 million must be spent on rural bus services and the remaining £2 million may be spent on either rural or urban services. In 1998–99 £2.25 million was made available exclusively for rural services. This means that direct support for rural bus services in 1999–2000 will increase by at least 30 per cent. in real terms, and probably significantly more than that.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Health Service Salaries

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of salaries for (a) nurses and (b) general practitioners in Wales in the last year for which figures are available. [68365]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: (a) In 1997–98 the total cost of salaries for nursing, midwifery, health visiting was £448.846 million.

(b) General practitioners are independent contractors to the NHS and information on their salaries is not collected centrally.

Numeracy and Literacy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the scale of improvements in numeracy and literacy in schools in Wales in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [68355]

Mr. Hain: As the following table illustrates there has been an underlying improvement in the standards achieved in English, Welsh and mathematics. In all cases we are well on course to achieve the targets we have set for 2000 and 2002. Without exception we have already started making inroads into the year 2000 targets.

Percentage of pupils achieving the expected level [1]

	Key Stage 1 (7-year-olds)	Key Stage 2 (11-year-olds)	Key Stage 3 (14-year-olds)
English
1996	78	56	56
1997	80	64	59
1998	80	64	62
Welsh
1996	83	54	69
1997	85	56	69
1998	86	65	71
Mathematics
1996	82	56	55
1997	83	64	59
1998	84	61	60

[1] Level 2 for 7-year-olds; level 4 for 11-year-olds; and level 5 for 14-year-olds

Targets: By 2000 between 60 and 70 per cent. of 11 and 14-year-olds should achieve the level expected for their age. By 2002 the target is between 70 and 80 per cent. achieving the expected levels.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current acreage of genetically modified crops under cultivation in Wales. [68357]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There are no genetically modified crops under commercial cultivation in Wales nor in the rest of the UK.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Economic Prospects (North-East Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he is implementing to improve economic prospects in North-east Wales. [68354]

Mr. Hain: "Pathway to Prosperity—An Economic Agenda for Wales" was published last July. It contained a wide range of measures for modernising and raising the competitiveness of the Welsh economy including North East Wales. These include:

An Entrepreneurship Action Plan

Know How Wales

Millennium Bug Support

Strengthening Business Connect.

Numerous measures have been announced since that time, including:

A Business and Environment Challenge Scheme

Connect for a Better Business.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

School Pupils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children attend (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in each of the county authorities in Wales. [68358]

Mr. Hain: The information is as follows:

Full and part time pupils in LEA maintained and grant-maintained schools by unitary authority: numbers at January 1998

Unitary authority	Primary	Secondary
Blaenau Gwent	7,923	4,538

Housing Policy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy for housing in Wales. [68600]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Government's objectives for housing in Wales are to offer everyone in Wales the opportunity of a decent home, to achieve clear improvements in all housing tenures and to do so in the context of the promotion of sustainable development. The 1999–2000 Government's Expenditure Plans: Departmental Report by the Welsh Office which will be published in April, and which takes into account the outcome of the public consultation on the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review: Spending Plans 1999–2002, will set out the mechanisms by which this objective will be met. Copies of the Departmental Report will be placed in the Library of the House.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Alyn and Deeside (WDA Strategy)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given to the North Wales region of the WDA with regards to a strategy for inward investment, job creation and infrastructure in Alyn and Deeside; and if he will make a statement. [68583]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend announced on 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 172 that he had issued Strategic Guidance to the Welsh Development Agency for the period to March 2000.

This sets out the broad operational priorities which we want the Agency to follow, with the objectives of spreading economic success to every part of Wales including the North Wales region and the Alyn and Deeside area; and bringing each area's local economy nearer to the level of the best.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Teachers

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many whole-time equivalent teachers are currently employed in Wales; and how many were employed in May 1997. [68519]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 1 February 1999]: Information on employment of teachers is collected annually in January. At January 1997 and 1998 there were respectively 26,500 and 26,135 whole-time equivalent qualified teachers employed in Wales.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

PRIME MINISTER

North Sea Oil and Gas

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister if an official history of the Development of North Sea Oil and Gas is being commissioned. [69212]

The Prime Minister: Yes. I have appointed Professor Alexander Kemp of Aberdeen University as an official historian to write the official history of the Development of North Sea Oil and Gas.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Office for the Supervision of Solicitors

Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he has taken to monitor the work of the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors; and if he will make a statement. [68320]

Mr. Hoon: The Office for the Supervision of Solicitors is an independent body, and the Government do not have a role in monitoring the work of the Office. However, the Legal Services Ombudsman oversees the handling of complaints against members of the legal profession. She stated in her last annual report that, although the Office had made some improvements since it started operating in September 1996, there was still a long way to go. When the Ombudsman publishes her next annual report this summer, I will consider whether any further action is necessary.

Personal Injury Litigation

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what was, for personal injury litigation, (a) the cost of legal aid before cost recovery and retention of contributions, (b) the amount of costs recovered, (c) the amount of damages retained, (d) the amount of contributions retained and (e) the net cost after deduction of costs recovered, damages retained and contributions retained for (i) all personal injury litigation, (ii) medical negligence cases and (iii) personal injury cases excluding medical negligence in 1997–98. [68228]

Mr. Hoon: Closed case data for 1997–98 are incomplete and will not include five months' data for Nottingham and six weeks for Chester. This is due to the implementation in these two area offices of the Legal Aid Board's new Corporate Information System, which is temporarily unable to access closed case information. A breakdown of the available legal aid expenditure and receipts in respect of personal injury litigation and medical negligence cases for cases closed in 1997–98 was as follows:

£ million

Closed case 1997–98	Gross payments	Costs received	Damages retained	Contributions retained	Net costs
All Personal Injury Litigation	307.7	234.3	6.0	2.3	65.6
Medical Negligence	63.0	32.6	1.3	0.7	28.5
Personal Injury (excl. medical negligence)	224.7	201.7	4.7	1.5	37.1

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68419]

Mr. Hoon: There is a longstanding convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session. My Department's spending allocation does take account of the Access to Justice Bill.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68403]

Mr. Hoon: No responsibilities held by this Department prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be discontinued or transferred, either to another department or to an executive agency. From October 2000, this Department will take over from the Home Office responsibility for the enforcement of financial penalties. Responsibility for non-financial penalties could be transferred at the same time, or at a later date.

The Comprehensive Spending Review also provided an opportunity to reappraise spending plans and initiatives, and to reprioritise initiatives so as to provide properly for the needs of a modern and efficient justice system.

Child Abuse

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions in each of the last 10 years abuse of process was used by a judge to dismiss a case concerning child abuse. [68241]

Mr. Hoon: This information is not collected.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect of linking the basic state pension for those aged over 75 years to earnings rather than prices on (a) gross expenditure on NI benefits, (b) expenditure on means-tested benefits and (c) income tax revenues in (i) 2005 and (ii) 2010. [67976]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 28 January 1999]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

£ billion in 1999–2000 benefit rates

Expenditure	2005–06	2010–11
Basic Retirement Pension	2.2	3.9
Means-tested benefit offsets	–0.7	–1.2

Notes:
1. Inland Revenue is not able to provide estimates for tax effects in the years in question.
2. Retirement Pension estimates have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department.
3. Increased rates are assumed payable to pensioners aged 75 and over at each of the given dates. Category BL rates were increased where the recipient is 75 or over, including cases where the spouse whose contribution record provides entitlement is under 75. Adult Dependency Increases paid in respect of women aged under 75 were not increased.
4. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £0.1 billion, but are not necessarily accurate to that degree.
5. Estimates of means-tested benefit offsets are illustrative and assume price uprating of Income Support. They are based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey and the Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry. Possible future increases in income, other than the proposed increases in Basic Retirement Pension, have not been taken into account.

Mr. John Farren

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to update the National Insurance Contributions records of Mr. John Farren, a constituent. [68234]

Mr. Timms: The National Insurance account for the hon. Member's constituent, Mr. Farren, will be updated by the 15 March 1999.

Forecast Expenditure

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list his latest estimates and forecast expenditure in cash terms for cyclical social security for (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000, (iv) 2000–01 and (v) 2001–02. [68385]

Mr. Darling: Government expenditure is no longer classified as being Cyclical or as part of the Control Total. Major reforms to tighten the control and to improve the long term planning of public spending were announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report (published June 1998). Spending plans across the public sector is known as Total Managed Expenditure (TME). Large demand-led programmes, such as DSS benefits expenditure, are brought together in Annually Managed Expenditure (AME). The latest forecasts for DSS benefits expenditure were published in the November 1998 Pre-Budget Report.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67846]

Mr. Bayley: I refer my hon. Friend to the Written Answer that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office, gave on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296.

It is the practice of this Department to facilitate access for the visually impaired by producing all White and Green Papers in braille and audio versions and they are made available from The Stationery Office at the same price as the print version. Free summary versions, also available in braille and audio, can be ordered by calling 0181 867 3201.

In addition, we produce an electronic version for publishing on the Internet and we are able to make floppy disk versions available on request.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce new ways of detecting and combating Disability Living Allowance fraud following the abolition of the Benefit Integrity Project. [67760]

Mr. Bayley: The Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) gathered up to date information about the care and mobility needs of disabled people with the highest awards of Disability Living Allowance (DLA), to check that they were receiving the right amount of DLA. The Benefit Integrity Project will end on 31 March 1999, to be replaced by a new and fairer system. No new cases will be selected for the project after this date. Cases where action has already started will continue to be processed through the remaining stages of adjudication, including review and appeal, in the normal way.

We are determined to ensure that people are receiving the correct amount of benefit. But there is currently no automatic review mechanism within DLA. Therefore, from April a new system of periodic review will be introduced. It will incorporate the lessons already learned and will be continually evaluated and refined as it develops. Staff involved in the new processes will receive full training before commencing this new work.

We are already talking to disability groups about ways to ensure the new system is sensitive to people's circumstances, and that it is both fair and effective.

Family Credit

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of family credit there are in the (a) Maidstone area and (b) Medway area. [67468]

Angela Eagle: The administration of Family Credit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jonathan Shaw, dated 1 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many recipients of Family Credit there are in the (a) Maidstone and (b) Medway areas.

The Family Credit Unit produces statistics which show the number of recipients within the area covered by Benefits Agency (BA) offices. The area of Medway is covered by the BA Chatham office.

The number of Family Credit recipients for the Maidstone and Chatham areas are shown in the table.

Number of family credit recipients in the Maidstone and Chatham benefits agency offices areas

Office	Number of recipients
Maidstone	1,146
Chatham	2,318

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Maritime and Coastguard Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he has received about the creation of the Maritime and Coastguard Agency; and how many representations opposed setting up the new body. [68058]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Following the announcement of the creation of a new Marine Agency on 19 August 1997 to combine the work of the Coastguard Agency and the Marine Safety Agency from 1 April 1998, several letters were received, mainly referring to the Coastguard 5 year Strategy. Of these received 7 made mention of the merger, of which four expressed concern but none opposed the setting up of a new body. Since the launch of the Maritime and Coastguard Agency there have been a number of letters from industry and others endorsing the benefits of the merged agency.

Freight Flights (Heathrow)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many air freight flights representing what freight tonnage were recorded (a) to and (b) from (i) Heathrow, (ii) Gatwick and (iii) Stansted in each of the last five years. [68575]

Ms Glenda Jackson: What information is available is shown in the table.

Fly-tipping

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce further measures to discourage fly-tipping. [68627]

Mr. Meale: Stringent controls and severe penalties are in place to discourage the illegal disposal of waste (fly-tipping) and the Environment Agency has made clear its commitment to taking firm enforcement action. The main controls and the maximum penalties were set out in my reply to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice), on 8 December 1998, Official Report, columns 120–21. We have no plans to introduce further measures.

Sewerage

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department's programme of investment in cleaning up water and sewage will provide assistance to local authorities wishing to transfer Housing Act sewage works to water companies. [68586]

Mr. Meale: The Department does not offer financial assistance to help bring Housing Act sewage works up to the required standard to enable them to be adopted by the sewerage undertaker. There are provisions in the Water Industry Act 1991 which enable these works to be adopted but the financial implications are a matter for the sewerage undertaker and local authority. Under section 105 of the 1991 Act, an owner of any sewerage works may appeal to the Director General of Water Services in the event of a dispute with the sewerage undertaker over an agreement to adopt.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department will conduct a review of the bodies which a direct labour organisation of a district council is permitted to enter into contracts with as specified in the Local Authorities (Goods and Services) Act 1970; and if he will make a statement. [68567]

Mr. Raynsford: My officials are reviewing the way the Local Authorities (Goods and Services) Act 1970 works. Any changes to its administration have to be considered in the context of the Local Government Bill, now before Parliament, which would allow the Secretary of State to modify existing legislation so as to facilitate local authorities achieving best value. It would be premature to discuss how this power might be exercised in advance of Parliament discussing the relevant provisions of the Bill.

Private Playing Fields

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to control development on private playing fields. [68566]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning Policy Guidance note 17: "Sport and Recreation" provides advice on this issue. It emphasises the special significance of playing fields, including those that are privately owned and that they should normally be protected from development, taking into account the long-term needs of the community for recreation and amenity open space.

Last month, my Department issued Circular 9/98: the Town and Country Planning (Playing Fields) (England) Direction 1998. This applies to any application for developing private land which is currently or has at any time in the five years before the application been used as a playing field by an educational institution.

Homelessness

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people are currently registered as homeless; and how many were so registered in May 1997. [68607]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities in England report in their quarterly P1(E) returns the number of households accepted as homeless and in priority need under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 and 1996 Housing Acts.

The latest available estimates are for the quarter ending September 1998, when local authorities accepted some 27,500 households. The corresponding figure for the quarter ending June 1997 was 24,930 households.

Groundwater Regulations 1998

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the Groundwater Regulations. [68967]

Mr. Meacher: The Groundwater Regulations 1998 were laid before Parliament on 11 November 1998. Transitional arrangements under the Regulations came into force on 1 January, and the main provisions come into force on 1 April 1999.

Minerals Extraction

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received in response to public consultation on the Draft Environmental Impact Assessment and Habitats (Extraction of Minerals by Marine Dredging) Regulations 1999; and if he will make a statement. [69213]

Mr. Caborn: Public consultation on the Draft Environmental Impact Assessment and Habitats (Extraction of Minerals by Marine Dredging) Regulations was carried out for a six week period in the autumn of last year. 46 responses were received from official bodies, from fishing interests, local authorities and environmental organisations. A list of the responses has been placed in the Library of the House and copies of all responses have been placed in the DETR Library. The Government are considering the responses.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what statutory authority exists for costs to be incurred by him in preparation for the establishment of the Greater London Authority and its functional and other associated bodies. [69214]

Mr. Raynsford: The Greater London Authority (Referendum) Bill provides authority for preparations for the Greater London Authority itself. Authority for preparations for the remaining bodies will be provided by the Greater London Authority Bill once enacted. Parliamentary approval for expenditure on these remaining bodies will be sought as soon as practicable following enactment. This is likely to be through a Winter Supplementary Estimate for Class III Vote 4 (local government, England) for 1999–2000. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure in 1998–99 estimated at £320,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists

14. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the total number of people on NHS waiting lists in England since April 1998; and if he will make a statement on progress made in reducing waiting lists. [67172]

Mr. Denham: The total number of people on National Health Service waiting lists in England has fallen by over 150,000 since April 1998. By next April, we will deliver a record reduction in waiting lists to below the 1.16 million patients inherited from the previous Government. This will be the first step in delivering our pledge to bring down the waiting lists by 100,000 from the level we inherited in the lifetime of this Parliament.

29. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the total number of people waiting over 12 months for treatment on NHS waiting lists in England since May 1998. [67188]

Mr. Denham: Over 12 months waiters have fallen by over 16,000, 22 per cent. since June 1998, to stand at 56,000 at the end of November 1998.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients need to be treated in the Essex Rivers health authority to meet his Department's waiting list target at 31 March 1999. [67191]

Mr. Denham: The position as at November 1998 was that Essex Rivers Healthcare National Health Service Trust will need to achieve a reduction of 2,324 in order to achieve its 31 March 1999 waiting list target. North Essex Health Authority will need to achieve a reduction of 3,362 in order to achieve its 31 March 1999 waiting list target.

Renal Services

16. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision, per head of population, of renal services in (a) the South Lancashire health authority and (b) the rest of England. [67174]

Mr. Hutton: The actual take-up figure in the area covered by South Lancashire Health Authority was 50 patients per million population in the most recent year for which figures are available, that is, the year ended September 1997. The most recent national figures available are from a survey of service provision in 1995. The number of new patients in England accepted on to treatment (dialysis or kidney transplant) for end stage renal failure in 1995 was 82 per million population.

Investing in Dentistry Initiative

17. Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of grant applications under the Investing in Dentistry initiative. [67175]

Mr. Denham: To date, we have received over 600 Investing in Dentistry funding requests, 242 of which have been approved, and 236 refused. Decisions on the remaining applications will be made as soon as possible.

Out-patient Waiting Lists

18. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the total number of patients waiting more than 13 weeks for an out-patient consultation as of (a) the first quarter of 1997 and (b) the last quarter for which figures are available. [67177]

Mr. Denham: In the first quarter of 1997–98, 2,690,000 first outpatient attendances were provided, with 290,000 patients waiting over 13 weeks at 30 June. In the second quarter of 1998–99 (the latest available), 2,740,000 first outpatient attendances were provided, with 437,000 patients waiting over 13 weeks at 30 September 1998.

Winter Schemes

19. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many winter schemes were supported by his Department through his Department's targeted winter schemes money. [67178]

Mr. Hutton: Over 2,000. These have enabled health and social services to work together to manage the very high emergency pressures we have seen over the past month.

39. Mr. Dennis Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many schemes were funded by his Department through targeted winter schemes money. [67198]

Mr. Denham: Over 2,000 schemes have been funded through this money. These have enabled health and social services to work together to manage the very high emergency pressures we have seen over the past month.

Nurses

20. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the percentage increase in nurses on trainee schemes was for 1997 over the previous year; and what proportion of this increase was made up of graduate nurses. [67179]

Mr. Denham: The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting collects statistical information on students on nurse trainee schemes and publishes the figures in their annual reports, but not in the format requested.

21. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the training of nurses. [67180]

Mr. Denham: We have already said that we must reform the system of nurse education and training.

We want to see more flexible, modular nurse education that has far stronger links with the NHS at all levels. We want student nurses to have more work-based learning in the NHS and see an NHS committed to preparing the next generation of nurses.

We will be discussing how we achieve this with representatives of the professions, the UK General Council and the universities.

24. Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses were registered with the UK Central Council for England and Wales on (i) 1 May 1997 and (ii) 1 January 1999; and if he will make a statement. [67183]

Mr. Denham: For the information requested, I refer the hon. Member to the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

27. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra nurse trainees would have entered training in the years 1992 to 1997 if the level of intake matched expected levels for 1998 to 2001. [67186]

Mr. Denham: If the previous Government had matched our commitment to nurse training over their last five years of office, over 14,000 extra nurse trainees would have entered training.

36. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what improvements he is making to nurse education and training. [67195]

Mr. Denham: We wish to see nurse education become more accessible and provide nurses with the practical skills they need when they enter the National Health Service. We will be discussing how we achieve this with representatives of the professions and the universities, and with Sir Len Peach, Chair of the United Kingdom Central Council Commission for Education. The commission is reviewing nurse education and will report in the summer.

The NHS is already working to improve nurse education, for example by encouraging the use of longer practice placements and by working closely with universities to encourage more joint NHS/University-funded nurse teacher posts.

37. Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new student nurse trainees were forecast to start training in the year 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1997; and how many new student nurse trainees started training during that year. [67196]

Mr. Denham: From April 1997 to April 1998 the number of nurse training places was increased by just under 1,500 against a planned increase of 1,300.

Commission for Health Improvement

22. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers will be available to the Commission for Health Improvement for supporting the local development of health care and spot-checking new arrangements. [67181]

Mr. Denham: Forthcoming legislation will set out powers to enable the Commission to obtain access to information for the purposes of conducting reviews of the implementation and adequacy of arrangements to monitor and improve the quality of healthcare provided by National Health Service Trusts and Primary Care Trusts.

NHS Staff (Retention)

23. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the retention of NHS staff. [67182]

Mr. Denham: "Working Together—Securing a quality workforce for the NHS", published in September 1998, sets targets for local employers to demonstrate year-on-year improvement in retention rates for all health professional staff.

Viagra

25. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received regarding making Viagra available on the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [67184]

Mr. Denham: Since September we have received some 490 written representations from Members of Parliament, professional representative bodies, patient groups and the public about the availability of Viagra on the National Health Service. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 21 January the start of a six-week public consultation on substantive policy proposals about the treatment of impotence on the NHS.

Equality of Provision

26. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he is making toward equality of provision in the national health service; and when he expects to achieve it. [67185]

Mr. Denham: The Government are producing National Service Frameworks, establishing the National Institute for Clinical Excellence and introducing a National Performance Assessment Framework, which will challenge and address variations in the provision of clinically and cost-effective treatments not based on the health needs and wishes of local people.

Cervical Screening

30. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure equality of provision for cervical screening; and if he will make a statement. [67189]

Mr. Hutton: Tackling health inequalities is one of two key aims in "Our Healthier Nation" and it is a priority for health and social services. We are committed to ensuring that all women aged 20–64 have access to cervical screening at least every five years. In those health authorities areas which are not achieving 80 per cent. coverage, targeted initiatives are underway to improve coverage. At a national level, a new Inner Cities Action Group is identifying and disseminating good practice in increasing coverage among ethnic minority and lower socio-economic groups.

NHS Morale

33. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has put into effect with the aim of increasing morale in the NHS. [67192]

Mr. Denham: "Working Together: Securing a quality workforce for the NHS", a framework for managing human resources in the National Health Service, was circulated to the NHS on 22 September 1998 and is a major step forward in our drive to meeting the aspirations of both staff and employers. The pay review bodies have welcomed the initiatives that we announced to improve the quality of the working lives of staff.

By April 2000 employers will, among other measures, have to:

have systems in place to record and monitor workplace accidents and violence against staff, and have published strategies in place to achieve a reduction in such incidents; have policies and procedures in place to tackle harassment by staff and service users, supported by monitoring and reporting arrangements to measure progress; have in place occupational health services and counselling available for staff; have in place training and development plans in place for the majority of health professionals; have developed and reviewed their mechanisms for involving staff in planning and delivering health care; achieve year-on-year improvement in sick absence rates and, where applicable, targeted progress towards national minimum benchmarks; demonstrate year-on-year improvement in retention rates for all health professional staff and, where applicable, targeted progress towards national benchmarks; have undertaken an annual staff attitude survey to act as a benchmark against which improvements to the quality of working life can be measured.

Accident and Emergency Departments

34. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his target for investment in the modernisation of accident and emergency departments during 1999. [67193]

Mr. Denham: The Government have announced an extra £30 million to modernise some 50 accident and emergency departments in the coming year.

Primary Care Groups

35. Mr. Darvill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many primary care groups he expects to commence during 1999. [67194]

Mr. Denham: 481 primary care groups will commence on 1 April 1999.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if primary care groups may commission services. [67176]

Mr. Denham: Primary care groups will have the capacity to commission services from 1 April 1999. The degree of responsibility for commissioning services will be agreed between the primary care group and the health authority.

NHS Wages and Salaries

38. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the total NHS budget is taken up by the wages and salaries of (a) doctors, (b) nurses and (c) ancillary workers. [67197]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is as follows:

Paybill costs as a percentage of National Health Service expenditure: England 1997–98

	Percentage of NHS expenditure	£ million
NHS Total Expenditure	—	37,650
Doctors and dentists paybill	16.1	6,070
Nurses and midwives paybill	17.6	6,630
Ancillary staff paybill	2.6	970

Notes:
Paybill data for 1997–98 are provisional.
Figures for doctors and dentists include general practitioners and general dental practitioners.
Salaries for practice nurses, directly employed by GPs, are not included.
The figures for ancillary staff include directly employed staff. Ancillary staff are defined as support staff and classified through the new system of occupation coding for NHS non-medical staff, introduced in 1995.

Hospital Admissions (Leicestershire)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on reducing pressure on hospital admissions in Leicestershire. [67190]

Mr. Denham: None. We understand that Leicestershire Health Authority has produced a comprehensive action plan agreed with the local authority social services department for managing the pressures on emergency services during the winter period.

An extra £250 million was announced in November 1998 to help the National Health Service and social services manage this winter's pressures. £2.6 million of this was allocated to Leicestershire Health Authority.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people received specialist treatment for chronic fatigue syndrome at the Havering Hospital NHS Trust broken down by those treated as (a) out-patients and (b) in-patients in each of the last three years. [67009]

Ms Jowell: The figures available for chronic/postviral fatigue syndrome in Havering Hospital National Health Service Trust, for financial years 1995–96 to 1997–98 are shown in the table.

Chronic fatigue syndrome in Havering Hospital NHS Trust [1]

Year	FCEs [2]
1995–96	100
1996–97 [3]	83
1997–98 [3]	85

[1] Ordinary Admissions and Daycase combined: Finished Consultant Episodes (FCEs) by primary diagnosis for chronic/post viral fatigue syndrome in Havering Hospital NHS
[2] An FCE represents a complete period of inpatient treatment under the care of an individual hospital consultant, and in about 95 per cent. of cases, represents a complete spell in hospital.
[3] Figures for 1996–97 and 1997–98 are provisional—no adjustments have yet been made for shortfalls in data (the data are ungrossed)
Note:
ICD1 10 code used is G93.3

Department of Health, Hospital Episodes Statistics

The Department does not collect information on outpatients treated for chronic fatigue syndrome. The information that is available is contained in "Outpatients and Ward Attenders, England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Health Inequalities

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the cost of implementing the Acheson report on Inequalities in Health. [67605]

Ms Jowell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 378.

The terms of reference of the independent inquiry into inequalities in health (the Acheson report) required the review to be conducted within the broad framework of the Government's overall financial strategy. The whole Government are firmly committed to reducing health inequalities. A range of initiatives is already helping to carry forward Sir Donald Acheson's recommendations. Modernising the health service and ensuring fair access to services is a vital component of that effort—backed up with a £21 billion boost over the next three years.

Drugs Prescriptions

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the savings which the NHS would have made in 1997–98 had equivalent generic drugs been prescribed in place of non-generics. [68450]

Mr. Denham: We estimate that, had equivalent generic drugs been prescribed in the community in place of proprietary items in the National Health Service in 1997–98, in all cases where equivalent generic drugs were available, then savings of some £66 million could in theory have been made. However, there are circumstances in which generic prescribing is inappropriate.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the average income in 1997–98 in (a) a prescribing GP and (b) a dispensing GP; [68446]

(2) what is the average income supplement earned by a GP through dispensing. [68447]

Mr. Denham: The level of fees and allowances payable to general practitioners are set by the independent pay review body to deliver and distribute their recommended level of net incomes for GPs, taking account of the costs, pressures and workload of practice in different areas. Earnings from practice dispensing are an integral part of the overall recommendations of the Review Body.

The information requested is not available. However, the average net income of dispensing and non-dispensing general medical practitioners[1] in Great Britain in 1995–96 and 1996–97[2,3] was as follows:

£000

	1995–96 and 1996–97 average[2,3]
All general medical practitioners[1] (GMPs)	47,000
Dispensing GMPs	53,400
Non-dispensing GMPs	45,800

[1] Unrestricted principals in Great Britain excluding salaried partners and GMPs with zero list size.
[2] Separate data for each year are not available.
[3] Based on a sample survey; figures are approximate and subject to sampling variation.

Research and Development

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the expenditure on research and development by each NHS region in each year since 1992. [68226]

Ms Jowell: The expenditure of funds from the National Health Service research and development levy by and through the NHS Executive's regional offices since the establishment of the levy on 1 April 1996 is shown in the table.

Comparable data are not available for earlier years. The levy includes funding allocated through national competition to enable NHS trusts and other providers of NHS services to carry out, commission and host research and development of potential benefit to the health service (budget 1), as well as funding allocated to the NHS Executive headquarters and regional offices to commission research and development activity on behalf of the NHS as a whole (budget 2). Other government funded research also takes place in, and benefits, the NHS.

Spending from the NHS research and development levy, by region

	1996–97		1997–98		1998–99
	Budget 1	Budget 2	Budget 1	Budget 2	Budget 1	Budget 2
Northern and Yorkshire	12,794	6,707	16,094	6,125	16,060	5,595
North West	18,019	5,867	20,413	7,085	20,479	7,109
Trent	18,040	4,257	20,512	4,359	20,830	4,560
West Midlands	6,313	5,125	9,734	4,717	10,091	4,592
Anglia and Oxford	8,838	9,310	17,829	10,040	18,345	10,130
South West	11,605	8,024	15,552	7,408	16,193	6,518
North Thames	260,294	7,300	198,996	6,9[illegible]	196,643	6,334
South Thames	22,705	5,197	50,889	6,07[illegible]	51,712	5,477
Totals	358,608	51,787	350,019	52,761	350,353	50,315

Notes:
Figures are outturn (provisional for 1998–99) in £000 at price level prevailing at the time.
There is a discontinuity in budget 1 allocations between 1996–97 and 1997–98 because accounting for research in postgraduate teaching hospitals was transferred from North Thames to the host regional office.
The table excludes national research and development programmes expenditure in budget 2 and £675,000 on budget 1 funds allocated during 1998–99 to cover the unforeseen costs incurred by providers hosting externally-funded non commercial research and development which qualifies for NHS support.
From 1 April 2000 the distribution of budget 2 funding to regional offices will be in proportion to the distribution of revenue allocations to health authorities.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list his latest estimates and forecast expenditure in cash terms for the element of NHS trusts' charges to health authorities which trusts use to remunerate their debt to central Government for (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000, (iv) 2000–01 and (v) 2001–02. [68382]

Mr. Denham: The amounts included in health authorities' allocations to cover National Health Service trust debt remuneration are as follows:

Year	Amount (£)
1997–98[1]	1,206,750,000
1998–99[1]	1,236,110,000
1999–2000[1]	1,306,544,000
2000–01[2]	1,306,544,000
2001–02[2]	1,306,544,000

[1] Actual
[2] Forecast

Forde Park, Newton Abbot

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if public immunity indemnity certificates have been signed in connection with Forde Park, Newton Abbot. [68864]

Mr. Hutton: No.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what files his Department retains on individuals who attended Forde Park, Newton Abbot. [68865]

Mr. Hutton: None.

Smoking

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the figures for the incidence of cigarette smoking among adults in 1998. [67399]

Ms Jowell: The Office for National Statistics plans to publish headline results from the 1998–99 General Household Survey (GHS) late this year. These will include figures for the prevalence of cigarette smoking among adults aged 16 and over in Great Britain.

It is also planned that the main report for the 1998–99 GHS will be published in February 2000, which will include more detailed analyses.

Telecommunications Base Stations

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the biological effects of emissions from telecommunications base stations. [68343]

Ms Jowell: In 1996, the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) evaluated an epidemiological study by the small area health statistics unit. This study, undertaken on behalf of this and five other Government Departments, investigated the incidence of leukaemia near 20 high power Television/FM transmitters in Great Britain. The study found that living close to a transmitter was not associated with an increased risk of leukaemia. In their statement—copies of which are available in the Library—COMARE reiterated their previous advice that is no firm evidence of a carcinogenic hazard from exposure to electromagnetic fields (EMF) from television and radio masts emissions.

The Department is currently contributing to the World Health Organisation International Electromagnetic Fields Project which includes health effects of electromagnetic fields and is funding studies investigating possible biological effects from EMF generally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Domestic Gas

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the annual financial benefit to the average three-bedroomed household of using domestic gas for heating and hot water relative to other forms of heating. [68376]

Mr. Battle: The Building Research Establishment estimate that during a year of average weather, based on average energy prices over the period 1996–1998, the typical costs of using different fuels for heating and hot water are as follows:

Estimated average annual energy consumption and costs for heating and hot water: 3 bedroom semi detached house, United Kingdom

Fuel used	Energy consumed[1] GJ	Cost per year[2] £	Difference compared to gas £	Difference compared to gas Percentage
Gas[3,4]	100.5	452	—	—
Oil[3]	92.6	369	−84	−18
Solid fuel[3,5]	111.2	540	+88	+20
Electric off-peak[6]	67	630	+178	+39
Electric on-peak[7]	53.3	1,171	+719	+159

[1] Energy consumed for domestic heating and hot water during a year of average weather (based on weather over last 20 years). It is assumed in the model that all of the house is heated so that the living area reaches a temperature of 21° C, with the following heating pattern: weekdays 2 hours in the morning, 7 hours in the evening. Weekends 16 hours.
[2] Based on average fuel prices (including VAT) over the 3 years 1996–1998. Connection to mains electricity for other uses, such as appliances, has been assumed and the standing charge associated with this supply has therefore been excluded from the estimated costs. The figures reflect the overall efficiency of typical heating systems for each fuel (eg a standard gas or oil boiler with room thermostat or individual electric heaters with their own thermostats). More efficient systems are available for oil and gas, but not widely installed and they would obviously reduce energy consumption and the corresponding costs further.
[3] Central heating and hot water.
[4] Includes a standing charge for gas of £36 per year.
[5] Based on anthracite used in closed room heaters and radiators.
[6] Storage heating and hot water (dual immersion heater). The annual cost includes an additional standing charge for the off-peak tariff of £14 per year.
[7] Heating and hot water.

Building Research Establishment Domestic Energy Model (BREDEM)

It should be noted that these estimates do not take account of all the factors that are relevant to such comparisons. For example, the lower capital costs of on-peak electricity installation can allow investment in higher insulation levels.

Right Hon. Member for Hartlepool

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) made the decision to have no involvement in the Department of Trade and Industry investigation into the dealings of the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson). [65637]

Mr. Byers: On 23 September 1998.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what papers relating to his Department's inquiry into dealings of the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) were shown to the former Secretary of State, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson); [65636]

(2) on what date the former Secretary of State, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), withdrew from any involvement in or influence over investigations conducted by the Department of Trade and Industry into the dealings of the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West, (Mr. Robinson); [65638]

(3) whether the former Secretary of State, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), minuted the Permanent Secretary in order to record his decision to have no involvement in the inquiry into alleged accounting offences by Hollis Industries plc; [65596]

(4) by what means the former Secretary of State, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), informed the Permanent Secretary of his decision to have no involvement in the inquiry into alleged accounting offences by Hollis Industries plc. [65597]

Mr. Byers: The decision was taken in discussion with the Permanent Secretary at a meeting on 23 September 1998.

US–UK Import Tariffs

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what rates of tariff are currently applicable to United Kingdom imports of catering tableware from the United States of America, and of similar United Kingdom exports into the USA; what action he is taking to reduce the difference; and if he will make a statement. [68369]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The current customs tariffs on imports of catering tableware into the UK from the United States of America are 12 per cent. for articles of porcelain or china, and 5 per cent., 5.5 per cent. or 9 per cent. for articles other than porcelain or china. The US tariffs for similar products are 30 per cent. and 31.5 per cent. respectively. The UK is committed to further multilateral liberalisation of trade including significant reductions in US peak tariffs on catering tableware. The issue will be addressed as part of a comprehensive, cross-sectoral multilateral World Trade Organisation (WTO) negotiation on industrial tariffs. To date WTO member countries have still to commit themselves to such a negotiation. However, I am hopeful that the WTO Ministerial Conference in the USA next November will be able to agree on the need to make preparations for further multilateral negotiations on liberalising industrial tariffs. I do not, therefore, propose to make a statement.

End-of-life Vehicles

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Government supported the amendment to the draft EU Directive on end-of-life vehicles which was approved at the Environment Council meeting on 21 December and which added £73 million extra annual costs on business. [68983]

Dr. Howells: Ministers reached only a preliminary view on the main issues of the Directive at the Environment Council meeting in December, and decisions on the Council's Common Position are expected to be taken at the Environment Council in March.

The latest update of the Regulatory Impact Assessment includes a provision for a specific recycling target for 2015. The previous RIA could not contain a figure for this provision because it was based on an unquantified target for 2015 which would have been set by review in 2005. The difference between the two figures should not therefore simply be regarded as an increase.

Company Rescue Mechanism

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the terms of reference of the joint DTI/Treasury review of company rescue mechanisms announced in the recent Competitiveness White Paper. [69143]

Mr. Byers: The terms of reference of the review have now been agreed as follows:

To review aspects of company and insolvency law and practice in the United Kingdom and elsewhere relating to the opportunities for, and means by which, businesses can resolve short to medium term financial difficulties, so as to preserve maximum economic value; and to make recommendations.

The principal areas of focus for the review should be:

the further development of the rescue culture;

a re-assessment of the relative rights and remedies of secured and unsecured creditors in insolvencies to include the position of the Crown as a preferential creditor; and, consideration of the duties of directors in relation to companies experiencing financial difficulties.

The Review will be led jointly by the Department of Trade and Industry (Insolvency Service) and HM Treasury and will seek and welcome views from all sources, particularly those with experience of business and business failure, from those who have studied company rescue regimes both in the UK and elsewhere and from those involved in the practice of rescuing companies, again both in the UK and elsewhere.

To ensure that its conclusions/recommendations can make an early contribution to debate in this area the Review Team will report to Ministers by the end of July 1999.

Officials from the Department of Trade and Industry, The Insolvency Service and HM Treasury will lead the review with contributions from a number of individuals from the academic, professional and business world.

Electro-shock Batons

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if companies granted export licences for the export of electro-shock batons between 1989 and 1994 had been granted the relevant licence under firearms legislation to (a) handle, (b) store, (c) distribute and (d) manufacture such weapons. [68192]

Mr. Boateng: I have been asked to reply.

Two of the four companies in question had authority to deal in weapons prohibited by section 5(1)(b) of the Firemans Act 1968, which would include electro-shock weapons as well as other types of weapons capable of discharging a noxious liquid, gas or other thing. The other two companies, one of which was the company granted the trans-shipment licence, did not have such authority.

The investigation of possible offences under the Firemans Acts is a matter for the police, who will consider whether there are grounds to bring criminal charges. The decision as to whether or not to prosecute in an individual case rests with the Crown Prosecution Service. The Home Office has no powers to intervene. However, information about the two companies that did not have authority to deal in prohibited weapons was forwarded by the Home Office to the relevant police forces for their consideration. I understand that, in both cases, the police have decided to take no further action.

Domestic Gas (Mains Connection)

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many households in the United Kingdom were not connected to the mains domestic gas supply in (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [68375]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 1 February 1999]: I regret that this information is not available from official sources. Unofficial estimates suggest that some 6 million households in Great Britain may not be connected to mains gas supply, including premises where it would not be safe to install gas.

Digital Economy (Special Representative)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce the name of the Government's Special Representative on the Digital Economy. [68167]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The selection process for the Special Representative on the Digital Economy is in hand, and we will announce the name of the successful candidate as soon as possible.

Export Controls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what amount of money, underwritten by the ECGD for defence and other equipment entered in Part III of Schedule I to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 has been claimed by manufacturers, but not recovered from the Governments of (a) Indonesia, (b) Jordan, (c) Kenya, (d) Egypt and (e) Algeria. [67897]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 26 January 1999]: ECGD does not categorise the sales of defence or other equipment which it supports by reference to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994.

I can however advise my hon. Friend that, on the basis of records available, the balance of claims paid by ECGD which are outstanding for recovery in respect of sales of defence and other equipment (including non-lethal goods and services) to defence buyers in the named countries currently stands at:-

£ million

Country	Number
(a) Indonesia	11
(b) Jordan	253
(c) Kenya	16
(d) Egypt	46
(e) Algeria	98

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the amount of money underwritten by the ECGD for defence and other equipment entered in Part III of Schedule I to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 claimed by manufacturers, but not recovered from the Governments of (a) Indonesia, (b) Jordan, (c) Kenya, (d) Egypt and (e) Algeria, has been outstanding for (i) five years or more, (ii) two to five years, (iii) one to two years, (iv) six months to one year and (v) less than six months. [67894]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 26 January 1999]: ECGD does not maintain its records on a basis which would enable it to answer this question other than at disproportionate cost.

Renewable Energy Sources

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps the Government are taking to encourage electricity companies to supply electricity from renewable energy sources beyond their obligations under the Non Fossil Fuel Obligation. [67965]

Mr. Battle: In September last year, I announced the fifth and largest Order to date under the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO-5). Under that Order, the electricity supply companies in England and Wales contracted collectively with 261 projects with a combined capacity of 1,177 Mega Watts (MW).

I have also reversed the planned cuts in the renewable programme budget, so that the budget for this year (1998–99) has been maintained at £11 million. The programme supports both Research and Development (R&D) and market enablement projects. Of the latter, among the projects supported this year was the Renewable Generators Consortium (RGC), which brought together the majority of generators with contracts under NFFO-1 and NFFO-2—contracts which subsequently ended on 31 December 1998—in order to negotiate new, post-NFFO contracts collectively with the electricity supply companies.

Many of those generators, now trading successfully in the open electricity market, are supplying electricity companies which are either already offering or which are about to offer, green electricity tariffs or products of some kind. The programme has also been supporting work on accrediting such tariffs and I hope to see an accreditation scheme launched later this year, with substantial support from my Department.

We are also considering wider renewable policy as part of our review of renewable energy, the results of which I will announce shortly.

SMEs (Internet)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what publicity his Department has given to its internet web sites dedicated to Trade UK for small and medium-sized enterprises; and if he will list the web sites. [68463]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 1 February 1999]: My Department is promoting the TradeUK internet service at www.tradeuk.com to two main audiences: first, as a service for UK exporters and potential exporters and, second, as a service for buyers abroad wishing to source goods and services from the UK. For the UK audience the main links to TradeUK now in place are via the Overseas Trade Services (www.dti.gov.uk/ots/) and Enterprise Zone (www.enterprisezone.org.uk) websites. We are also giving publicity to the TradeUK web site in its own right and working with other Departments, agencies and trade associations to develop reciprocal links to and from TradeUK. We are signposting foreign buyers to TradeUK from websites of British Embassies and Consulates around the world.

Intellectual Property Rights

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that the procedure for registering and protecting intellectual property rights for patents is harmonised across the European Union. [68551]

Dr. Howells: There is already substantial harmonisation of procedures for acquiring patent rights in Europe. Under the European Patent Convention (EPC), an intergovernmental agreement to which 19 European States belong (including the United Kingdom), applications can be filed with the European Patent Office. This offers a single procedure for obtaining patent rights. Applicants designate those States in which protection is required, and rights become valid in those States upon filing of a translation into their official languages.

Once validated in each designated State the system provides a bundle of national patents which have to be separately maintained and enforced under respective national laws.

Following consultation on its Green Paper on patents in Europe, the European Commission is expected to make a proposal for a Council Regulations for a Community patent providing a unitary right across the Member States. Costs of translation into official languages of all Member States and absence of harmonisation in post grant litigation could reduce the effectiveness of such a system. As stated in the Competitiveness White Paper, the Government will push for a Community patent which is affordable and easy to enforce.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68395]

Mr. Byers: No responsibilities are to be discontinued, transferred or added over this period as a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68411]

Mr. Byers: There is a longstanding convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

Internal Market

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the determination by the Council of Ministers of the guidelines and conditions to be adopted by Member States and the Community in order to ensure balanced progress towards the internal market. [67934]

Mr. Wilson: The Vienna European Council on 11–12 December concluded that continued progress had been made to modernise, extend and simplify the Single Market, and welcomed the continued monitoring which the Commission would carry out through the Single Market Scoreboard. The Council also concluded that full and correct implementation of single market rules at national level was essential and that there were still some gaps in this which needed to be corrected without delay.

The Internal Market Council was asked to produce a report on the working of Single Market, and proposing further action on a number of priorities.

The Austrian and German Presidencies have been taking forward the important agenda of work in economic reform of product and capital markets to enhance competitiveness, economic growth and employment in which my noble Friend the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe has played a very active role.

Regional Aid

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what change in the proportion of the working population covered by assisted areas status is now anticipated under the European guidelines on regional aid published in March 1998. [66151]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The European Commission has stated that up to 28.7 per cent. of the UK's population may be covered by areas eligible for regional aid under Articles 92(3)a and 92(3)c of the EC Treaty.

Lucas Varity

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the bid by a US company for Lucas Varity and its potential effects on the West Midlands. [68522]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 1 February 1999]: In the first instance it would be necessary to determine whether any proposed acquisition fell for consideration by the European Commission under the EC Merger Regulation, or by the UK authorities under the Fair Trading Act 1973. If a proposed acquisition fell to the EC Merger Regulation, it would be for the parties to notify it to the European Commission. If it fell to the UK authorities, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry would decide whether or not to refer it to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the light of the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading. Each case is considered on its own merits.

Renewable Energy Advisory Committee

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the (a) role, (b) recent work and (c) membership of the Renewable Energy Advisory Committee. [68855]

Mr. Battle: The terms of reference of the Renewable Energy Advisory Committee (REAC) are:

to advise the Head of Energy Technologies Directorate (ENT), DTI on the aims, content, environmental appropriateness and economic applicability of the Department's market enablement programme and policy on new and renewable energy; to advise on the merits, relative priorities and value for money of those proposed projects within the above programme that the Head of ENT may place before it;

to take particular responsibility for advice on strategic and other pan-technology issues associated with the development of new and renewable energy sources; to monitor and review the programme's progress against the DTI's agreed plans, and to evaluate the programme's effectiveness in achieving its agreed objectives; and to provide advice on such other matters as may be required.

At its meeting on 20 January 1999 REAC discussed:

the renewable energy programme;

the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation and my Department's recent consultation exercise on offshore wind; and new Cabinet Office guidance on Non-Departmental Public Bodies.

Members of REAC

Mr. G. Bevan, ENT, DTI—Chairman
Dr. G. J. K. Acres, Johnson Matthey Technology Centre (retired)
Mr. J. Boags, Bank of Scotland
Mr. R. Booth, Consultant
Ms A. Cook OBE, Neighbourhood Energy Action
Mr. G. Leach, Stockholm Environment Institute
Prof. P. O'Sullivan, University College London
Mr. J. Parry, Chief Planning Officer, Shropshire County Council
Mr. D. Porter, Association of Electricity Producers
Mr. D. Shah, BP Exploration
Mr. M. Trinick, Bond Pearce Solicitors
Dr. G. Walker, CCLRC
Mr. H. West, Hyder Industrial Ltd
Mr. J. P. White, NORWEB
Mr. J. Worth, Countryside Commission.

In addition, a number of central Government officials attend REAC meetings in their official capacity, together with representatives of DTI's programme management contractor.

Cashmere Goods

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from UK businesses in respect of the US Government proposal to impose tariffs on UK cashmere goods; what was the total value of UK cashmere goods exported (a) in total and (b) to the US in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [68172]

Mr. Wilson: I met with a delegation of manufacturers of Cashmere products led by the hon. Members for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) and for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Moore) on 20 January. I share their concerns on this issue. I have also had representation from companies involved in the cashmere industry, throughout the UK.

Based on statistics published by US International Trade Commission, UK exports of cashmere goods to the US were approximately £17.5 million in 1997. There is no UK tariff heading directly equivalent to this particular US tariff code. However, UK Customs and Excise data indicate that UK exports to the US of cashmere sweaters under the most closely corresponding UK tariff codes (61101035 and 61101095) were £3.2 million in 1997. Total UK exports of cashmere sweaters under these codes were £30.8 million.

Tidal Energy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if provision for the support of electricity generation from tidal energy sources will be included in his next scheme for non-fossil fuel obligations. [68827]

Mr. Battle: What further measures the Government might introduce to encourage electricity generation from renewable energy sources is an issue being considered as part of the current policy review on renewable energy, in which tidal energy sources are included.

SCOTLAND

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to include Irish as a category in his Department's ethnic monitoring of staff recruitment. [63876]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 11 January 1999]: The over-riding principle of Civil Service recruitment procedures is that they should be fair, and selection should be on merit at each stage.

Monitoring in this area is based on ethnic origin and not nationality. The nine ethnic minority origin categories monitored by my Department are based on those used in the 1991 census, which did not include an Irish category. They will be reviewed in the light of any suggested changes for the 2001 census.

Broadcasting

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what parts of the Representation of the People Acts apply to the Scottish Parliament elections for the purpose of broadcasting in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [66180]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The conduct of elections for the Scottish Parliament will be governed by an Order which will be made under section 12(1) of the Scotland Act, which will be laid before the House next month. In relation to broadcasting, we intend that the Order will make similar provision to section 92 of the Representation of the People Act 1983. We are currently seeking comments on whether or not a provision modelled on section 93 of that Act should also be included.

Waiting Lists (Orthodontic Treatment)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the size of the waiting list and (b) the average waiting time for orthodontic treatment in each health board area in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [66607]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 20 January 1999]: Most orthodontic treatments carried out within the Hospital and Community Health Service settings are undertaken on an outpatient basis. The latest available information on the mean waiting time for a first orthodontic outpatient appointment, by area of residence, is given in the table. Information on the number of patients waiting for outpatient appointments on a given date is not collected centrally.

A major proportion of orthodontic treatment is undertaken in general dental practice, rather than in hospitals or the Community Health Service and no information is held centrally on patient waiting times for such treatment.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

NHS in Scotland: mean waiting times for a first orthodontic outpatient appointment during year ended 30 September 1998 [1] by area of residence [2]

Red Squirrel Conservation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, when he last met officials of the Forestry Commission, they discussed matters relating to the Red Squirrel Biodiversity Action Plan and Forest Enterprise's national plan for red squirrel conservation; and if he will make a statement. [66994]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 26 January 1999]: My right hon. Friend has not discussed these matters with officials of the Forestry Commission. However, as part of Red Squirrel Week in September last year, my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for fisheries and the countryside at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food launched the Forestry Commission's Practice Note on Red Squirrel Conservation. The Practice Note offers advice to woodland managers and conservationists which is based on the latest scientific research. It was prepared on behalf of the UK Red Squirrel Group which is the lead partner for the Red Squirrel Species Action Plan under the UK Biodiversity Action Plan.

Ceulan Forest

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer on 16 November 1998, Official Report, column 582, on woodland areas, if the Ceulan forest has been offered for sale; and if he will make a statement. [68152]

Mr. Macdonald: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its Chief Executive, Dr. Bob McIntosh, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Bob McIntosh to Mr. Christopher Gill, dated 2 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your Question No 68152 asking if Esgair Ceulan (Ceulan Forest) has been offered for sale.

Ceulan Forest was offered for sale on the open market on 4 November 1998 through local agents, Strutt & Parker. A closing date of 15 December was set, four offers were received and the highest was accepted. The matter is in the hands of the Commission's lawyers and completion is expected by the end of March.

The wood has a number of public footpaths and bridleways but you will be pleased to learn that a Public Access Agreement has been signed with Powys County Council. Public access to the whole wood will therefore be protected after the sale is completed.

I hope this answers your question.

Research and Development

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the research and development expenditure by (a) his Department and (b) the NHS, indicating separately that on health technology assessment in each year since 1992. [68208]

Mr. Galbraith: The Chief Scientist Office (CSO) within The Scottish Office Department of Health (SODoH) has responsibility for managing funds which support research activity to further the development of patient care and health services within the NHS in Scotland. CSO expenditure on research and development (R&D) for each year since 1992–93 is given in column (a) of the following table. CSO R&D expenditure on health technology assessment cannot be identified separately for each year since 1992–93 except at disproportionate cost. For 1998–99, it is expected to be about £1.9 million.

Up to and including 1995–96, Additional Cost of Teaching (ACT) was an element of the SODoH revenue allocations to Health Boards to protect the NHS support for both clinical teaching and clinical research costs. It is not possible to identify NHS R&D expenditure separately until 1996–97, when those within the NHS who were delivering R&D support services were invited to bid for costs incurred from the R&D Support Fund. NHS expenditure on R&D since 1996–97 is shown in column (b) of the following table.

Under the R&D Support Fund bidding procedure, bidders are asked to identify research activity areas, but these may be broad and encompass a range of subjects. It is not possible therefore to identify separately NHS R&D expenditure on health technology assessment except at disproportionate cost. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

[2] Estimate

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state, in respect of the original advice given by the Crown Office to the Procurator Fiscal in Dingwall over proceeding with criminal prosecutions of those people refusing to pay the Skye Bridge tolls, on what date the Procurator Fiscal requested the advice; on what date the advice was tendered; by what means; who signed the communication; and if he will make a statement. [68339]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 1 February 1999]: I am informed by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate that the Procurator Fiscal at Dingwell first wrote to the Crown Office on 17 and 26 October 1995 in connection with possible criminal proceedings against persons refusing to pay tolls on the Skye Bridge. The Deputy Crown Agent replied on 6 November conveying the Lord Advocate's instructions that the Procurator Fiscal should carry out further work before seeking instructions from Crown Counsel on whether to take proceedings.

Thereafter there was further correspondence between the Procurator Fiscal and the Crown Office which culminated in the Deputy Crown Agent writing to the Procurator Fiscal on 5 January 1996 conveying the instructions of the then Lord Advocate about proceedings.

The hon. Gentlemen will recall that, in a written answer of 16 January 1996, Official Report, column 546, he was advised that the Procurator Fiscal had been instructed by the Lord Advocate to institute criminal proceedings in respect of all instances where this was a sufficiency of evidence and the charges were then in course of preparation.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

General Affairs Council (Brussels)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the General Affairs Council held in Brussels on 25 and 26 January; and if he will make a statement. [68321]

Ms Quin: 1. The General Affairs Council in Brussels on 25 January 1999 adopted the A points listed in document 5416/98 and noted the resolutions, decisions and opinions adopted by the European Parliament in its sessions of 2–3 December and 14–18 December listed in documents 12779/98 and 14011/98. Copies of the documents listing the A points and resolutions will be placed in the House Libraries as soon as they become available.

2. The Council began with the debate on the Presidency programme, introduced by the German Foreign Minister.

3. On Agenda 2000, the Council agreed (subject to agreement on the final package) two points of detail on the Structural Funds. First, it agreed a lower performance reserve (sometimes referred to as the efficiency reserve) than that proposed by the Commission and that Member States (rather than the Commission) should have the right to allocate these funds in accordance with their own criteria and circumstances. Second, it was agreed that it was not necessary for areas designated to receive State Aids (under Article 92(3)(c) to correspond exactly with areas receiving Structural Funds, although Member States should aim to increase the level of convergence. The Council discussed the importance of achieving worthwhile CAP reform within the limits of available financial resources.

4. The German Presidency then set out its work programme on EU enlargement. Two Deputy level accession conferences (19 April; 19 May) and a Ministerial level meeting (22 June) will be held. The Presidency plans to open negotiations on a further eight chapters, bringing the number of chapters open to a total of 15 out of 31 by the end of the Presidency.

5. The Council noted the agenda for the EU/Russia summit on 18 February in Moscow and agreed to the Foreign Secretary's proposal that it should include nuclear waste.

6. On Iraq, the Council considered developments in the UN Security Council and discussed a possible EU initiative aimed at enhancing the role of the EU in efforts to improve the humanitarian situation in Iraq.

7. On Kosovo, the Council expressed outrage at the massacre of civilians in Racak and recalled the message which the EU had delivered to President Milosevic. It also condemned UCK provocations. It welcomed the results of the Contact Group meeting in London on 22 January, in particular the goal of early negotiations on a political solution, following a meeting of the Contact Group at Ministerial level, to be held as soon as possible. It repeated its support for the work of Ambassadors Hill and Petritsch towards a negotiated settlement, and for the KVM. It agreed that officials should step up work on strengthening sanctions, including measures to stop the flow of money and weapons to Kosovo armed groups. It stressed the importance of the Kosovo Albanian leadership forming a fully representative negotiating team. It also recalled the role which the EU was ready to play in support of a future political solution, including through reconstruction. It extended the mandate of Mr. Felipe Gonzalez as EU Special Representative for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; and adopted a Regulation exempting Montenegro Airlines from the JAT flight ban.

8. On Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Council welcomed the outcome of the Madrid Peace Implementation; reiterated its full support for the High Representative Mr. Carlos Westendorp; and urged the formation of a new Government in Republika Srpska, determined to comply with the Dayton agreement.

9. On Albania, the Council welcomed the recent meeting between Prime Minister Majko and leader of the Democratic Party (DP), Berisha. The Council condemned the DP's continued boycott of parliament. The Council urged Albania to contribute to the efforts of the international community to bring the parties to the conflict on Kosovo to the negotiating table.

10. Ministers endorsed and mandated follow-up action on the operational points contained in the EU's human rights declaration of 10 December. This enables work to begin on the Anglo-German initiative of an annual EU Human Rights Report. The report will bring to public attention the EU's activities to promote human rights worldwide.

11. The Presidency briefed the Council on the forthcoming visit to the Middle East by Foreign Minister Fischer, accompanied by the EU Special Envoy to the Middle East, Miguel Moratinos.

12. There was no consensus on a proposal by the Presidency to adopt the Code of Conduct on Arms Exports as a Common Position under Article J.2 of the TEU.

13. The Council reiterated its support for the democratically elected Government of Sierra Leone. It reiterated that the existing Common Position does not prevent the supply outside Nigeria of military equipment for ECOMOG, and agreed that the scope for further facilitating peacekeeping efforts should be examined.

Afghanistan

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom will continue to impose an arms embargo on Afghanistan in line with the EU's Common Position of 17 December 1996. [69080]

Mr. Fatchett: We remain committed to the EU arms embargo against Afghanistan which the UK interprets as covering all goods and technology entered on Part III to Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended.

Following consultations with this Department and the Ministry of Defence, the Department of Trade and Industry recently issued a licence for the export of mine clearance equipment for use by the Halo Trust to aid their demining activities in Afghanistan. The grant of this licence is for humanitarian purposes, and falls outside the scope of the embargo.

Council of the European Union

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for February and the major European Union events for the next six months. [69081]

Ms Quin: The information is as follows:

UNHCR (Land Rovers)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the proposed export of two armoured Land Rovers to the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Belgrade in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [69082]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have granted a licence for the export to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) of two armoured vehicles based on the Land Rover Defender 110 for use by UNHCR personnel. Given the key humanitarian role played by the UNHCR in the FRY, and the obvious need for the UNHCR to be able to protect staff serving with its office in Belgrade, including against land mines, we were glad to be able to approve this licence. The UN Sanctions Committee appointed under UNSCR 1160 has raised no objection to it.

Bosnia (Ballistic Undervest Export)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the proposed export of a ballistic undervest to the European Community Monitoring Mission in Bosnia. [69083]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have granted a licence for the export to Bosnia of a ballistic undervest for use by the Paymaster General at the European Community Monitoring Mission (ECMM) in Sarajevo. We were glad to approve this export licence in view of the obvious need for the ECMM to be able to protect its staff involved in international peace-keeping activities in the former Yugoslavia.

Cornish Language

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the future of the Cornish language in relation the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages. [68636]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The position of the Cornish language in relation to the Council of Europe's European Charter for Regional and Minority Languages has yet to be decided. It is a matter of domestic rather than foreign policy.

EU Languages

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many and what percentage of EU citizens speak English as their first language; and how many and what percentage of EU citizens have been taught or have an elementary command of the English language. [67431]

Ms Quin: According to the Eurobarometer survey, in November 1995 approximately 16–17 per cent. of EU citizens regarded English as their mother tongue. The same survey also shows that one EU citizen in three (of those who do not class English as their mother tongue) regarded themselves as able to hold a conversation in English. EUROSTAT's 1997 figures on foreign language teaching in the EU show that 26 per cent. of pupils in primary education and 90 per cent. of pupils in secondary school were taught English.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the recognised and minority languages of the EU in order of their estimated number of speakers. [67432]

Ms Quin: There is no system for formally recognising languages within the EU, beyond the 12 languages used for official business. A report prepared for the European Commission identified over 30 minority languages spoken within the EU. These are:

Direct Voting Elections

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to seek changes to EC law to permit amendment of Annex II of the 1976 legislative measure of the EEC on direct voting elections by majority. [68729]

Ms Quin: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 214.

Kosovo

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the principal points of agreement of (a) the Contact Group-endorsed framework document and (b) the Holbrooke Package for Kosovo; if he will make a statement on progress towards the full implementation of each point; and if he will place copies of the documents in the Library. [67433]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As the statement issued at the end of the Contact Group Ministerial meeting in London on 29 January made clear, the Contact Group framework document is being further refined in advance of the planned meeting at Rambouillet. Putting the text as it stands into the public domain at this time would not help the search for a political settlement in Kosovo.

Copies of the agreements with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia for the setting up of the OSCE ground verification mission and the NATO air verification mission have already been placed in the House Library. It is for NATO and the OSCE to assess compliance with these agreements and with the relevant Security Council Resolutions. To date, neither side is in full compliance.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary reported to the House on 1 February 1999, Official Report, columns 597–608, on the latest moves towards a negotiated settlement following the 29 January Contact Group meeting.

Chile

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit in the Library a copy of the four reports dispatched by the British Embassy in Madrid to his Department relating to Judge Garzon's investigations into Chile. [67956]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: No. The four reports dispatched by the British Embassy in Madrid relating to Judge Garzon's investigation into Chile were internal communications between the Embassy and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and also covered wider issues. On the specific question of Judge Garzon's investigations into Chile the reports were as follows:

12 November 1997: in the context of reporting developments in the case of Adolfo Scilingo a reference to the fact that Garzon's next step might be to issue warrants against Chileans (unnamed).

23 January 1998: a further report on actions against Scilingo, where the Public Prosecutor of the Audiencia Nacional had ordered Garzon to close the file. The report mentioned that investigations of Chileans, including Pinochet, continued.

15 October 1998: a report indicating that Garzon wished the Commission Rogatoire to be processed quickly and that what he had in mind was issuing an international arrest warrant. The report says nothing on timing of the warrant.

16 October 1998: a comment on the previous day's report, clarifying that the intention was possibly to issue a warrant while Pinochet was in the UK, but without specifying timing.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Pupil Registration Regulations

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to amend the Pupil Registration Regulations; and if he will make a statement. [68624]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to amend the regulations. Advice on registration issues is however included in our new guidance on "Social Inclusion: Pupil Support", which was issued for consultation on 22 January 1999. We shall of course consider the case for any amendments in the context of responses to that document.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will (a) account for the difference between outturn departmental spending in Table A1 of the Comprehensive Spending Review and outturn departmental spending in Table 1.2 of the 1998–99 Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis for his Department for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96 and (iv) 1996–97 and (b) provide forecast figures for departmental spending for his Department in (1) 1997–98, (2) 1998–99, (3) 1999–2000, (4) 2000–01 and (5) 2001–02 on a comparable basis to Table 1.2 of the 1998–99 Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis. [68380]

Mr. Mudie: The figures in Table 1.2 in the Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis relating to DfEE include net lending to students but exclude subsidy payments and an element for bad debt. The equivalent figures in Table A1 of the Comprehensive Spending Review White paper exclude net lending to students but include subsidy payments and an element for bad debt.

It is not possible to provide forecast figures for departmental spending for DfEE for 1998–99, 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 on a comparable basis to Table 1.2 of the 1998–99 Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis. The data in PESA give each Department's Control Total for the years in question. That method of controlling expenditure has been replaced with Departmental Expenditure Limits. Control Total data and Departmental Expenditure Limits data are not comparable. With that caveat, the information requested is shown in the following table:

DfEE Spending plans

Year	£ million
1997–98[1]	14,622
1998–99[2]	14,166
1999–2000[2]	15,473
2000–01[2]	17,295
2001–02[2]	18,612

Note:
1 The figure for 1997–98 is the Control Total for DfEE in Table 1.2 of the Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis 1998–99.
2 The figures for other years are the Department's Expenditure Limits in Table 6.1 of the Comprehensive Spending Review White Paper, Cm 4011.

TECs (North-east)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the cash balances held by each of the training and enterprise councils in the north-east Region, as at December 1998. [68317]

Mr. Mudie: The following table provides the cash balances held by each of the Training and Enterprise Councils in the north-east as at March 1998. Information as at December 1998 is not available.

TEC	Cash balance as at March 1998
County Durham	8,919,543
Northumberland	3,145,209
Tees Valley	8,101,000
Tyneside	6,696,000
Sunderland City	3,357,671
Total	30,219,423

Disability Rights Commission

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 97, if he will set out his Department's estimate of the associated costs of the proposals for the Disability Rights Commission to undertake (a) working towards the elimination of discrimination against disabled persons, (b) promoting the equalisation of opportunities for disabled persons in all fields of activity and (c) reviewing the working of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [68532]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 1 February 1999]: A provisional annual allocation of £11 million has been made for the Disability Rights Commission (DRC) in 2000–01 and 2001–02. It will be for the Commission when it is established to decide how to allocate its resources. Meanwhile interim estimates indicate some 10 per cent. of that annual budget may be devoted to administrative costs; 40 per cent. to advice and information, conciliation, assistance to individuals and formal investigations; 30 per cent. to promotional work, and 20 per cent. to policy work. Estimates are not available in the precise form requested by the hon. Member.

The Government will keep the annual allocations under view in the light of operational experience of the Commission.

Hospitality Industry

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many New Deal places have been offered by the United Kingdom hospitality industry; and how many have been taken up. [68862]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Peter Ainsworth, dated 2 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply direct to your question regarding the number of New Deal places offered by the United Kingdom hospitality industry; and how many have been taken up. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

Up to the end of December some 57,000 young people between the ages of 18 and 24 had entered jobs after having started the New Deal. Of these the available data indicates that around 8 per cent. had entered jobs in the hospitality sector. No similar information is available specifically in respect of job offers or, as yet in relation to entrants to job under the New Deal for those aged over 25 and for lone parents.

I hope this is helpful.

Highcliffe School

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his oral statement of 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 307, on Highcliffe School, what is the basis of the calculation that Dorset has been allocated a 7.3 per cent. increase in standard spending assessment for education in 1999–2000; and if he will express the increased allocation as a percentage per pupil. [68990]

Ms Estelle Morris: Dorset's provisional education standard spending assessment for 1999–2000 represents an underlying increase of £9.2 million or 7.3 per cent.. These figures illustrate the effect of allowing for local authority changes of function and taking account of new arrangements for funding music and student support. The allocation represents a year-on-year increase in overall education SSA funding per pupil of 4.3 per cent..

Millennium Compliance

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many millennium bug-busters have successfully completed their training to date. [68727]

Mr. Mudie: The latest figures show that 8,916 trainees have started Bug Buster courses, and of these 7,209 have completed. A further 9,011 are booked.

Education Action Zones

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines his Department has issued on the calculation of the value of gifts in kind donated by businesses to Education Action Zones. [68937]

Ms Estelle Morris: We issued guidance in September 1998, and supplemented this in January 1999. I have placed copies of the guidance in the Library.

Teacher Training

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the targets set by his Department for the number of students entering teacher training in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000, by phase. [68936]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the target intake to initial teacher training for the years 1997–98 to 1999–2000, by phase.

Target recruitment to initial teacher training (ITT) courses in England, 1997–98 to 1999–2000

	Primary	Secondary	Total
1997–98	11,050	19,500	30,550
1998–99	11,500	19,100	30,600
1999–2000	12,000	17,210	29,210

Infant Class Sizes

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effects of his decision to cap the amount allowed per teacher in local education authority bids to reduce infant class sizes on (a) employment of classroom assistants and (b) junior class sizes. [68813]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have made it clear that we will provide sufficient funding to enable all LEAs to reduce class sizes without adversely affecting the employment of classroom assistants or the size of junior classes.

Employment Service (Commercial Agency Vacancies)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is his Department's policy on the acceptance by the Employment Service of job vacancies for public display from commercial employment agencies; [67989]

(2) if he intends to require the Employment Service to charge a fee to commercial employment agencies for advertising job vacancies on their behalf; [67990]

(3) if he will estimate the marginal costs annually to the Employment Service of processing requests from commercial employment agencies for advertising job vacancies. [67991]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. David Kidney, dated 2 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply direct to your questions concerning the relationship that exists between the Employment Service and private employment agencies. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

The Employment Service has an agreement with the Federation of Recruitment and Employment Services (FRES) that Jobcentres will accept individual vacancies for display from employment agencies and businesses, provided they are satisfied that a real vacancy exists. The agreement makes clear that this is at the discretion of the Jobcentre Manager who will take into account the needs of the local labour market and priorities for display space. This agreement was set up to help the Employment Service to fulfil its responsibility to unemployed jobseekers to provide the most opportunities possible for them to find work, and has been instrumental in helping unemployed people into jobs. However, the Employment Service will not handle generic vacancies from employment agencies that seek simply to build up a list of potential jobseekers for the future.

There are currently no plans for the Employment Service to charge a fee to commercial employment agencies for advertising their vacancies. This is because we view such vacancies as a valuable source of jobs to help unemployed jobseekers improve their prospects of gaining work. We would, therefore, wish to avoid deterring agencies from placing vacancies by charging fees which could in turn deny jobseekers the best possible chance of securing a job.

I am afraid that we do not collect information on the marginal costs of processing requests from commercial employment agencies for advertising job vacancies.

I hope this is helpful in clarifying the position.

CABINET OFFICE

Constituency Visits

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make it his policy to ensure the co-ordination of the advice provided to Ministers in respect of informing hon. Members prior to visits to their constituencies. [68933]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Guidance to Ministers on their responsibilities in relation to informing hon. Members of visits to their constituencies is set out in paragraph 79 of the Ministerial Code.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Badger Culling Scheme

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to appoint external auditors for the Government's badger culling scheme. [64836]

Mr. Rooker: Following the issue of invitations to tender, an external auditor was selected in November 1998 to carry out, during 1999, a detailed audit of culling trial field operations. A contract is being finalised. We also intend to appoint an external assessor to evaluate the method of despatch used for badgers.

Animal Slaughter

Angela Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement regarding (a) the slaughter of animals outside slaughterhouses without pre-stunning and (b) the operation of EC Directive 93/119; [68621]

(2) if he will review UK legislation in relation to the implementation of Directive 93/119 regarding the slaughter of animals. [68622]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 1 February 1999]: EU Directive 93/119/EC on the protection of animals at the time of slaughter or killing requires that animals must be stunned before slaughter, but permits Member States not to apply that rule when animals are killed without stunning for reasons of religion. The United Kingdom has provided such an exception, and the Government fully respect the right of Jews and Muslims to carry out religious slaughter in accordance with their religious beliefs.

The European Commission is of the view that Directive 93/119 requires religious slaughter to take place only in a slaughterhouse. The Government wish to bring our national implementing regulations into line with this view, and on 7 December 1998 circulated proposals to change the Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations 1995 to require religious slaughter to be carried out only in licensed red meat slaughterhouses or licensed or officially regulated poultry slaughterhouses. We are considering the results of that consultation and of meetings with organisations representing the Jewish and Muslim communities.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the increased distance meat animals travel to slaughter as a result of the closure of smaller abattoirs. [68126]

Mr. Morley: This Department receives many letters covering a range of animal welfare issues. Some of our correspondents have, amongst other things, expressed their concern that abattoir closures may affect the distance animals travel to slaughter.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68416]

Mr. Morley: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant session.

Farm Produce Markets

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to provide funding for the establishment of regional farm produce markets; [68069]

(2) what representations he has received on the establishment of a regional farm produce market for the North West; [68070]

(3) if he will list the regional farm produce markets in the United Kingdom. [68071]

Mr. Rooker: [holding answer 28 January 1999]: The Ministry does not keep lists of farmers' markets held in the UK and has not received representations on the establishment of a regional farm produce market for the North West. I have no plans to fund the establishment of farmers markets but am keen to encourage them. The Ministry will be holding a seminar in March to promote the concept of farmers' markets.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the risks genetically modified animal feeds pose to humans. [68774]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes rigorously assesses all genetically modified feed material from the point of view of the impact that such feed may have on human health.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list his Department's responsibilities and policies in relation to genetically modified crops and the departments with which he liaises on this issue; and where the lead departmental responsibility rests for each issue. [67663]

Mr. Rooker: My Department's policy is that public health and environmental safety are the fundamental priorities on genetically modified (GM) crops. We believe that the UK agriculture industry should not be denied access to the benefits of GM technology, but that all justified concerns about it must be addressed.

MAFF shares responsibility with the Department of Health for the safety of GM foods. It also shares responsibility with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (who take the lead) on the approval of the release of GM crops into the environment. MAFF takes the lead in a number of areas relevant to GM crops; the agricultural implications of the introduction of GM crops into UK agriculture; plant breeders rights and National Listing and seed certification for all varieties of the main agricultural and vegetable species; and the approval of pesticides, including those to be used on GM herbicide tolerant crops, and GM micro-organisms to be used for plant protection purposes.

Government policy on biotechnology, including GM crops, is co-ordinated by the Ministerial Group on Biotechnology, which is chaired by the Minister for the Cabinet Office, as announced by the Prime Minister on 21 October 1998, Official Report, column 1134. In addition, officials across Government are in regular contact on biotechnology issues.

Fisheries

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 1999,

Official Report, column 454, on fisheries, if he will list those EU countries with which he has discussed the decentralisation of fisheries control to zonal committees within member states; which states indicated their support in principle; and if he will make a statement. [68149]

Mr. Morley: I have not yet discussed with other Member States the ideas of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations and the Scottish Fishermen's Federation concerning zonal committees. However, the NFFO and SFF have themselves been discussing their ideas with their counterparts in other Member States and I shall be interested to see the outcome of these contacts.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67836]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office, on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296. I confirm that future White and Green Papers issued by MAFF will be made available on standard floppy disk in a suitable form, on request.

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296.

Pigs

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish a table in the Official Report to show for each month in 1998 the (a) profit and (b) loss in respect of (i) each weaner pig produced and (ii) each finished bacon pig from the Government Agricultural College Pig Unit or as much of such information as is readily available. [67779]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Government College Pig Unit operates a birth to bacon system and the financial records are accurate only for finished bacon pigs. Financial records are not maintained for weaner pig production.

Monthly figures are very variable in a 100-sow unit because numbers sold in a month can vary markedly and meal deliveries can also distort the picture.

Quarterly figures give a clearer picture and are provided for gross margin/bacon pig and net margin/bacon pig.

Table to show profit/loss per bacon pig—1998

Quarter	Gross margin[1]/pig	Profit/loss/pig
January-March 1998	8.57	–8.43
April-June 1998	16.34	–0.66
July-September 1998	–11.96	–28.96
October-December 1998	–13.19	–30.19

[1] Gross margin is net output less variable costs e.g. feed, vet bill, replacement costs.

Assumed fixed costs of £17 per pig are used to calculate profit/loss per pig. This is typical of pig units. Fixed costs for the college herd are difficult to isolate from teaching costs. Fixed costs include labour, buildings, water, electricity etc.

For 1998 overall, the College Pig Unit recorded a gross margin of -£1.01 and a loss of £18.01 per pig.

Health Technology Assessment

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the research and development by (a) her Department and (b) the NHS, indicating separately that on health technology assessment each year since 1992. [68209]

Mr. McFall: The research expenditure of the Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland) in the period 1992–93 to 1997–98 was as shown in the table. Expenditure on health technology assessment could be identified only at disproportionate cost. In 1996–97, total Health and Personal Social Services expenditure on research was estimated to be approximately £12 million. Totals for other years, and separate identification of expenditure on health technology assessment for 1996–97, cannot be produced except at disproportionate expense.

Research expenditure by Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland)

Year	£ million
1992–93	1.62
1993–94	1.83
1994–95	1.50
1995–96	2.25
1996–97	1.30
1997–98	2.10

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what responsibilities which her Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by her Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to her Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68409]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Comprehensive Spending Review did not lead directly to any of the Secretary of State's responsibilities being discontinued, transferred or added over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. Under devolution, many of the functions currently the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland will transfer to the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of her Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68425]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

Criminal Records Office Forms

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the rules governing the use of the CRO form by the RUC; what protection exists for vulnerable witnesses against its misuse; and how many CRO forms were completed by how many individuals in the last year for which figures are available. [67435]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 2 February 1999]: The RUC use a number of different forms associated with the Criminal Records Office (CRO). Unfortunately it is not clear to which of these my hon. Friend refers and it is not therefore possible to answer his question. If he would care to write giving further details I will ensure he receives a full response, a copy of which will be placed in the library.

WALES

Class Sizes

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage of (a) five-year-olds, (b) six-year-olds and (c) seven-year-olds educated in class sizes of 30 or less (i) currently and (ii) in May 1997. [68612]

Mr. Hain: The January 1998 annual Schools' Census showed the following percentages of pupils in Wales were being educated in classes of 30 or less.

Year	Usual age of pupils	Percentage
Reception	5	74.3
Year 1	6	66.4
Year 2	7	62.5
Other key stage 1 classes of mixed year groups	—	74.9

Comparable information is not available for earlier years.

At January 1998, there were 30,734 pupils in key stage 1 classes of over 30 pupils. On the basis of grant approvals for local authorities to employ additional teachers from September 1998, it is estimated that 23,525 fewer pupils are being educated in classes of this size than would have been the case without grant. The 1999 Schools' Census will give the actual position.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate (a) how many schools in Wales have requested additional funding in order to reduce infant class sizes to under 30 pupils in the last 12 months and (b) the number of such requests that were successful. [68730]

Mr. Hain: Local education authorities bid for 413 schools to receive funding for infant class size reduction in 1998–99. Bids for 302 schools were successful. LEAs have bid for 570 schools to receive Infant Class Size Reduction Grant in 1999–2000. Bids are currently being assessed and LEAs will be advised of the successful schools in March.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Education Action Zones

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many education action zones have been set up in Wales. [68611]

Mr. Hain: None.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce education action zones in Wales. [68610]

Mr. Hain: We have made it clear that any decision on the introduction of Education Action Zones in Wales will be taken only after full and extensive consultation.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

North Wales Child Abuse Inquiry

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the report of the North Wales Child Abuse Inquiry to be published. [68841]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will arrange for publication of the Tribunal's report when it has been completed: this is not yet the case.

Local Government Expenditure

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on local government revenue spending and grant support in 1999–2000. [69460]

Mr. Michael: I met the Welsh Local Government Association on 15 December and Welsh police authorities on 4 January to discuss the proposed settlement that I announced in December. I have given very careful consideration to their comments on it and to the many comments that I have received from hon. Members and others.

I have decided that, net of specific grants, total standard spending (TSS) for 1999–2000 will be £2,986.6 million and net aggregate external finance will be £2,570.2 million. These final figures represent increases on 1998–99 of 5.1 per cent. and 4.8 per cent. respectively.

Both figures are £0.2 million higher than the provisional amounts I announced on 9 December, because of a small increase in funding to match grants for education, support and training. The extra amount within net TSS for education is also increased, to £70.2 million.

In response to concerns expressed to me during the consultation period, I have decided to alter the formula for calculating the capital charges element of standard spending assessments (SSAs). The effect of the change is to increase SSAs for police authorities by £1.8 million. Details of final SSAs for councils and police authorities are shown in the table.

It also takes account of other minor changes between provisional and final SSAs caused by data changes.

The House will have the opportunity to debate my decisions when it considers the Local Government Finance Report (Wales) 1999–2000 on 11 February.

The breakdown of net TSS is:

	£ million
SSAs for county and county borough councils	2,804.7
SSAs for police authorities	180.1
Payments to bodies specified under section 76 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988	1.8
Total standard spending net of specific grants	2,986.6

Net aggregate external finance for 1999–2000 will consist of revenue support grant (RSG) of £1,892.0 million, council tax reduction scheme grant (damping grant) of £22.2 million and redistributed non-domestic rates of £656.0 million.

The details of the council tax damping scheme remain as I announced in December. The total amount of damping grant and the damping grant entitlement for each council have changed because of changes between provisional and final SSAs. The entitlement for each council is shown in the table at the end of the answer.

The settlement represents a significant real-terms increase for local government, and delivers the Government's priorities for education, social services and other key local services. Within the increase in net TSS, there is £70.2 million extra for education which will cover the cost of the review body's recent recommendations on teachers' pay.

I am not announcing capping criteria in advance for 1999–2000. I expect councils and police authorities to budget prudently. Capping powers remain available to me if any authority makes an excessive increase in its council tax.

Finally, the arrangements for council tax benefit subsidy limitation remain as set out in my answer of 14 December 1995, Official Report, column 390. Guideline figures "are consistent with an average increase of 7.2 per cent. in council tax which, in broad terms, equates to a budget increase of 5.9 per cent. over this year for each council, subject to allowing each council to spend the increase in its SSA in full; on council tax above the guideline figure, subsidy would be withdrawn at the rate of 50 per cent."

[1] Damping grant is paid to councils only

[2] Guideline figures have been set for councils only for 1999–2000. The National Assembly will be able to extend the arrangements for council tax benefit subsidy limitation to police authorities for 2000–01.

In future this will be the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the operation of the Social Exclusion Unit in Wales. [69036]

Mr. Hain: The remit of the Social Exclusion Unit covers England only. However, its members and officials from the Welsh Office keep in regular contact to ensure that best practice and good ideas are shared. From time to time, the Unit also draws on expertise from Wales or visits projects in the Principality.

I am a member of the Ministerial Network which guides the work of the Unit. This ensures that Wales has a voice at an early stage in the development of policy with an impact beyond England and that Welsh experience and innovations can be considered as part of the wider process of policy formulation.

The Secretary of State has ensured that policies to combat social exclusion are given renewed priority in the Welsh Office and in future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

North West Wales NHS Trust

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of (a) the applicants and (b) those interviewed for the Chairmanship of the North West Wales NHS Trust were (i) male and (ii) female. [69034]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Eight people applied for the Chair of the North West Wales NHS Trust, all male. Three were shortlisted and interviewed for the Chair appointment.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Health Authority Funding

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was distributed to each health authority and NHS trust in Wales in each of the last three years. [69035]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Department provided funding to health authorities to purchase health care as set out in the following table. NHS trusts receive most of their funding from their local health authority with additional amounts from other health bodies under contracts to provide health care. A table showing the total income of NHS trusts is also provided.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Electronic Warfare

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 75, on electronic warfare, if he will take lead responsibility for electronic warfare attacks on (a) the banking system, (b) utilities, (c) telecommunications, (d) air traffic control, (e) areas currently the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence and (f) areas currently within the responsibility of the Cabinet Office. [68312]

Mr. Straw: Following my answer on 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 79, there is to be no change of responsibilities between Departments. I believe that it is better to build upon the relationships and responsibilities that Departments already have with the relevant parts of the private sector. I see no good reason to change this.

My taking the lead responsibility within Government for the measures proposed serves to put onto a more formal footing the liaison over the security arrangements necessary to protect our vital national assets.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 75, on electronic warfare, if his answer was the statement referred to by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Warley (Mr. Spellar), on 4 November 1998, Official Report, column 992. [68347]

Mr. Straw: Yes.

Police Recruitment

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of (a) initial inquiries, (b) applications and (c) successful applications, for new police force recruitment, in each police force, in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [68950]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not held centrally on the number of initial recruitment inquiries made to police forces. Information on the number of applications and the number of new recruits to police forces is shown in the tables.

Prisons Inspectorate (Reports)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates his Department received each report from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons and the date each report was published since May 1997; how many reports are currently being considered by his Department prior to publication; and when they were received by his Department. [68955]

Mr. George Howarth: Since 1 May 1997, 71 reports have been received from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons. To date, 60 reports have been published. The remaining 11 reports will be published in due course, in line with the agreed protocol. The detailed information is set out in the table.

Premier Prison, Doncaster

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the procedures used at Doncaster Coroner's Court in relation to the completed inquests into the suicides of prisoners held in the Premier Prison in Doncaster in 1997. [68580]

Mr. George Howarth: We have no plans to do so. Any dissatisfaction with the exercise of the coroner's discretion is a matter for the courts. Complaints about the conduct of the coroner or the administration of the court may be referred to the Home Office.

Town Centres (Safety)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward proposals on safety in town centres. [68783]

Mr. Boateng: Our proposals on community safety in towns and elsewhere are contained in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, which lays a duty on the local authority and police in every area, in partnership with a wide range of other bodies, to carry out a full audit of the levels and patterns of crime and disorder in that area. Based upon the findings of the audit and after consultation with the community about them, police and council must then formulate and implement a strategy for the reduction of crime and disorder. Where the audit identifies crime or disorder problems in town centres as a major concern, we would expect the strategy to address them.

Immigration Offences

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has issued on access of persons detained at police stations for immigration offences to hon. Members. [68797]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office has not issued guidelines on access to Members of Parliament by persons detained under Immigration Act powers and held at police stations. Such detainees may be allowed to contact a Member of Parliament, or anyone else and to receive a visit from a Member of Parliament, or anyone else, at the discretion of the police custody officer.

Home Office booklets have been issued providing "Information for Members of Parliament about immigration and nationality enquiries" and "Guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases". These booklets seek to help Members of Parliament decide whether or not to make representations in immigration cases and to decide whether those representations should be directed to Home Office Ministers or direct to the Immigration and Nationality Department.

Police Authority Funding

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the final funding allocations for police authorities in England and Wales will be in 1999–2000. [69600]

Mr. Straw: Allocations for each police authority are set out in the table. The table also shows allocations approved by Parliament for 1998–99.

[1] Rounded to the nearest £100,000. The Allocation is the sum of: Police Grant, Transitional Grant, Police SSA, Capital Finance SSA, SSA Reduction Grant and Central Support Protection Grant.

[2] Figure for the Metropolitan Police does not include funding allocated to the Receiver under the Environmental, Protective and Cultural Services SSA for school crossing patrols, Magistrates' Courts and the Probation Service. It does include its Special Payment.

[3] Figure for the City includes Police SSA, Grant and SSA Reduction Grant, but excludes other SSAs (e.g. Capital Financing) and Central Support Protection Grant. These are allocated to the Common Council of the City of London as a whole in respect of all its functions.

Security Service Files

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the report of the Advisory Council on Public Records on their review of the criteria used by the Security Service in deciding whether to retain files on grounds of historical interest. [69601]

Mr. Straw: On 29 July 1998, Official Report, columns 251–54, I announced to the House that, with the approval of the Lord Chancellor, I had invited the Advisory Council on Public Records to review the criteria which the Security Service employs to select files for permanent preservation on grounds of historical interest. The Chairman of the Council, the Master of the Rolls, accepted the invitation and submitted the Council's report to me on 21 December.

The Council's Report concludes with the following recommendations:

1. The following criteria should be added to those which currently guide the selection of files of historical interest:

   i. Organisations and individuals on which security action was required but which were not of great significance nationally or internationally at the time when the action took place.

   Selection should be carried out to show the geographical, national and social range of individuals and organisations with which the Service had dealings. Full details of this criterion to be developed within the operational selection policy.

   ii. Events with which the Service had an active involvement but which were neither newsworthy at the time nor historically significant if considered in isolation.

   Selection should be carried out in order to reflect both developments in the Service's own activities and policies and the social, economic and political context within which the Service operated. Full details of this criterion to be developed within the operational selection policy.

   iii. A sample taken from all files on individuals on whom, after initial investigation, no security action was taken and from the files on individuals not selected under other criteria.

   At a minimum this should be a sample of one out of 100 of such files. The details of the sampling method should be considered as part of the development of an operational selection policy. The taking of a sample is dependent on the preservation of all means of reference.

   iv. All policy and subject files, other than those of an ephemeral nature.

   v. All registers and other means of reference to policy files and to files on subjects, organisations and individuals.

2. The Security Service should work with the Public Record Office to develop an operational selection policy based on the criteria as amended, for completion in 2000–01.

Having consulted the Director General of the Security Service, I have decided to accept that Council's recommendations in full. Additionally, and in response to an observation elsewhere in the report, officials of the Public Record Office with the necessary security clearance will, in future, be invited to examine files which have been earmarked for destruction following review by the Security Service. This will provide a useful measure of external scrutiny of the selection process.

I am most grateful to the Advisory Council for undertaking this valuable review, and for its helpful and constructive recommendations. I am placing a copy of the Report in the Library.

European Elections

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what educational publicity campaign he plans, at what cost, to inform electors of the proportional voting system to be used to elect United Kingdom members of the European Parliament in June. [69033]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for East Carmarthen and Dinefwr (Mr. Williams) on 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 327.

School Crossing Patrols

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many school crossing patrol positions there are in England and Wales; and how many vacancies there are. [68814]

Mr. Boateng: I understand from the Local Government Management Board that in 1996, the most recent year for which a figure is available, there were 18,786 school crossing patrol wardens in England and Wales. Information on the number of vacancies is not collected centrally.

Prisons (Charter Marks)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria used in assessments of prisons in England and Wales for the awarding of a Charter Mark; and if he will make a statement. [68952]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have been asked to reply.

The criteria used in assessment of prisons in England and Wales for the award of a Charter Mark are the same as are used in assessing all other public sector applications. For the 1998 assessment process these criteria were:

1. Performance standards
2. Information and openness
3. Consultation and choice
4. Courtesy and helpfulness
5. Putting things right
6. Value for money
7. User satisfaction
8. Improvements in service quality
9. Planned improvements and innovations.

For all applicants the assessment process includes checking with sponsoring Departments, regulatory bodies, statutory user groups and other relevant bodies to ensure that any shortcomings or service failures are known and taken into account. The particular circumstances, including statutory obligations, of each applicant are also taken into account.

Applicants are required to submit a written application supported with evidence. The written application is assessed independently by two different assessors followed by a visit from one or more assessors who review the service on site, examine any additional evidence and meet a cross-section of users. For a prison, users would include the prisoners themselves, Prison Visitors and relatives of prisoners.

The decision to award a Charter Mark is made by an independent panel of judges.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times he or his junior Ministers, or predecessors in the post, have paid official visits to (a) the Czech Republic, (b) Poland, (c) Hungary, (d) Slovenia, (e) Estonia and (f) Cyprus since May 1997; and what was the purpose of each visit. [67700]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 27 January 1999]: Since May 1997 DTI Ministers have made the following visits to Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic.

Ministerial visit	Purpose of visit
December 1997
Hungary	Trade Promotion
Czech Republic	Trade Promotion
Poland	Trade Promotion
January 1998
Czech Republic	Trade Policy
Hungary	Trade Promotion
September 1998
Poland	Address a Seminar on Entrepreneurship and meeting with the Polish Minister for the Economy

There have been no visits to Slovenia, Estonia or Cyprus.

BAT Industries and Rothmans International

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the regulatory procedures which must now be followed in respect of the proposed merger between BAT Industries and Rothmans International. [67949]

Dr. Howells: It will be necessary to determine whether this proposed merger falls for consideration by the European Commission under the EC Merger Regulation, or by the UK authorities under the Fair Trading Act 1973. If it falls to the EC Merger Regulation it is for the parties to notify the European Commission. The UK plays a formal role in the Commission's assessment process. If it falls to the UK authorities my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry would decide whether or not to refer it to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the light of the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading. Each case is considered on its own merits.

Export Licences (Records)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for how long a British company or agency which has supplied military, security or police equipment which has been exempted from export licence requirements is required to maintain records of such transfers. [68303]

Dr. Howells: Export of controlled military and paramilitary goods is subject to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, made under the provisions of the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939. The 1939 Act does not bind the Crown. In addition, a number of international organisations have had immunity from export prohibitions conferred upon them by means of Orders in Council made under the International Organisations (Immunities and Privileges) Act 1968. The Government and those immune international organisations are under no legal obligation to maintain records of their exports.

No other agencies or companies are exempt from the provisions of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994.

Electro-shock Batons

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the companies granted export licences for the export of electro-shock batons to (a) Egypt, (b) Botswana and (c) Saudi Arabia; [68230]

(2) which British company brokered the trans-shipment of electro-shock batons to Saudi Arabia under the trans-shipment licence granted by his Department in 1993. [68194]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the letter to her, dated 16 July 1998, from my noble Friend Lord Clinton-Davis. A copy of this letter was placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many visits his officials have made to British Aerospace to check that electro-shock batons were not transferred to Saudi Arabia as part of the Al Yamamah deal. [68331]

Mr. George Robertson: I have been asked to reply.

Officials from both the Department of Trade and Industry and the Ministry of Defence contacted BAe Royal Ordnance following allegations made in a Channel 4 "Dispatches" programme, screened on 11 January 1995. The Company has gone on record to deny the allegations made in the programme.

PVC Toys

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the European Commission's Scientific Committee on Toxicity, Ecotoxicity and the Environment in respect of the sale of soft PVC toys. [68917]

Dr. Howells: The independent Scientific Committee on Toxicity, Ecotoxicity and the Environment (SCTEE) was asked by the European Commission to provide an opinion on the use of phthalate plasticisers in soft PVC toys, including tethers. The SCTEE made a number of recommendations and observations. These include concerns about the possible use of one phthalate (DEHP) in toys intended to be mouthed by children and a recommendation on a safe migration level for DINP. The SCTEE's assessment of the toxicity of phthalates is consistent with the views of the EU Scientific Committee for Food.

Tests of PVC toys and tethers have been commissioned by DTI, based on the SCTEE's recommendations. These indicate that DEHP is no longer used in PVC toys and to date no toys have been found on the UK market which release DINP in levels above those recommended by the SCTEE. A programme of testing to monitor phthalates release levels is continuing.

Export Licences (Alvis)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the visits his officials have undertaken to audit open individual export licences held by Alvis since 1988. [68787]

Dr. Howells: Since 1988, ECO Compliance Officers have made 6 routine compliance visits in total to Alvis Logistics Ltd. and Alvis Vehicles Ltd.

Alvis Logistics Ltd. were visited on 24 July 1996; 29 April and 16 December 1997.

Alvis Vehicles Ltd. were visited on 24 July 1996; 29 April and 16 December 1997.

Electronic Equipment

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to encourage recycling of electronic equipment. [68626]

Dr. Howells: Electrical and electronic equipment is one of the sectors targeted in the Government's Producer Responsibility initiative. Through this initiative, the Department of Trade and Industry has encouraged industry-led action to increase re-use and recycling of electrical and electronic equipment. Recently, the Department issued a guide to the re-use of unwanted computer equipment.

The Government are currently developing a new waste strategy, and has made clear that they are committed to achieving substantial increases in recycling. In this context, the Government are currently assessing options for developing the markets for recycled materials and products.

Director General of Research Councils (Hewlett-Packard)

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the arrangements by which the Director General of Research Councils will avoid conflicts of interest while on secondment from Hewlett-Packard. [69352]

Mr. Byers: The DGRC, Dr. John Taylor, will continue to be paid by Hewlett-Packard while on secondment from Hewlett-Packard to the DTI. For the duration of this appointment, the DTI will reimburse Hewlett-Packard at a rate within the relevant Senior Civil Service pay band for his post.

In addition, Dr. Taylor will stand aside from discussions or decisions having any specific effect on Hewlett-Packard for the duration of his appointment. In practice, since the Department is not involved in decisions on individual science projects in accordance with the Haldane principle, and since Research Councils funding goes to universities and scientific institutes rather than firms, no material difficulties are foreseen.

Should, unusually, funding be granted directly from the Research Councils to Hewlett-Packard, I will report this to Parliament and give details of the circumstances.

Vibration White Finger

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people in the north-west Region are claiming compensation for suffering from vibration white finger. [69172]

Mr. Battle: The total number of Vibration White Finger claims received by IRISC, the Department's claim handlers, from people in the north-west region is 1,247.

Arms Exports

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the EU code of conduct on arms exports. [68929]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

We are committed to the implementation of the provisions of the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Line of Route (Summer Opening)

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on opening the Line of Route during the summer adjournment. [69171]

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on proposals to open the Palace of Westminster to visitors on Saturdays, Sundays and during periodic adjournments; and what plans there are to charge such visitors. [68598]

Mr. Kirkwood: The Commission has approved in principle the re-opening of the Line of Route during the Summer Recess. The need to comply with EU procedures in letting contracts makes it impossible, however, to achieve the re-opening earlier than the summer of 2000.

On the advice of the Administration Committee, the Finance and Services Committee will look at the viability of a project prepared by a firm of outside consultants on how the Line of Route re-opening is to be managed. It will report its conclusions to the House of Commons Commission.

In respect of the specific matter of charging visitors who wish to use the Line of Route, the Commission has taken the view that this is a matter which the House itself should decide. A motion will be put before the House in due course.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Motor Scooters

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the speed limit that applies to drivers of 49cc motor scooters. [67666]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There is no specific speed limit for 49cc motor scooters, which are classed as motor cycles. The road speed limits, either set nationally or locally by traffic authorities, therefore apply. Motorcycles of under 50cc are not permitted on motorways.

Local Authority Databases

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if a local authority is permitted to merge databases containing personal data which were originally collected for diverse functions, on the grounds that such a merger would improve the economy, efficiency or effectiveness of that authority; and if he will make a statement. [68049]

Mr. Raynsford: In discharging their functions, local authorities must make such arrangements as necessary to secure economy, efficiency and effectiveness. Where these arrangements involve the merging of databases containing personal data the Data Protection Act must be complied with. In November 1997 the Audit Commission published a Code of Data Matching Practice for local authorities, and the Data Protection Registrar has indicated that she expects them to comply with the Code's provisions.

Drink Driving

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in how many cases a driver, found to be over the legal limit for alcohol, has caused the death of another person in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [68308]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The numbers of accidents which involved a driver who was over the legal limit for alcohol and in which one or more people killed were not themselves drivers above the legal limit were: 170 in 1994, 200 in 1995 and 190 in 1996.

These are estimates rounded to the nearest ten and are given for the last three years for which figures are available.

HGVs (Channel Crossings)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the average daily number of Heavy Goods Vehicles arriving in Kent from (a) continental ports and (b) the Channel Tunnel. [68304]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The average daily number of powered goods vehicles, i.e. excluding unaccompanied trailers, arriving in Kent is 1,800 from continental ports and 800 through the Channel Tunnel.

Trunk Roads (Herefordshire)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has held with Herefordshire Council on improvements to trunk roads in Hereford. [68232]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Highways Agency and the Government Office for the West Midlands are discussing with Herefordshire Council measures to ease traffic congestion in Hereford. These measures include both those on the A49 trunk road and those on the local road network being promoted by the local authority through the Hereford package. A meeting was held on 21 December to establish priorities and set a realistic timetable for improvements to the A49 and complementary measures on the local road network.

Belmont Roundabout

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Highways Agency will present for public consideration schemes to improve the junction of the A49 and A465 at the Belmont Roundabout. [68233]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paul Keetch, dated 3 February 1999:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson has asked me to reply to your recent question about when the Highways Agency will present for public consideration schemes to improve the junction of the A49 and A465 at the Belmont Roundabout.

Representatives of the Agency have already held preliminary discussions with officers of Herefordshire Council about ways to take forward a package of measures to ease traffic congestion on the A49 trunk road in Hereford, and will continue to work with them to identify solutions to complement their local road network.

The Council is bringing forward changes to their traffic management arrangements within Hereford and these will impact on the A49. The Agency will take these into account before bringing forward measures to improve the A49 trunk road through Hereford, including improvements to the A49/A465 junction.

We currently expect to consult all interested parties, including members of the public, early next year. We will improve on this timetable if possible. I will keep you informed of progress.

Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will (i) account for the difference between outturn departmental spending in Table A1 of the Comprehensive Spending Review and outturn departmental spending in Table 1.2 of the 1998–99 Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis for his Department excluding local government and regional policy for (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1996–97 and (ii) provide forecast figures for departmental spending for his Department excluding local government and regional policy for (1) 1997–98, (2) 1998–99, (3) 1999–2000, (4) 2000–01 and (5) 2001–02 on a comparable basis to Table 1.2 of the 1998–99 Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis. [68381]

Dr. Reid: Information in the 1998–99 Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis was provided on the basis of the existing financial control framework. The comprehensive spending review introduced new departmental expenditure limits which (i) included elements previously outside the control total and (ii) excluded elements previously within the control total. For this Department the new elements included within its departmental expenditure limit were provision for the Capital Receipts Initiative and bus fuel duty rebate. The elements excluded from this Department's departmental expenditure limit were provision for Housing Revenue Account Subsidy and National Air Traffic Services Ltd.

The Department's detailed spending plans for 1998–99 and, estimated outturn for 1997–98, are published in the Departmental Annual Report 1998 (Cm 3906). The Department's detailed spending plans for 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 will be included in the Departmental Annual Report 1999 due to be published in late March.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68405]

Dr. Reid: The only significant planned changes in the Department's responsibilities are in respect of the Rent Officer Service Agency, to be established in October 1999, and, subject to legislation, the transfer of certain responsibilities for railways to the Strategic Rail Authority.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68421]

Dr. Reid: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals his Department has to further regulate houses in multiple occupation. [68842]

Mr. Raynsford: We expect to issue a consultation paper on proposals for licensing of houses in multiple occupation in the early part of this year.

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has made to ensure that an up-to-date register of all genetically modified food test sites is available to the relevant local authority; [68615]

(2) what plans he has to provide statutory consultee status to local authorities before genetically modified food test sites are authorised; [68616]

(3) what action his Department has taken in response to objections from residents near to genetically modified food test sites; [68617]

(4) if he will introduce measures to give residents within 800 metres of a genetically modified food test site the right to object to authorisation of the site. [68618]

Mr. Meacher: My Department maintains a statutory register of prescribed information concerning applications for consent to release genetically modified organisms. The full register is maintained at the Department's London Office in Victoria Street. Registers are also maintained at Regional Offices of the Environment Agency and the Health and Safety Executive's Office in Edinburgh.

Copies of items on the register are provided by post on request. Information on release sites and their locations is also available on the Department's Internet Website.

All applicants for consent to release genetically modified organisms must place an advertisement giving the prescribed information in a newspaper circulating the area of the proposed release site. Any one, including nearby residents and local authorities, may raise an objection by writing to the Secretary of State. All objections received are considered before a decision is made on whether or not to grant consent; where appropriate, the views of the statutory Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment are sought.

There are no plans to give local authorities or nearby residents statutory consultation status.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will report on his consideration of a moratorium on commercial licences for genetically modified crops. [68619]

Mr. Meacher: A number of organisations have called for a moratorium on the commercial growing of genetically modified crops. There are at present no genetically modified crops which have received all the necessary approvals to be grown commercially in Britain. The announcement I made on 21 October 1998 to the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities set out a programme of managed development of herbicide tolerant genetically modified crops with additional safeguards to ensure full protection of the environment. The situation will be kept under review.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 629, when he expects the paper on the possible wider implications of genetically modified crops to be made publicly available. [68776]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 2 February 1999]: I expect this discussion paper which was prepared by the Secretariat to the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) to be made available via ACRE's page on my Department's website as soon as possible.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those (a) local authorities, (b) local authority organisations, (c) local authority interest groups and (d) other organisations which have made representations in support of proposals to limit the payment of council tax benefit subsidy in 1999–2000. [68634]

Ms Armstrong: We have not received any representations supporting our proposals to limit the payment of council tax benefit subsidy in 1999–2000.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those (a) local authorities, (b) local authority associations, (c) local authority interest groups and (d) other organisations which have made representations (i) opposing and (ii) seeking postponement of proposals to limit the payment of council tax benefit subsidy in 1999–2000. [68633]

Ms Armstrong: I have today placed in the library a list of those (a) local authorities, (b) local authority organisations, (c) local authority interest groups and (d) other organisations which have made representations (i) opposing or (ii) seeking postponement of the proposals to limit the payment of council tax benefit subsidy in 1999–2000.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the aggregate amount of council tax subsidy to be withdrawn from local authorities in each of the years (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02 as a consequence of the proposal to limit council tax benefit subsidy; and what plans he has to return the withdrawn sums to local authorities in aggregate. [68632]

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the annual amount of council tax benefits subsidy to be withdrawn from local councils in the next financial year. [68733]

Ms Armstrong: Only local authorities exceeding the guideline will have to make a contribution to the costs of council tax benefit. We have not made any estimate of this. It is up to local authorities to decide what council tax to set and they will have to consider the impact of the Council Tax Benefit Subsidy Limitation scheme when making these decisions.

Airports

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he intends to publish the White Paper on aviation and airport policy; [68341]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that there is sufficient airport capacity to meet forecast air traffic growth in the South East up to and beyond 2015; and if he will make a statement; [68333]

(3) if he plans to publish a White Paper on aviation and airport policy during the current Parliament. [69027]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 1 February 1999]: In our White Paper "A New Deal for Transport" we set out a number of key policy principles relating to airports. We also announced that we will prepare a new statement of UK airports policy, and a large amount of preparatory work is now under way. We are considering the precise scope and timing of the policy statement, and how to undertake the necessary preparatory work relating to South East England, and will make a further announcement in due course.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the findings of the 1993 Study of Runway Capacity to Serve the South East. [68334]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The study of Runway Capacity to Serve the South East was prepared at the behest of the previous Government. In preparing a new UK airports policy statement, we shall wish to take a fresh look at the issue, in the light of the principles we have set out in the "New Deal for Transport" White Paper.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the timetable for planning for new airport capacity in the South East on the competitiveness of the region. [68335]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The Government recognise the importance of airport capacity for competitiveness in the South East. The impact of the timetable for planning new airports capacity will therefore be an important factor informing the precise scope and timing of the new UK airports policy statement.

Global Warming

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect of global warming on sea levels. [68695]

Mr. Meale: The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, in its 1995 assessment, reported that global mean sea level has risen 10–25cm over the last 100 years, and that it is likely that this rise has been largely due to the concurrent increase in global temperature over the same time period.

The Panel's projections for the future, for a wide range of emission scenarios, are that global mean sea level will rise by 15–95cm by the year 2100. Research funded by my Department at the Hadley Centre suggests that, for a "business as usual scenario", global mean sea level will rise by about 50cm by the year 2100.

Estimates of sea level rise for regions of the UK were prepared for the UK Climate Impacts Programme and published in 1998, for various climate change scenarios which take account of expected land movements. Similar allowances to the changes now estimated have been used since 1989 for the construction or improvement of sea defences.

Eurostar Services

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what information he has received from the Eurostar consortium regarding the viability of direct Eurostar services from West Coast Main Line stations north of Watford to mainland Europe; [68847]

(2) what assessment he has made of the possible use of public subsidy to support direct Eurostar services from the West Coast Main Line to mainland Europe; [68848]

(3) what plans he has to invite other service providers to submit proposals for direct Eurostar services from the West Coast Main Line to mainland Europe. [68849]

Dr. Reid: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister received a report from Inter-Capital and Regional Rail Ltd. (ICRR), the consortium appointed by London and Continental Railways to manage and operate Eurostar, on 13 November 1998 entitled "Review of Regional Eurostar Services". On 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 340, he announced the commissioning of a thorough and independent review. In addition to consideration of a broad range of key elements, this review will address itself in particular to the study completed by ICRR and to the alternative proposals put forward by the Virgin Group. He has asked for a report to be presented to Government as soon as practicable.

Disabled Parking

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make it his policy to make it an offence to park in disabled parking boxes without authorisation; [69051]

(2) what recent representations he has received in favour of making unauthorised parking in disabled parking boxes a criminal offence. [69052]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It is already an offence under Section 47 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 to park a vehicle which is not displaying an Orange Badge in an on-street designated disabled persons' parking bay.

The Orange Badge Scheme does not, however, apply to off-street car parks, whether local authority or privately owned, and enforcement of those disabled persons' parking bays is a matter for the operator concerned. In the case of local authority off-street car parks, their off-street parking place orders normally make it either an offence for someone not displaying a valid Orange Badge to park in a disabled persons' parking bay or make it subject to the payment of an "excess charge". In private car parks, we understand it is possible in law for the owners to agree with the local authority that a parking place order be made in respect of that car park. Conditions of use can then be enforced as if it were a local authority car park, with penalties or excess charges levied on offenders.

Pipework Materials

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what monitoring he is conducting of the Water Industry Specifications Committee's emerging standard for plastic pipes; [68116]

(2) what estimate he has made of the percentage of sewers which are made from thin wall plastics; [68118]

(3) what assessment he has made of the susceptibility of each of the principal sewerage drainage pipe materials to damage by rodents. [68121]

Mr. Meale: The development of Water Industry Specifications, choice of pipework materials, durability and susceptibility to damage is a matter for the water and sewerage undertakers. The Department does not collect information on materials used by the water industry.

Rats

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he proposes to ensure that rats do not escape into properties from sewers. [68117]

Mr. Meale: Sewerage undertakers have ongoing programmes to control and reduce the number of rats in public sewers. These include baiting, which is usually targeted only in those areas where there is evidence of rats so as to avoid unnecessary waste of funds. In following up one of the recommendations of the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee Report on Sewage Treatment and Disposal, my officials are initiating discussions between the Local Government Association and Water UK to establish what further action may be needed, who should carry it out and whether local authorities need greater powers. The water industry is also conducting research into the most effective ways of controlling rats in sewers.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will incorporate a rodent damage test for drainage pipes in the review of Part H of the Building Regulations. [68119]

Mr. Raynsford: In considering whether the advice on preventing rodent damage needs to be strengthened, the review of Part H will consider all relevant issues.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of recent trends in the level of rat infestations of homes and businesses. [68120]

Mr. Raynsford: The DETR's 1996 English House Condition Survey collected data on the incidence or rodents and the types of treatments that are being used to treat any infestation. Results should be published later this year.

Drinking Water (Contamination)

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements are in place to monitor the contamination of drinking water supplies by leaking sewers and drains; and what has been the results of such monitoring in each of the last three years. [68122]

Mr. Meale: Water companies are required to notify the Drinking Water Inspectorate of any event or incident which affects or threatens to affect drinking water quality. In 1998, 1997 and 1996 water companies reported 7, 4 and 7 occasions respectively when a leaking sewer threatened drinking water quality and precautionary measures were taken to protect consumers, but on all of these occasions there was no evidence that public health was affected.

Water companies are required to monitor routinely drinking water quality at consumers' taps for faecal coliforms, the main indicator of microbiological contamination. If faecal coliforms are detected water companies take immediate action to protect consumers and rectify the cause. The table shows the results for the last three years for which data is available and includes detections where companies found that the consumers' taps were contaminated.

Year	Number of samples from consumers taps	Number (%) of samples in which faecal coliforms detected
1995	156,306	111(0.07)
1996	157,342	97(0.06)
1997	157,252	97(0.06)

Air Services (Punctuality)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to monitor the punctuality of scheduled air services in the same way as rail services are currently monitored. [68533]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority has published monthly and annual punctuality statistics for scheduled and charter passenger services from principal airports since January 1998. Reports are published monthly on the CAA's website (www.caa.co.uk) and a press notice outlining trends in delays is issued quarterly.

Highways Agency Projects

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list Highways Agency projects in 1998, including the 1998 national travel survey, which made use of (a) automatic traffic counters, (b) roadside interviews, (c) manual classified counts and (d) additional surveys undertaken outside the normal hours of 7 am to 7 pm on weekdays. [67710]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The following is a table based on the information which is readily available, of the Highways Agency's projects for which surveys were undertaken in 1998. The table uses the types of surveys defined in the question but the headings describing the types of survey have been abbreviated to (a) ATCs, (b) RSIs and (c) MCCs.

There were no additional surveys undertaken in connection with Highways Agency projects outside the normal hours of 7am to 7pm Monday to Friday.

The National Travel Survey is undertaken by DETR and consists of household interviews only. As part of DETR's continuous collection of traffic data, the following surveys were undertaken during 1998:

Continuous automatic traffic counters at 134 sites;

Approximately 6,000 manual classified counts between 7am and 7pm weekdays;

Manual classified counts (16 or 24 hour) at approximately one third of the 523 sites on screen lines and cordons across London; and Twenty four hour manual classified counts at 50 sites four times per year within London.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Aid (EU)

7. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the provision of value for money in the EU aid budget. [67509]

15. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the cost-effectiveness of the EU development aid programme. [67521]

Clare Short: We have inherited from the previous administration a commitment that 30 per cent. of my budget is channelled through the EC and a situation where EC aid spending is skewed against the poorest countries and is often of poor quality. In December we published our strategy to improve EC performance.

We are actively seeking support for this strategy in the Commission, the European Parliament and among Member States. I welcome the report of the Development Select Committee supporting the Government's strategy.

Development Education

9. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to promote awareness of development issues among young people. [67512]

Mr. Foulkes: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have visited many schools and colleges on each of our visits to towns and cities throughout the UK and found great enthusiasm for development issues. Expanding the coverage of these issues in the school curriculum is our top priority and we are pursuing this with other Departments and agencies in relation to each part of the United Kingdom.

Sudan

10. Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what medical aid projects the Government are currently supporting in Sudan. [67515]

11. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide pharmaceutical products as aid to Sudan. [67516]

Clare Short: Our humanitarian response to the crisis in Sudan last year, which amounted to £37 million, included an allocation of £5.5 million for health care to the most vulnerable groups. The Government of Sudan, by its own admission, is spending 80 per cent. of the national budget on the civil war. The major priority for improving life for the people of Sudan is an end to the war.

Education (Girls)

12. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in what ways her Department is supporting the education of girls in poorer countries; and if she will make a statement. [67517]

Clare Short: As we make clear in the Development White Paper, we are strongly committed to the key international targets of Universal Primary Education by 2015 and gender equity in primary and secondary education by 2005. We are working in the international system to try to increase the commitment to meeting this target and prioritising these targets in all our programmes. For example, we have recently committed over £200 million to basic education in a number of countries including Ghana, India, Zambia, Malawi, Kenya, South Africa, Pakistan, Bangladesh, and our largest ever single education commitment of £67 million for Uganda.

We are also working co-operatively with the World Bank, UNICEF, and the Rockefeller Foundation, to develop practical strategies which will encourage the enrolment of girls in school in countries with very low enrolment rates.

Debt Relief

13. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had with voluntary organisations in relation to the reduction of the debt burden on developing countries. [67518]

Clare Short: In December, I met the directors of the voluntary organisations which comprise the British Overseas Aid Group (BOAG)—ActionAid, Oxfam, the Catholic Fund for Overseas Development (CAFOD), Christian Aid and Save the Children Fund. Also in December, I met BOND—which represents the smaller NGOs. They agreed with the need to develop and strengthen the link between debt relief and poverty reduction and welcomed the fact that we are pressing for this issue to be considered during the forthcoming comprehensive review of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Debt Initiative, and for civil society in developing countries to be involved in the review.

22. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the new German Government about debt relief and poverty reduction. [67528]

Clare Short: I met the German Development Minister in Bonn in November last year. The discussions covered poverty reduction, debt relief and a number of other development issues. I was pleased to find a new convergence of UK and German views on development policies. In December, officials from my Department and the Treasury followed up in discussions with their German counterparts proposals for taking forward the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative (HIPC).

24. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with ministers of the German Government concerning an initiative on debt relief for developing countries at the European Council meeting in Cologne. [67530]

Clare Short: I met the German Development Minister and her officials in Bonn in November last year. The discussions covered poverty reduction, debt relief and a number of other development issues. We shall continue to work closely with the German government during their Presidency of the European Union and of the G8 on their proposals for debt relief, which are similar to those in our own Mauritius Mandate.

25. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to reduce the debts of the poorest countries. [67531]

Clare Short: The Chancellor and I are working to see international agreement to speed up the implementation of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) debt initiative so that all eligible countries will be on track for debt relief by 2000. We are pressing for this and other key issues, including the level of debt relief and the link to poverty reduction, to be examined during the comprehensive review of the HIPC initiative which is to report by July this year. Over the past two years, the Department for International Development (DFID) has cancelled some £30 million of bilateral aid debts and provided some £36 million to help the African Development Bank meet its share of the cost of implementing the HIPC debt initiative. We are also providing around £100 million to help a number of developing countries meet their debt service payments to international financial institutions. In addition, DFID is providing technical assistance in debt management to poor countries and funding research on the key issues of debt sustainability and internal debt. In the run-up to the Cologne Summit, we are working closely with the German government, whose proposals for debt relief are similar to those in our own Mauritius Mandate.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to support the recent initiative of the German Chancellor on debt relief for developing nations. [68098]

Clare Short: We welcome the recent German proposals for debt relief. In many of their elements, they reinforce the Mauritius Mandate, launched by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in September 1997. It is encouraging to see that the German proposals call for the cancellation of aid loans to Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) but we should like to see them extending aid debt relief to more countries.

My greatest concern remains that debt relief should be linked to poverty reduction. This aspiration was contained in Chancellor Schroeder's proposals. We have pressed that the IMF/World Bank review of HIPC should give more emphasis to the link between debt relief and poverty reduction.

Kosovo and Montenegro

14. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress is being made to support the continuing humanitarian relief effort in (a) Kosovo and (b) Montenegro. [67519]

Clare Short: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) estimates that there were 200,000 persons displaced within Kosovo as at 22 January.

We are working closely with international organisations, led by UNHCR, to ensure that the humanitarian needs of those affected by the conflict in Kosovo are met. During 1999, UNHCR-led convoys have provided food and other items to more than 40,000 people throughout Kosovo. These supplies were provided through UNHCR, World Food Programme, Mercy Corps International, Catholic Relief Services, Children's Aid Direct, Doctors of the World, World Vision and Oxfam.

It has been reported that refugees have begun entering Montenegro once more in the light of deteriorating security in Kosovo. UNHCR are financing an operation to register refugees from Kosovo who will be provided with an identity card to confirm that they are entitled to assistance.

The World Health Organisation is co-ordinating regular visits by medical teams, which are currently providing mental outreach services and organising education and hygiene programmes for those living in collective centres.

Intermediate Technology

16. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what initiatives her Department is taking to support intermediate technology. [67522]

Clare Short: We believe the poor need access to technology appropriate for the development of sustainable livelihoods. As part of our effort we are funding a three-year programme with the Intermediate Technology Development Group to develop policy and technologies within eight key engineering sectors which span domestic and small-scale industrial applications.

Medical Services (Children)

17. Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's support for medical services for children in (a) countries suffering emergencies from natural causes and (b) war zones. [67523]

Clare Short: The provision of medical assistance for children caught up in emergencies is considered alongside other needs as an integral part of our humanitarian assistance provided in response to crises caused by conflicts and natural disasters. We channel support through United Nations agencies, the Red Cross and non-governmental organisations; looking first to agencies that are well established in the country and have the local knowledge and expertise to deliver assistance most effectively. Children affected by armed conflict have special needs for protection, and we strongly support the efforts of the Special representative of the United Nations Secretary-General on children in armed conflict, and UNICEF, to promote the safety and welfare of children in war zones.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

18. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer concerning the future tax position of the Commonwealth Development Corporation. [67524]

Clare Short: We are working with HM Treasury and the Inland Revenue to produce a tax solution that will encourage investment in the poorest countries through the CDC public–private partnership. Parliament will have the opportunity to scrutinise our proposals.

The Commonwealth Development Corporation needs to be tax efficient if it is to be able to achieve its goal of investing in developing countries using private capital raised within the context of a competitive private investment market dominated by offshore funds. In order to compete directly with offshore funds for private capital for investment in its area, CDC would need to provide a similar financial return. A material UK tax charge within CDC would make this less achievable.

Zimbabwe

19. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received on aid to Zimbabwe. [67525]

Clare Short: Since 1 December, I have answered 10 Parliamentary Questions and replied to letters from hon. Members on both sides of the House. We have also been engaging in a consultation process within Zimbabwe on our country strategy.

Great Lakes Region

20. Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the crisis in the great lakes region of Africa. [67526]

Clare Short: We are deeply disturbed about the impact of the ongoing conflicts in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and the consequences for the people throughout the Great Lakes region. The involvement of so many other countries in the continuing conflict in the DRC and the risks of escalation are very serious. We are ready to provide humanitarian assistance where this is possible. But a ceasefire is needed urgently. Britain is supporting efforts by President Chiluba and other regional leaders to secure this ceasefire and to find a political solution which will protect the sovereignty of the DRC, ensure the rights and protection of all Congolese and address the security concerns of neighbouring countries.

An important part of the solution will be progress on reconciliation in Rwanda. Rwanda needs international support to help it achieve peace and reconciliation and I have agreed to provide £30 million in three annual grants to help. The rationale and objectives for our support to Rwanda are set out in my letter dated 26 January to you as the Chair of the All-Party Group on Rwanda. A copy of my letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

In Burundi, the Arusha peace process continues to make progress. The decision by regional Governments to lift the economic sanctions imposed on Burundi reflects the progress being made and is a positive step forward.

In the longer term there is a need to address the root causes of the conflict; re-unite the region; and promote development for long-term stability. We support the convening of an International Conference on Security and Co-operation under UN/OAU auspices to this end.

Tanzania

21. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she had about development when she visited Tanzania in 1998. [67527]

Clare Short: During my visit in August last year, I met with the President, ministers, politicians, officials and private sector, civil society and donor representatives and outlined Britain's new development policy. I visited various programmes and urged action to tackle corruption and speedy reform of the health and education sectors, where we have a major involvement and which are vital to improve the quality of basic services and to achieve our shared goal of poverty eradication.

St. Helena

23. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to visit the island of St. Helena to discuss the provision of air links and improved sea links. [67529]

Clare Short: I have no plans to visit St. Helena. Last year my Department and the St. Helena Government agreed the terms of a preliminary desk study into the technical viability of improving access, including possible air access, to St. Helena.

Angola

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the current humanitarian assistance to Angola. [67510]

Clare Short: The recent fighting in Angola has resulted in a significant increase in the numbers of internally displaced people. The United Nations is co-ordinating efforts to meet these needs. We will help where there is adequate access and safety for agencies to operate. Since the first UN Humanitarian Appeal for Angola in 1993 we have committed some £41 million bilateral emergency assistance to Angola.

Clean Water Supply

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact of her Department's policies on accessibility and clean water supply in developing countries. [67514]

Clare Short: Access to clear, safe, water is a major focus for our programme as it is crucial to health, agriculture and freeing women and girls' time for education and production. We are giving increased focus to water and sanitation in our work. Worldwide 1½ billion people benefited from improved water supply during the UN Decade for water but 1 billion still lack access to clean water and 3 billion to sanitation. It is estimated that by 2025 1 in 3 people will be living in countries subject to chronic water scarcity unless water resources are used more efficiently.

Multilateral Agreement for Investment

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the current status of negotiations concerning the impact on developing countries of the planned Multilateral Agreement for Investment. [67506]

Clare Short: The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) announced on 3 December that negotiations on the proposed Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) had ended.

Discussions are continuing in the World Trade Organisation on the links between trade and investment, including the case for possible new multilateral rules on investment. These discussions are still at an analytical stage. My Department is working with the WTO Secretariat and United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) to help ensure developing countries have the support necessary to participate actively in the discussions.

Southern Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the cessation of funding from her Department to the non-governmental organisation Merlin working in Southern Sudan. [69029]

Clare Short: We funded the NGO Merlin for a 6 month programme of humanitarian assistance in Southern Sudan last August. This project ended on 31 January. As needs were much reduced, an extension of this project is not required.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to assist with the construction of secure roads and bridges in Southern Sudan. [69032]

Clare Short: Help to improve the infrastructure necessary to deliver food, including road and bridge repairs, is included in the UN World Food Programme's transport and delivery costs. We have paid the full costs associated with the provision of our food aid.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to assist with vaccination of children against measles and polio in Southern Sudan. [69031]

Clare Short: Our humanitarian assistance last year included an allocation of £125,000 towards the WHO Global Polio Eradication Programme.

The 1999 UN Consolidated Appeal covers the treatment of polio and measles. We are currently evaluating the Appeal document.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has for the continuation of humanitarian aid to Southern Sudan; and if she will make a statement. [69028]

Clare Short: We received the UN 1999 Consolidated Appeal for Sudan on 28 January and we are considering it carefully. We will make a statement as soon as possible.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement regarding funding by her Department of simple fishing equipment in Southern Sudan. [69030]

Clare Short: The provision of fishing equipment is included in the 1999 UN Consolidated Appeal. We are currently evaluating the Appeal document. I will write to the hon. Lady about difficulties over efforts to provide fishing equipment in the past.

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) if she will list the 10 UK based non-governmental organisations which received the greatest amounts of money from her Department in the year 1997–98; [68085]

(2) what percentage of her Department's budget was paid to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations in 1997–98. [68068]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development expenditure through UK NGOs was £172,336 million in 1997–98. This was 16.5 per cent. of the total Bilateral Programme or 8.4 per cent. of the total DFID programme for 1997–98.

I attach a list of the 10 NGOs who received the greatest amounts of money in 1997–98.

DFID expenditure through UK NGOs 1997–98

	£000
1. British Red Cross Society	23,351
2. Voluntary Services Overseas	20,274
3. Save the Children Fund	18,037
4. CARE International UK	12,348
5. OXFAM	10,498
6. Christian Aid	8,488
7. International Planned Parenthood Federation	6,017
8. London School of Hygiene	4,287
9. Medical Research Council	3,702
10. Marie Stopes International	3,103

Note:
Organisations registered as a charity with the Charity Commission in England or the Inland Revenue in Scotland, excluding the British Council which is a public body.

PRIME MINISTER

Life Peers

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the total number of life peers that have been created since 1 May 1997, indicating the number that subsequently took the (a) Conservative Whip, (b) Labour Whip, (c) Liberal Whip, (d) other party whips and (e) sit on the Cross Benches in the House of Lords. [65029]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 January 1999]: The information is as follows:

Life peers created since 1 May 1997

	Number
Labour	[1]63
Conservative	31
Liberal Democrat	17
Cross Bench	[2]6
Law Lords	4
Other	6
Total	[3]127

[1] Includes Baroness Lester, now deceased
[2] Excludes Law Lords who are listed separately
[3] Includes the Dissolution List

Overseas Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those articles he has written for foreign newspapers since becoming Prime Minister. [66375]

The Prime Minister: I have written for many overseas publications. Usually an article is circulated by my office, or the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, to overseas posts who then place the article in a newspaper in their country. We do not have a comprehensive list of these articles.

In addition, I have written a small number of articles on specific issues for foreign newspapers and journals. These include over the last year:

Stern (Germany): Europe
Welt Am Sonntag (Germany): Europe
DNES (Czech Republic): The Third Way
Wall Street Journal (USA): The Euro
The Sowetan: South Africa.

Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if papers considered by the JCC are prepared by civil servants. [67475]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The papers tabled by the Government are prepared by civil servants and approved by Ministers, as is routine for Government business.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Prime Minister how many ministerial visits have been made to each South American and Caribbean country by each Government Minister since 1 May 1997. [67332]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 January 1999]: A fully updated list of Ministers who have undertaken individual official visits to Latin American and Caribbean countries over the 20 months since 1 May 1997 is listed below.

The purpose of these visits was to strengthen our bilateral relations, promote British interests and play our leading role in international affairs.

The rules on travel for Ministers are the same as those that applied under the previous Administration.

To ensure comprehensive coverage, a trawl has been undertaken across diplomatic posts in the regions. I regret that some of these visits were not included in earlier answers.

Maxwell Pensions

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Prime Minister what briefings he has received from civil servants or Ministers on the former Paymaster General, the hon Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson), and Maxwell pensions. [67320]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 January 1999]: Whether or not such briefings have been provided, it is established practice under successive administrations not to disclose details of confidential discussions between Ministers or advice received from civil servants.

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what discussions he has had with President Clinton about genetically modified food; [68433]

(2) what representations he has received from industry about genetically modified food. [68432]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 3 November 1998, Official Report, columns 471–72.

Official Histories

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Prime Minister how many Government-sponsored official histories are currently in preparation; when each was commissioned; who are the authors; what are the estimated dates of completion; and what is the estimated cost in each case. [68213]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The original programme of official histories, commissioned by the War Cabinet and covering military and civil histories of the second world war, was extended in 1966 by the then Prime Minister to include selected periods of episodes of peacetime history. The following are currently in preparation:

Title	Author	Date commissioned	Estimated publication date
UK Accession to the EEC Volume 1	Professor Alan Milward	1993	1999
UK Accession to the EEC Volume 2	Professor Alan Milward	1997	2006
Falklands Campaign	Professor Lawrence Freedman	1997	2002
North Sea Oil and Gas	Professor Alexander Kemp	1999	2004
External Economic Policy since the World War volume 2	Professor Leslie Pressnell	1974	2000
Defence Organisation since the War	Professor Donald Cameron Watt	1974	2000
SOE in Europe	Professor W. Mackenzie (edited and introduced by M. R. D. Foot)	1998	1999
SOE in the Low Countries	Professor M. R. D. Foot	1987	1999
SOE in Italy	Christopher Woods	1989	2000
SOE in Greece	Professor Richard Clogg	1984	2000

The cost of preparing official histories is borne mainly by the Cabinet Office with royalties payable by the publisher offsetting the costs. It is not possible without disproportionate cost to itemise the cost of all the individual histories.

Iraq

Mr. Trend: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 14 January 1999, Official Report, column 266, to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), what was the basis for his statement that the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) had argued that action against Saddam Hussein should be taken only if he were removed from power. [68721]

The Prime Minister: In public statements following Operation Desert Fox the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) said that the removal of Saddam Hussein from office should become "a clear policy objective".

Oman

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit Oman. [68786]

The Prime Minister: There are no plans at present. However, the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), hopes to make a visit in the near future.

Yemen

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what recent communications he has received from the President of Yemen; and if he will make a statement. [68846]

The Prime Minister: I have received no communication from the President of Yemen since November 1997. I have, however, asked my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to keep me fully apprised of developments in Yemen. We were delighted to hear the news yesterday that Mr. and Mrs. Rosser and the other Dutch captives have been released safe and well after their kidnap ordeal which began on 17 January. I have asked to be kept informed of our assiduous efforts to provide proper consular services for the eight UK nationals recently detained in Yemen on alleged terrorist charges.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit India; and if he will make a statement on bilateral relations. [68784]

The Prime Minister: I have no current plans to visit India. However, we have regular and bilateral dialogue on a wide variety of issues of mutual interest and my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury is currently making a visit to India.

Non-government Bodies

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the appointments to non-government bodies he has made since 1 January. [68785]

The Prime Minister: The right hon. the Baroness Williams of Crosby and the right hon. the Lord Mayhew of Twysden took up appointments as members of the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments with effect from 1 January. Lord Gillmore of Thamesfield was appointed Chairman of the Committee with effect from 1 February.

Acheson Report

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Prime Minister (1) which of his Ministers is co-ordinating the Government response to the Acheson report; [68938]

(2) if the Acheson report will be submitted to the Social Exclusion Unit. [68939]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health is co-ordinating work across Government to reduce health inequalities. This includes follow-up of the report of the independent inquiry into health inequalities, led by Sir Donald Acheson which he commissioned. A range of initiatives by other Departments, including aspects of the Social Exclusion Unit's strategy for neighbourhood renewal, is already helping to give effect to a number of Sir Donald's recommendations. The Government's response to the Acheson Inquiry's report will be included in a White Paper on the Government's new health strategy and will be published shortly.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 3 February. [68570]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I will have further such meetings later today.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Radio Authority

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list the members of the Radio Authority; who appoints them; what is their period of appointment; and what are the terms of reference of the authority; [67679]

(2) if he will list the members of the Radio Authority from ethnic minorities. [67683]

Janet Anderson: The Radio Authority was established under the Broadcasting Act 1990 to licence and regulate independent radio services in the UK. The Authority is responsible for interpreting its statutory duties under the Broadcasting Acts 1990 and 1996, and is independent of Government.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State appoints members of the Radio Authority. It is not the Department's current policy to reveal details of an individual's ethnic origin, but only to collect information for monitoring purposes. The present Radio Authority Members, with their period of appointment are as follows:

Members	Period of appointment
Sir Peter Gibbings (Chairman)	1 January 1995 to 31 December 1999
Mr. Michael Moriarty (Deputy Chairman)	18 January 1996 to 17 January 2000
Ms Sheila Hewitt	1 December 1998 to 30 November 2003
Mr. Andrew Reid	16 August 1994 to 15 August 1999
Mr. Michael Reupke	18 May 1994 to 17 May 1999
Mr. Fergal Sharkey	1 December 1998 to 30 November 2003
Lady Sheil	16 August 1994 to 15 August 1999
Mrs. Helen Tennant	1 December 1995 to 30 November 2000
Mr. David Witherow	1 January 1998 to 30 November 2003

Tourism (North-west)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the projected annual revenue from tourism in the north-west in each of the next three years. [68475]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 1 February 1999]: While we do not make detailed predictions of what future earnings from tourism may be for any region of the UK, an increase on the 1997 total revenue of £1,490 million is expected. One of the aims of our new strategy, to be published on 26 February 1999, will be to ensure that tourism delivers the greatest possible benefits both to local communities and the economy as a whole.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the benefits which result in the north-west from Government funding to the North West Tourist Board; and what checks are made to see whether value for money is achieved. [68474]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The North West Tourist Board receives Government funding through the English Tourist Board (ETB) which is responsible for ensuring that it is spent effectively delivering the programmes agreed. Clear measurement of performance and delivery is required.

As we announced on 14 December 1998, as well as establishing a new national strategic body for tourism in England, we shall be directing more resources for the support of tourism in the English regions.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to bring in grants to create new jobs and attractions in the tourist industry in the north-west. [68477]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 1 February 1999]: My Department has no plans to introduce any new grants. However, tourism in the north-west has benefited, both directly and indirectly, from National Lottery funding (nearly £450 million in total has gone to the region) and from support under the European Regional Development Fund.

DEFENCE

Sully Hospital (Land Decontamination)

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the value of his Department's land adjacent to Sully Hospital in the Vale of Glamorgan after the site has been decontaminated. [67863]

Mr. Spellar: I do not consider it appropriate to place a value on this site before it is brought to the market in late spring this year. The value of the site is best determined by the market, in full possession of the site details.

Military Bases (Children)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with senior officers of the Armed Services on their responsibilities in ensuring the welfare and protection of young children living with families on military bases; and if he will make a statement. [68047]

Mr. Spellar: No specific discussion have been held between Ministers and Senior Officers on their responsibilities in ensuring the welfare and protection of young children living on military bases. The Ministry of Defence does, however, takes very seriously its responsibilities of duty of care towards its personnel and their dependants. Commanding Officers are made well aware of their duty towards the welfare of all personnel and their dependants, through instructions issued through the chain of Command.

In the United Kingdom, the Ministry of Defence does not have statutory responsibility in matters of child welfare and protection. This responsibility falls to the relevant local authority. Under the Children Act 1989, it is the statutory duty of the local authority, to investigate cases where it believes a child is suffering, or is likely to suffer, harm. Service authorities are, however, required to notify the local Director of Social Services off any cases of abuse of which they become aware and any further action is to be taken in collaboration with the other agencies involved.

Overseas, the Ministry of Defence acts as a de facto local authority and replicates those statutory responsibilities falling to local authorities in the United Kingdom. All statutory health care and social services are provided for, and on behalf of, the Department under contract by the Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen and Families Association—Forces Help, which employs appropriately qualified social work staff. The SSAFA-FH social work service works in close co-operation with military authorities, Service police, medical and health professionals in accordance with Defence Council Instructions and The Armed Forces (Protection of Children of Service Families) Regulations 1996.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many children living in military-based accommodation have been the subject of reports by senior officers as to their welfare and protection in each of the last three years. [67987]

Mr. Spellar: Information of the nature requested is not held centrally by my Department. Within the United Kingdom, statutory responsibility in matters of welfare and protection of children of Service families rests with local authorities.

Overseas, where the Ministry of Defence assumes the responsibilities of a local authority, the following numbers of children were placed on Child Protection Registers for the years 1996, 1997 and 1998:

Year	Number
1996	51
1997	46
1998	58

Numbers of children overseas, subject to child protection inquiries, or the subject of concern, but whose names were not placed on the Child Protection Register, for the years 1996, 1997 and 1998 are as follows:

Year	Number
1996	41
1997	76
1998	82

Exports (Saudi Arabia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) military, (b) security and (c) police equipment exported to Saudi Arabia by British Aerospace as prime contractor for the Al-Yamamah agreement, that was exempt from export licence requirement. [68200]

Mr. George Robertson: Al-Yamamah is a Government to Government programme for the supply of Tornado and Hawk aircraft, Minehunters, associated infrastructure and armaments, and support equipment, including spares. All supplies under this programme are exempt from export licensing.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many electro-shock batons were transferred via the United Kingdom to Saudi Arabia as part of the Al-Yamamah deal. [68221]

Mr. George Robertson: No electronic shock batons have been supplied under the Al-Yamamah programme.

Trident (Successor)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to make a decision on a successor system to Trident. [68837]

Mr. George Robertson: No decision on any successor system to Trident will be needed for several years. Any decision on a successor to Trident would be taken in the light of progress towards the Government's goal of verifiable global nuclear disarmament.

Captured Weapons

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy relating to the retention or disposal of captured military weapons and equipment. [68212]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 February 1999]: Decisions on how to deal with captured military weapons and equipment would be taken in the light of circumstances at the time. Disposal of such material by scrapping or sale for further use is subject to the same stringent political and security constraints as apply to the disposal of surplus military equipment from our own inventory.

Sudan

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what response Her Majesty's Government gave to the letter of the Sudanese Minister of Foreign Affairs of 27 October 1998 asking for clarification of his comments made on 23 October, to the effect that Her Majesty's Government had independent evidence that the Al Shifa factory in Khartoum was making chemical or biological weapons before the United States air strike. [68860]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 2 February 1999]: Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials have discussed with Sudanese counterparts the points raised in Dr. Mustafa Osman Ismail's letter on a number of occasions. As we have said on several occasions, the United States told us at the time of its action last August that it had based its decision to act on compelling evidence.

Kosovo

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the mission statement for the Kosovo extraction force based in Macedonia. [68802]

Mr. George Robertson: The exact mission statement of the NATO-led Extraction force, operation "Joint Guarantor" is classified. However, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 578, to the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson).

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the report from the British contingent in the Kosovo Verification Mission on the circumstances of the recent killings. [68758]

Mr. George Robertson: In December 1998, the British contingent of verifiers became the first to be fully integrated into the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) Kosovo Verification Mission and does not, therefore, produce separate reports. Reports by the Kosovo Verification Mission, including those covering the Racak killings, are not releasable beyond the OSCE and it is therefore not possible to place a copy in the Library.

The circumstances of the Racak killings were, however, covered in a statement made by the Chairman of the Permanent Council of the OSCE on 18 January, and I am arranging to place a copy in the Library of the House.

Operational Costs

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the estimated costs of (a) Operation Deliberate Forge, (b) Operation Radome and (c) Operation Kingower; how the costs will be apportioned between (i) named international bodies and (ii) named countries; and if the costs to the United Kingdom will be met from his Department's budget or from the Government's contingency funds; [68254]

(2) what is the cost to date of the NATO extraction force in Macedonia; and how the cost is divided between the participating states. [68253]

Mr. George Robertson: Operation Kingower is the name given to the United Kingdom planning for support of any action that may be undertaken in Kosovo. It incorporates a range of operations including Operation Radome, which is the UK contribution to the NATO Kosovo Air Verification Mission, the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe Kosovo Verification Mission and the NATO Kosovo Extraction Force. Operation Deliberate Forge is the UK contribution to NATO air operations over Bosnia.

We calculate that the extra costs to Defence Votes of the activities covered by Operation Kingower will amount to some £7 million in the current financial year; the costs of Operation Deliberate Forge in same period are likely to amount to some £10 million. These operations are funded on a national basis. Their costs were included in the overall forecast of costs for unprogrammed overseas operations in the current financial year for which the Secretary of State has sought a contribution from the Reserve.

Multi-launch Rocket System

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the multi-launch rocket system future phase one rocket (FFOR); and if he will list the project milestones. [68756]

Mr. Spellar: The Future Phase One Rocket project has been re-titled the Guided Multiple-Launched Rocket System programme. The United Kingdom is participating in a five-nation collaborative Engineering and Manufacturing Development contract, which was placed by the United States Government in November 1998. On current plans, this collaborative programme will start initial production in 2004, with initial deliveries to the UK in 2006. The system is expected to enter UK service in 2010.

Project Horizon

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessments he has made of building a new national warship following a decision to withdraw from Project Horizon; [68515]

(2) what assessment he has made of the cost of withdrawing from Project Horizon. [68514]

Mr. George Robertson: We have made no decision to withdraw from Project Horizon. I am urgently addressing the way forward with our French and Italian partners.

A preliminary assessment has indicated that, as an alternative to Project Horizon, a national warship option, together with the continued collaborative development of the PAAMS anti-air missile system, could provide the Royal Navy with the capability it needs, in an affordable and effective manner.

Iraq

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which nations participate in the patrolling of the northern and southern no-fly zones in Iraq; what has been the total cost of the operations to date; and how the cost is apportioned between each nation. [68249]

Mr. George Robertson: Both British and United States aircraft currently patrol the No-Fly Zones. Since patrolling of the northern and southern No-Fly-Zones began (in 1991 and 1992 respectively), the extra costs of UK participation amount to some £70 million. It is not possible to confirm costs for the US contribution.

Gulf Forces

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost each year since 1991 of the deployment of British Forces to the Gulf. [68250]

Mr. George Robertson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of the SFOR de-mining programme in Bosnia and Herzegovina. [68252]

Mr. George Robertson: SFOR does not have a "de-mining programme" and does not undertake de-mining in Bosnia and Herzegovina other than in support of its own operations. Under the General Framework Agreement for Peace (the Dayton Accords) the responsibility for mine clearance lies with the Entity Armed Forces. SFOR's involvement is limited to monitoring their progress and to the provision of mine awareness training.

Albania

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when NATO's standing Mediterranean force, Stanavformed, visited the Albanian port of Durres; and what was the purpose of the visit. [68803]

Mr. George Robertson: Elements of Standing Naval Force Mediterranean visited Durres, Albania from 8 to 10 July 1998. The visit was a demonstration of co-operation within Partnership for Peace with Albania.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if NATO's partnership for peace activities in Albania and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia have been (a) fulfilled, (b) extended and (c) expanded. [68760]

Mr. George Robertson: NATO/Partnership for Peace (PfP) activities in Albania and Macedonia have expanded in line with NATO's wider efforts to stabilise Albania, Macedonia and regional security. The development of PfP Exercise Co-operative Best Effort 98 in Macedonia and PfP Exercise Co-operative Assembly 98 in Albania are two examples; as is the recent extension of the mandate and staff numbers of the NATO/PfP Co-ordination Cell in Albania. As part of an expanded series of expert team visits to both countries, the United Kingdom has contributed to a PfP logistics seminar in Macedonia and an Explosive Ordnance Disposal Training Team to Albania.

Operation Desert Fox

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the total cost and (b) the average daily cost to the United Kingdom of Operation Desert Fox. [68248]

Mr. George Robertson: The extra cost to the United Kingdom of Operation Desert Fox was £3 million. UK participation in the operation lasted for three days, giving an average daily cost of some £1 million.

Nerve Gas Attacks (Japan)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 651, regarding nerve gas attacks, if the chemical and biological defence sector will undertake to analyse and assess the results of the Japanese long-term follow-up programme once they are published. [67628]

Mr. Spellar: The Government will undertake an analysis and assessment of the data once these are published.

Disposal Sales Agency

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the private companies that ship Disposal Sales Agency equipment overseas. [68199]

Mr. Spellar: The Disposal Sales Agency does not employ private companies to ship equipment abroad. All sales are based on the "as and where lying" principle, which puts the responsibility on the buyer for collection from the location of disposal.

Private companies may subsequently export the equipment under licence but, in doing so, make their own arrangements for shipping.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Disposal Sales Agency uses MOD airfields to export goods. [68193]

Mr. Spellar: No. The DSA offer surplus military equipment to the home and overseas market on an "as and where lying" basis and the responsibility for collection from MOD premises is with the buyer.

Propellants

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from whom tenders for propellant for (a) Seawolf, (b) Sea Skua, (c) Starstreak, (d) ASRAAM, (e) Rapier and (f) MR Trigat have been invited. [68079]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 February 1999]: Except in the case of Sea Skua, supply of propellant for the missile systems listed is the responsibility of the relevant prime contractors. For Sea Skua, the MOD has contracted directly with Royal Ordnance Summerfield for refurbishment of the rocket motors.

Chapelcross and Calderhall Reactors

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast operational life of the reactors at Chapelcross and Calderhall. [68835]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 328–29.

Short Range Air Defence Systems

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Future Short and Very Short Range Air Defence Systems; and if he will list the project milestones. [68511]

Mr. Spellar: The Future Very Short and Short Range Air Defence Missile System is intended to succeed the Rapier and High Velocity Missile systems. Feasibility Studies have been carried out under an 8 nation Memorandum of Understanding, for which UK is the pilot nation. On current plans, future studies will be conducted prior to approval of the Assessment phase, which will be sought in 2001. Approval for the Demonstration and Production phase is planned for 2006.

Air Missiles

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the beyond visual range air-to-air missile; and if he will list the project milestones. [68504]

Mr. Spellar: We are currently evaluating proposals from Matra BAe Dynamics, on behalf of a European consortium consisting of DASA LFK, Alenia, Saab and CASA, and from Raytheon Systems Ltd., to meet our requirement for a Beyond Visual Range Air-to-Air Missile for Eurofighter.

We hope to announce the award of a contract to the successful bidder later this year. In advance of this decision it is not possible to give any useful information on the likely project milestones.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the conventionally armed stand off missile; and if he will list the project milestones. [68502]

Mr. Spellar: The RAF have a requirement for a highly effective stand off weapon to attack high value fixed targets while minimising the risk of aircraft losses and civilian casualties. Following an international competition involving seven companies, a development and production contract was awarded in February 1997 to Matra BAe (UK) Ltd for their Storm Shadow missile. It is intended to be fitted on Tornado GR4, Harrier GR7 and Eurofighter. The major programme milestone is to finalise development and commence production in the spring/summer of 2001.

Anti-tank Guided Weapon System

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Medium Range Third-Generation Anti-Tank Guided Weapon System; and if he will list the project milestones. [68506]

Mr. Spellar: Medium Range TRIGAT is a collaborative programme with France, Germany, Belgium, and the Netherlands to meet our Medium Range Anti-Tank Guided Weapon System requirement. It is in the later stages of development and we are currently considering whether to participate in the production phase.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Thames Barrier

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the date by which the Thames Barrier will no longer fulfil its primary function; and if he will make a statement. [68053]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

The Thames Barrier is a robust and flexible installation with a design based on rates of sea level rise predicted in the 1970s which were higher than those currently anticipated. It provides London with a high level of protection from tidal flooding and with normal care and maintenance should continue to do so until at least the latter part of the next century. Even then, although the barrier may need to be closed more frequently it will continue to fulfil its primary function.

The Environment Agency is currently considering the wider long-term flood defence needs of London in consultation with interested parties.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what action has been taken by (a) his Department and (b) HM Magistrates Courts Service Inspectorate from January 1996 to date in respect of reported incidents of fraud or gross mismanagement in relation to payments by or funding of magistrates' courts committees. [68720]

Mr. Hoon: Two incidents have arisen since 1 January 1996. The first was investigated by the Department's Internal Audit Division but was resolved without the Department having to take action. The second has not yet been resolved. There have been exchanges between the Department, the Inspectorate, the Magistrates Courts Committee and the paying authority and advice has been given and recommendations made. What further action is needed will depend on decisions by the Magistrates Courts Committee and the paying authority in the light of legal advice they have taken.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the incidents of fraud or gross mismanagement that have been brought to the attention of the Lord Chancellor's Department or Her Majesty's Magistrates Courts Service Inspectorate relating to payments by and funding of magistrates courts committees from 1 January 1996 to date. [68719]

Mr. Hoon: Since 1 January 1996, there have been two incidents relating to payments by and funding of Magistrates Courts Committees which have been brought to the attention of the Lord Chancellor's Department or Her Majesty's Magistrates Courts Service Inspectorate. In the first case there was no loss to public funds and there were no proceedings for fraud. In the second case, both the Magistrates Courts Committee and the paying authority have taken legal advice and the matter has yet to be resolved.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he proposes to take to reform the system of financial and administrative accountability of magistrates courts committees; and what steps he plans to take to implement the recommendations of the Magistrates Courts Service Inspectorate Thematic Review of May 1998. [68752]

Mr. Hoon: We have issued guidance on the content of Magistrates Courts Committee published annual reports which are the principal means by which committees account to their paying authorities, to the Lord Chancellor and to the public. We will take forward the recommendations of the MCSI's thematic review in consultation with the Inspectorate themselves, the Central Council of Magistrates Courts Committees and the Local Government Association.

SCOTLAND

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) surgical waiting list figures and (b) specialist outpatient consultation figures for Scotland for (i) March 1997, (ii) September 1997, (iii) March 1998 and (iv) September 1998. [66886]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 25 January 1999]: Information on the number of patients on the inpatient/day case waiting list for surgical specialties, on the dates requested, is given in Table 1.

Information on waiting lists is collected centrally only for hospital inpatients and day cases. Data are available on first outpatient referrals and the length of time that patients waited for their first outpatient appointment. The percentage of patients who received a first outpatient appointment within 9 weeks and 18 weeks following a General Medical Practitioner/General Dental Practitioner referral, for the quarters requested, is provided in Table 2.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Table 1

NHS in Scotland: Inpatient and day case waiting list

Date	Number on waiting list for surgical specialties [1]	Total Number on waiting list

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 18 January 1998, Official Report, column 358, on the Skye Bridge Toll Order, if a copy of the Assignation Statement was made available for inspection with the Order from 26 June to 7 August 1992. [67968]

Mr. Macdonald: No. Paragraph 14A(3) of Schedule 1 to the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984 only requires the Assignation Statement to be made available with the draft Order. This was done from 1 November to 13 December 1991.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Scottish Natural Heritage

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects Scottish Natural Heritage to bring forward detailed proposals to widen access to the countryside in Scotland. [68051]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland asked Scottish Natural Heritage to advise him on whether changes in legislation were required to provide greater opportunity for people to enjoy the countryside. Scottish Natural Heritage published its advice early this year and we announced our response on 2 February 1999.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68397]

Mr. Dewar: Almost all of the current responsibilities of The Scottish Office and its agencies and associated departments will, from 1 July 1999, be the responsibility of Scottish Ministers following devolution. Scottish Ministers will also assume responsibilities which currently fall to other Government Departments.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68413]

Mr. Dewar: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

From 1 July 1999 most Scottish legislation will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Housing Repairs

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent by the councils of (a) Edinburgh, (b) Glasgow, (c) Aberdeen and (d) Dundee on assistance to private sector housing repairs, indicating separately (i) replacement of lead water pipes and (ii) adaptations to help people with disabilities in each of the past 10 years. [68536]

Mr. Macdonald: Total expenditure on private sector grants in the most recent 10 years for which information is available is as follows. Grant expenditure on replacing lead pipes and adaptations for disabled people is not recorded separately.

Private sector repair grants: 1988 to 1997

Amount of Grant paid (£000)

Year	Aberdeen	Dundee	Edinburgh	Glasgow
1988	787	934	31,138	19,886
1989	751	658	15,209	30,197
1990	824	1,022	26,476	18,691
1991	1,365	1,115	10,289	13,932
1992	1,121	1,175	19,138	13,723
1993	510	1,075	10,868	10,587
1994	307	1,137	6,140	11,105
1995	599	1,957	12,169	1,019
1996	976	1,531	3,274	2,396
1997	382	1,335	1,149	2,763

Housing (Disabled People)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to ensure that enough ground floor dwellings remain in public sector housing to enable houses adapted for occupation by people with disabilities to be provided to those who need them. [68534]

Mr. Macdonald: A range of policies is in place with the aim of ensuring adequate housing provision in the future for people with disabilities.

All new housing funded by Scottish Homes will have to be built to barrier free standards that are contained within the Agency's new housing design guidance. We have also proposed amendments to the building regulations for all new dwellings which will address issues such as access, the provision of a downstairs WC, corridor and door widths, turning circles, sockets and switches.

There are a number of safeguards within the right-to-buy provisions to enable local authorities to retain houses required for specific purposes. Under Section 61(4) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987, the right to buy does not apply to groups of houses provided with facilities designed or adapted for the needs of elderly or disabled people. These properties are generally known as sheltered housing.

Section 69 of the Act allows public sector landlords to apply to the Secretary of State for permission to refuse to sell individual houses with features suitable for occupation by persons of pensionable age. Such houses must have facilities which are substantially different to those of an ordinary house.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Domestic Water Supply

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has (a) to give the latest EU directive allowing less lead in domestic water supplies legal effect and (b) to provide funding to those councils which are already trying to operate within the new directive. [68535]

Mr. Macdonald: The UK is required to transpose the standards set in the new EU drinking water directive into national law by 25 December 2000. Any new burden on local authorities arising from the directive will be discussed within the Expenditure Committee of the Working Party on Local Government Finance.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

A9 (Improvement Scheme)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost of the proposed A9 improvement scheme, Helmsdale to the Ord of Caithness. [68993]

Mr. Macdonald: £11.4 million excluding Value Added Tax.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the Government's preferred engineering scheme for the A9, Helmsdale to the Ord of Caithness, currently under assessment as part of the Trunk Road Review. [68991]

Mr. Macdonald: I have today arranged for a copy of the plan and profile of the preferred route to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the status of the (a) Brora bypass, (b) Portgower-Green Park and (c) Craickaig-Culgower proposed A9 improvement schemes. [68992]

Mr. Macdonald: The Brora bypass, Portgower to Green Park and Crackaig to Culgower schemes were progressed to outline feasibility stage in the early 1990s. However in 1995 the Government announced the A9 Dornoch to Scrabster Route Action Plan (RAP). The objectives of this plan were to consider (i) road safety, (ii) consistent journey times, (iii) improved overtaking opportunities, and (iv) traffic calming through the communities. The 3 schemes are being assessed against this criteria. Improvement schemes identified in the RAP will be implemented subject to competing priorities on the trunk road network and the availability of appropriate levels of funding.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Local Deprivation Indicators

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which measures of local deprivation his Department and its agencies use in considering allocation of funds to local projects. [66718]

Mr. Andrew Smith: This Department's policies are central to local activity in addressing social exclusion and in stimulating the regeneration of deprived communities. As well as our mainstream funding of education and employment initiatives, the Department leads on a number of local area-based initiatives which aim to raise educational standards, improve skills and employability and encourage lifelong learning. This Department is keen to ensure that disadvantaged communities benefit, and therefore includes measures of deprivation when selecting areas in which initiatives will operate. As well as using a variety of data sources, including the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' Index of Deprivation, the Department also recognises that the identification of pockets of deprivation in otherwise non-deprived areas needs local knowledge.

The range of indices used for each initiative varies depending on the policy objectives, as the following examples illustrate.

(i) Assessment of Education Action Zones draws on indicators of deprivation at school level, such as eligibility for free school meals.

(ii) The second round of New Start partnerships which are focused on areas which show relatively high levels of disengagement from learning by young people. Government Offices also used information available to them on levels of deprivation to select the project areas.

(iii) The selection of Employment Zones used indices based on the level of long-term unemployment (12 months and over, and 18 months and over) and the local employment rate.

The selection of successful bids for running most pilots or area-based initiatives is also based on the quality of plans and feasibility of proposals. A final criterion for selecting pilot areas is an assessment of what is already happening in the area to avoid partnerships being overburdened by the bureaucracy involved in participating in different initiatives. This Department is very supportive of the DETR's work in improving the co-ordination of area-based initiatives so that communities can benefit from a coherent approach to regeneration in their area.

New Deal

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many persons aged 18 to 24 years have started the New Deal since its inception; [66964]

(2) how many persons aged 18 to 24 years have (a) been invited to join the New Deal and (b) failed to keep their appointments following such an invitation; [66965]

(3) how many persons aged 18 to 24 years who started the New Deal subsequently (a) dropped out and (b) failed to complete the arrangements for any other reasons; [66966]

(4) how many entrants to the New Deal have completed the arrangements and been placed in (a) subsidised employment, (b) training, (c) the environmental task force and (d) the voluntary sector; [66967]

(5) how many offenders who are subject to supervision by the Probation Service have (a) commenced the New Deal and (b) completed the arrangements. [66968]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. James Clappison, dated 1 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply direct to your questions regarding the progress of New Deal for young people aged 18 to 24. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The latest Government Statistical Service (GSS) figures to the end of November 1998 and provisional Management Information to the end of December 1998 showed that over 213,320 young people had started the New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds. This includes those invited to join New Deal but who ceased to claim Jobseeker's Allowance before their first New Deal interview. Of the total, 13,660 had entered the Employment option; 27,070 and entered Full-Time Education and Training; 7,130 had joined the Environment Task Force; and 7,660 had joined the Voluntary Sector option. Based on the Government Statistical Service figures, of the young people who had left New Deal by the end of November, 40,660 had moved into unsubsidised jobs; 10,050 had left to claim other benefits, 7,450 had left Jobseeker's Allowance to other known destinations and 22,760 to unknown destinations.

You have also requested details on ex-offenders as a specific group of people. I should explain that offenders, ex-offenders and those on probation do not have to declare their status to the Employment Service except when requesting early entry onto an employment programme, including New Deal. The latest GSS figures to the end of November 1998 show that 3,505 young people in these categories had requested early entry to New Deal. At present we do not separately monitor this group of entrants by outcome.

Of the 203,100 young people who had started New Deal by the end of November 14,170 signed off Jobseeker's Allowance before attending their initial appointment.

I hope this is helpful.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when his Department expects training and enterprise councils to be able to invite bids for adult training in the financial year 1999–2000. [68723]

Mr. Mudie: The planning round for work based learning for adults is under way now. The Secretary of State wrote to all TEC Chairs on 18 January 1999 to give details of national budgets and targets for TEC managed programmes.

Standards and Effectiveness Unit

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many staff are currently employed in the Standards and Effectiveness Unit in his Department; and what is the budgeted cost of the Unit for 1998–99. [68934]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 2 February 1999]: As at 30 December 1998, the total number of people employed in the Standards and Effectiveness Unit was 143. The complement is drawn mainly from existing Civil Servants together with some 14 members of staff who have recent experience of the wider world of education such as headteachers, researchers and inspectors.

The total budgeted cost of the Unit for this financial year is £4.8m.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will ensure that the funding per pupil in grant maintained schools for 1999–2000 is increased in line with inflation; and if he will make a statement. [68866]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 2 February 1999]: Grant-maintained schools' recurrent funding per pupil for 1999–2000 will be protected at its 1998–99 level in cash terms. Where a grant-maintained school's budget for 1999–2000, as calculated through its local education authority's Fair Funding allocation formula, is greater than its protected level of funding, calculated from its 1998–99 funding per pupil, it will receive that higher amount.

The policy of protection against undue turbulence continues a process of managing the transition of grant-maintained schools' budget arrangements into alignment with those for other schools begun by the previous Government, which set in hand a phased removal of the cash protection applied to the central element of annual maintenance grant.

Teacher Training Agency

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he proposes to undertake a review of the Teacher Training Agency. [69145]

Ms Estelle Morris: In accordance with the Government's policy of conducting quinquennial reviews of all non-departmental public bodies, the Department is launching today, in conjunction with the Welsh Office, a review of the Teacher Training Agency. Following Cabinet Office guidelines, the first stage of the review will take the form of a "prior options" study with the following terms of reference:

1. to review the Teacher Training Agency's functions, and the likely future need for those functions;
2. To consider the powers, remit, constitutional status, membership and activities of the Teacher Training Agency;
3. to consider whether, on efficiency grounds, some or all of the functions of the Teacher Training Agency can be carried out within an alternative organisational framework including by another public, private or voluntary sector body or otherwise within government;
4. to review the efficiency and effectiveness of the Teacher Training Agency in carrying out its functions.

We have asked that the review should have particular regard to:

the establishment next year of the General Teaching Councils for England and for Wales and of the National College for School Leadership; and the major agenda for modernisation of the teaching profession set out in the recent Green Papers for England and for Wales on which the government is currently consulting.

We should welcome comments on those matters to be covered by the review from all those with an interest in the Teacher Training Agency's work. Comments, which may be made public unless respondents specifically request otherwise, should be sent by Friday 12 March 1999 to:

Graham Holley
Teachers Group
Department for Education and Employment
Sanctuary Buildings
Great Smith Street
Westminster
London SW1P 3BT.

We have asked that this first stage of the review should be completed by 30 April 1999. The findings will be published and made available to Parliament.

Teachers

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list, for each of the last three years, the percentage of full-time and part-time teaching staff in (a) schools and (b) further education colleges without a first degree. [68731]

Ms Estelle Morris: Teachers in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools in England, without a first degree or equivalent are as follows:

Percentage

	Full-time	Part-time
31 March 1995	40	51
31 March 1996	38	49
31 March 1997[1]	36	47

1994–95	25	21
1995–96	26	23
1996–97	26	24

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list, for each of the last three years, the percentage of full-time and part-time teaching staff in (a) schools and (b) further education colleges with a postgraduate certificate in education. [68732]

Ms Estelle Morris: Teachers in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools, in England, with a postgraduate certificate in education (PGCE) for schools are as follows:

Percentage

	31 March 1995	31 March 1996	31 March 1997[1]
Full-time	30	32	33
Part-time	25	26	28

[1] 1997 data are provisional

Teaching staff in further education colleges in England, with a PGCE (for schools or FE) are as follows:

			Percentage
	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Full-time	17	18	19
Part-time	6	6	7

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list, for each of the last three years, the percentage of full-time and part-time teaching staff in (a) schools and (b) further education colleges with no teaching qualifications. [68754]

Ms Estelle Morris: Teachers in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools, in England, who do not have Qualified Teacher Status are as follows:

			Percentage
	31 March 1995	31 March 1996	31 March 1997 [1]
Full-time	1	1	1
Part-time	3	4	4

Teaching staff in further education colleges in England, without a teaching qualification[2] are as follows:

			Percentage
	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Full-time	9	9	9
Part-time	15	14	14

[1] 1997 data are provisional

[2] There is no equivalent to qualified teacher status for FE. The teaching qualifications include postgraduate certificate of education, degrees with qualified teacher status, certificates of education and other vocational teaching qualifications.

Employment Service

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many staff in the Employment Service have been employed for less than (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) one year and (d) two years. [68940]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 2 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply direct to your question regarding the number of staff in the Employment Service who have been employed for less than (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) one year and (d) two years. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

The information given in the table below is the latest available (as at 31 December 1998) and includes both permanent and temporary staff.

	Number
Total number of staff	35,994
of whom:
employed less than three months	2,969
employed three but less than six months	1,948
employed six but less than 12 months	1,452
employed 12 but less than 24 months	2,639

I hope this is helpful.

HEALTH

Drugs Prescriptions

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the average proportion of non-generic drug prescriptions in 1997–98 in (a) prescribing practices and (b) dispensing practices; [68445]

(2) what were the average comparative costs of drugs per patient in 1997–98 in (a) prescribing practices and (b) dispensing practices; [68444]

(3) what was the cost to the NHS in 1997–98 of drugs (a) prescribed by doctors and (b) dispensed by doctors; [68442]

(4) what was the average cost of non-generic drugs in 1997–98 in (a) NHS hospitals, (b) pharmacies and (c) dispensing practices. [68449]

Mr. Denham: The available information is shown in the table.

Drugs prescribed in general practice[1] in England and dispensed in the community, 1997–98 [2]

	Prescribing practices [3]	Dispensing practices [4]
Average net ingredient cost[5] per patient[6]	£78	£118
Average net ingredient cost per non generic item prescribed[7]	£11.42	£10.49
Percentage of prescribed items which were non generic[7]	34 per cent.	74 per cent.
Total net ingredient cost	£3,791 million	£387 million

[1] Information for items prescribed and dispensed in National Health Service hospitals is not available.

[2] The prescription information was obtained from the Prescribing Analyses and Cost (PACT) system and is based on a full analysis of all prescriptions written by general practitioners and Practice Nurses in England which are dispensed in England, Wales, Scotland, Northern Ireland and the Isle of Man. All figures exclude dressings and appliances.

[3] Drugs prescribed by prescribing practices which are dispensed by community pharmacists.

[4] Includes drugs prescribed by dispensing practices which are dispensed by community pharmacists.

[5] The net ingredient cost is the basic cost of a drug. This cost does not take account of discounts, dispensing costs, fees or prescription charge income.

[6] The number of patients is derived from patient lists and includes temporary patients. The patient list size is based on information submitted by practices to the Prescription Pricing Authority. List size as at March 1998 has been used. Figures for average net ingredient cost per patient have been rounded to the nearest £.

[7] In PACT, prescription items can be prescribed generically, and recorded as a generic, but dispensed and reimbursed as a proprietary because a generic does not exist. The percentage of non generic drugs prescribed in the reply does not include these items.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the total NHS expenditure on drugs in 1997–98; [68441]

(2) what was the total (a) expenditure and (b) allocation for drugs in (i) the NHS and (ii) each health authority in 1997–98. [68451]

Mr. Denham: In 1997–98 total National Health Service expenditure on drugs was £5,195 million. Drugs prescribed by Family Health Services (FHS) practitioners account for £4,107 million of the total, and those prescribed by hospital and community health service (HCHS) providers account for £1,088 million.

The total allocation for FHS drugs (which includes an amount retained centrally) in 1997–98 was £4,123 million. The table shows health authority allocations and expenditure for FHS drugs.

HCHS allocations do not specify an amount for drugs. HCHS expenditure on drugs occurs mainly in NHS trusts and cannot be attributed accurately to health authorities.

Herbal Medicines

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to change the regulations on the sale and use of herbal medicines. [67854]

Ms Jowell: Ministers have asked the Medicines Control Agency, in the light of the expansion in the range of herbal remedies on the market in recent years, to consider whether there is a need to update the lists of specified potent or toxic herbs which are subject to restrictions on sale and supply. The lists of herbs, which are set out in the Schedule to the Medicines (Retail Sale or Supply of Herbal Remedies) Order 1977, have not been reviewed since they were first established. If the Agency identifies a need to amend the lists, the proposals will be subject to public consultation.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68406]

Mr. Denham: Following the comprehensive spending review, there are two areas where the Department will be transferring responsibility. First, support for local authorities which accommodate adult asylum seekers and asylum-seeking families will be funded through the Home Office. Secondly, the London rough sleepers Initiative which has to date been funded by the Department, will become the responsibility of the London rough sleepers unit, an agency which will report to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68422]

Mr. Denham: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

PVC Toys

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the recommendations of the European Commission's Scientific Committee on Toxicity, Ecotoxicity and the Environment in respect of harmful chemicals in soft PVC toys. [68916]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him today to PQ number 68917, Official Report, column 623.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Independent Adjudication Officers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what level of qualifications and experience is required for those undertaking the role of independent adjudication officers in social security cases; what medical training or guidance they receive with regard to their duties; and if he will make a statement. [67370]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 2 February 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what level of qualifications and experience is required for those undertaking the role of independent adjudication officers in social security cases, what medical training or guidance they receive with regard to their duties, and if he will make a statement.

The relevant experience of Benefits Agency staff appointed to be Adjudication Officers (AOs) is taken into account in deciding the level of duties undertaken. AOs considering Disability Living Allowance (DLA), Attendance Allowance claims and questions in relation to claims for Industrial Injury Disablement Benefits are of an executive grade. The minimum qualifications for direct entry into this grade are five 'O' levels/GCSEs and two A levels.

Prior to commencing their duties all AOs receive a full adjudication training programme as well as periodic refresher training as and when appropriate, for example when changes in legislation occur. In addition to training, both general and specific adjudication guidance is provided in the Adjudication Officer's Guide issued by Central Adjudication Services.

Non medical adjudication officers have access to Medical Services as a source of advice when considering adjudication decisions on claims to disability benefits including Incapacity Benefit (IB). This advice may take the form of specific advice on a particular query, or a full medical report following examination of the claimant. For the All Work Test on IB the medical report forms part of the evidence of AO uses in reaching their decision.

Guidance is also available to AOs dealing with DLA in the form of the Disability Handbook which provides information on the likely effects on a variety of medical conditions. The Handbook has been written by medical staff of the Department of Social Security with advice from the DLA Advisory Board and contributions from many organisations representing people with disabilities. Decisions on entitlement to DLA are not medical decisions although AOs may consult Medical Services doctors for advice when considering more complex cases. Medical services doctors, who are all experienced medical practitioners, receive special training for this role.

Some adjudication decisions, in claims for Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance, are made by Adjudicating Medical Authorities (AMAs). These individuals are fully qualified medical practitioners with wide experience of general medicine. In addition the AMA will undergo specific training to enable them to undertake this specialised form of assessment. The Chief Medical Advisor to the Department of Social Security formally appoints the AMA on successful completion of this training and the length of the appointment is dependent on the doctor maintaining the quality and professional standards laid down for them. In addition to their formal training AMAs are issued with Handbooks, for each of the above benefits, which acts as an aide memoire to the doctor and which cover all aspects of this work.

Under the Government's Decision Making and Appeals (DMA) provisions medical examinations will remain the same. However for IIDB and SDA instead of making a decision under DMA the AMA will instead offer advice in the form of a doctor's report. The Decision maker will be guided by the Doctor's Report in reaching their decision on any entitlement to benefit.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Overpayments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he intends to deal with the backlog of debt owed to the Benefits Agency due to overpayment of benefits; and if he will detail his plans for the write-off of old debts. [67758]

Angela Eagle: Administration of the Benefits Agency and recovery of overpayments is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. He will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 2 February 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how we intend to deal with the backlog of debt owed to the Benefits Agency (BA) due to overpayment of benefits; and if I will detail our plans for the write-off of old debt.

We are determined to tackle the management of debt recovery in a structured, effective way. To support this, BA introduced a new debt strategy early in 1998.

An Accounts Receivable Controller (ARC) in April 98, with responsibility for the whole process of debt, including control, management, and recovery. As a result BA has a more co-ordinated and cohesive organisation to deal with debt issues.

A new Debt Accounting and Management system to account for and assist in the prompt identification and actioning of debt is also currently being developed. It will provide an automated, cost-effective capability to obtain control of debt, and improved Debt management information to enable detailed root cause analysis of debt. The result will be to minimise the causes of debt and maximise recoveries.

The number of overpayment cases awaiting calculation is now under control and is expected to fall to a number equivalent to one month's intake of work by March 1999. A package of administrative easements agreed with Treasury have played a significant part in assisting BA reduce stocks of arrears of outstanding overpayments whilst ensuring recovery was actively pursued where possible.

There is no longer a need to write-off old recoverable debts under the easements package, although debts may be written off under the criteria laid out in current instructions; these are debts over £25 less than £100 abandoned 6 years after last effective recovery; debts between £100 and £300, abandoned after 10 years;

debts over £300 abandoned after 20 years;

debts under £25

Vaccine Damage Payments

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to announce the outcome of the review of compensation for vaccine damaged children. [68239]

Mr. Bayley: Consideration is still being given to this complex and sensitive issue and an announcement will be made in due course.

Severely Disabled Children

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors underlie the postponement until April 2001 of the extension of the higher rate mobility component of the disability living allowance to three and four-year-old severely disabled children who have difficulties walking. [68698]

Mr. Bayley: The proposed extension will require legislation. If approved by Parliament, the new provision will come into operation at the same time as other benefit changes for disabled people are made as part of a co-ordinated package to help the most severely disabled people. These changes would help ensure that resources are better targeted at those who most need help.

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what financial assistance is available to severely disabled under-fives to enable them to attend playgroups and other pre-school provision. [68696]

Mr. Bayley: There is a wide range of financial assistance available which contributes towards the extra costs faced by families with severely disabled children under five. No attempt is made to specify how families should spend the benefits which include:

Within Income Support, income based Jobseeker's Allowance, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit, groups identified as likely to have extra expenses receive help through the disability premium structure.

The new Disability Income Guarantee will provide extra help in these premiums for families with disabled children getting the highest rate of the care component of Disability Living Allowance.

We are also proposing to extend the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance (currently £35.85 a week) to severely disabled 3–4 year olds with a mobility problem.

In addition, some assistance may be available from the Local Authority.

London Organised Fraud Investigation Team

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the report produced by Cheryl Weaver into the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team. [68564]

Mr. Timms: None. Cheryl Weaver was attached to the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team as a temporary seconde to gain a personal understanding of its role and function.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the current situation of the employees of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team. [68565]

Mr. Timms: The current situation of employees of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team (LOFIT) is a matter for the Association of London Government (ALG) as the body responsible for the management of LOFIT and for Westminster City Council as the formal employer of the staff.

Pensions (Minimum Income Guarantee)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of pensioners who (a) will be eligible for the new pension income guarantee and (b) will claim the guarantee. [68821]

Mr. Timms: We estimate that around 1.5 million pensioners will be receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee at April 1999. Estimates of the numbers of pensioners who will be eligible for, but not claiming, the Minimum Income Guarantee, and estimates of the numbers who will make a claim are currently being revised following the discovery of an error in the published take-up estimates. We expect to be publishing revised estimates in the Spring.

Kenneth Gilbert

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the appeal by Kenneth Gilbert of Brixham in relation to his disability care allowance will be heard; and if he will ensure the hearing takes place before a disability appeals tribunal. [68798]

Angela Eagle: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 2 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when the appeal by Kenneth Gilbert of Brixham in relation to his disability care allowance will be heard; and if he will ensure the hearing takes place before a disability appeals tribunal.

It may be helpful if I explain that there are 4 tiers to the Disability Living Allowance (DLA) adjudication process; new claim, first tier review, second tier review, and appeal to a Disability Appeal Tribunal.

Mr. Gilbert submitted a DLA claim on 21 February 1995 and was awarded the higher rate of the mobility component from and including 7 February 1995.

On 29 February 1996, Mr. Gilbert requested a review and asked for care needs to be considered. He was awarded the lowest rate of the care component from and including 1 March 1996. His entitlement to the mobility component was unaffected.

On 29 October 1998, Mr. Gilbert asked for a review of his entitlement to the care component. He completed a claim pack with details of his current care needs but on 9 December 1998 an adjudication officer (AO) was unable to find grounds to review the previous decision. The decision was notified to Mr. Gilbert on 23 December 1998 with details about his right of review within 3 months.

I should explain that if a review is requested more than 3 months after the previous decision was notified, the decision may only be reviewed if specific criteria are satisfied. For example, the previous decision must have been made in ignorance of a material fact, or based on a mistake as to a material fact, or there must have been a relevant change of circumstances.

On 13 January 1999, a request for an appeal to a Disability Appeal Tribunal against the decision dated 9 December 1998 was received from Mr. Gilbert. The team leader of the operational section responsible for Mr. Gilbert's claim telephoned him on 28 January and explained that the correct next stage in the adjudication process was a review and that this would include a full explanation of the reasons for the decision. Mr. Gilbert said he was happy about this and had merely been confused about the procedures when he requested an appeal. The team leader explained that if Mr. Gilbert was dissatisfied with the outcome of the review decision, he would then have the right to request an appeal to a Tribunal within 3 months of the notification date.

On 28 January a different AO considered all the evidence, including further clarification of his care needs given by Mr. Gilbert during his telephone conversation with the operational team leader. A review decision, upholding the previous decision, was completed on 28 January and was issued to Mr. Gilbert on 1 February 1999. The decision carries the right of appeal to a Disability Appeal Tribunal.

If Mr. Gilbert does request an appeal against the decision of 28 January, the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) will be responsible for the administration of the appeal hearing and for inviting Mr. Gilbert to attend. The ITS is wholly independent of the Benefits Agency.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

BASIS Southern Command

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many arrests have been made each month by BASIS Southern Command since its establishment to date. [68930]

(2) how many of the investigating team of BASIS Southern Command were restricted to work in their office and unable to pursue investigations in the field from September 1998 to date; and if he will make a statement. [68931]

Mr. Timms: Questions on Benefit Agency operational matters are the responsibility of the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Iain Duncan Smith, dated 2 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking, how many arrests have been made each month by Benefits Agency Security Investigation Service (BASIS) Southern Command since its establishment to date, and how many of the investigating team of BASIS Southern Command were restricted to work in their office and unable to pursue investigations in the field from September 1998 to date.

In the period April to December 1998 BASIS investigations resulted in 667 arrests. BASIS investigators do not have powers of arrest and therefore these arrests were effected by the police. Of these, 350 arrests related to investigations conducted by the Southern Unit teams and a monthly breakdown of these is shown on the attached table.

No BASIS team has been restricted to work in their office other than where this has been necessary to complete the detailed court preparation work following an intensive investigation.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of families with children in receipt of income support distinguishing between (a) one-parent and (b) two-parent families broken down by families with (i) one child, (ii) two children, (iii) three children and (iv) four or more children; and within each group if he will list the number of children aged (1) under 12 months, (2) one to two years, (3) three to four years, (4) five to 10 years, (5) 11 to 15 years and (6) 16 to 18 years. TREASURY

Local Authority Capital Receipts

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list his latest estimates and forecast expenditure in cash terms for the capital receipts initiative for (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000, (iv) 2000–01 and (v) 2001–02. [68384]

Dr. Reid: I have been asked to reply.

The following capital allocations have been made to local authorities in England under the capital receipts initiative:

1997–98	174,270,000
1998–99	569,359,000
1999–2000	570,169,000

The total resources for housing capital allocations in 2000–01 and 2001–02, which show substantial increases on the 1999–2000 figure and deliver the remainder of the additional £5 billion for investment in housing that we are making available during the current Parliament, were announced last summer following the Comprehensive Spending Review. Decisions have yet to be made about the distribution of these resources between different programmes. We have recently consulted on a proposal to combine capital receipts initiative and other housing capital support (apart from that for disabled facilities grants) into a single funding regime from 2000–01 onwards. The outcome of this consultation exercise will be announced shortly.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative

Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action the Government are taking to speed up the implementation of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. [67520]

Ms Hewitt: At the Annual Meetings of the IMF and World Bank in October 1998 the Chancellor secured agreement on his proposals for a comprehensive review of the HIPC initiative in 1999, and is currently pressing for the review to address, among other things, the timing of debt relief given under the initiative.

The decision was also taken to allow IMF post conflict assistance programmes to count towards a country's track record under the HIPC initiative. This could bring decision points (and therefore debt relief) forward by up to twelve months for certain countries such as Rwanda.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. [67513]

Ms Hewitt: 31 out of 40 countries originally identified by the IMF/World Bank as being eligible for inclusion into the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative have begun the process of securing a sustainable exit to their debt burden. Two countries have reached the end of the process. A further seven countries have reached Decision Point.

The IMF/World Bank are to carry out a comprehensive review of the HIPC initiative this year.

Pension Investment

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to publish the consultation document on pension investment mentioned in the Pensions Green Paper (Cm. 4179). [69527]

Mr. Milburn: The Government have today published a consultation document, "Helping to deliver stakeholder pensions: flexibility in pension investment". Copies are available in the Vote Office and in the Library of the House. This takes forward the remit in the Green Paper "A new contract for welfare: partnership in pension", Cm 4179, chapter 7, paragraph 39. This contribution to the Government's pension reform strategy opens up potential for greater transparency in the pensions market which should in turn improve labour market flexibility and contribute to the strategy for improving productivity discussed in the Pre Budget Report, Cm 4076.

The financial instrument proposed in the document will be suitable for any kind of defined contribution pension: personal, occupational and, in time, stakeholder. It is not a pension in its own right. It will hold units in pooled investment schemes, making it possible for scheme members to move easily and at low cost between different kinds of pension, for example on a change of employment or a move into self employment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the number of Scud missiles held by Iraq. [68750]

Mr. George Robertson: I have been asked to reply.

The UN Special Commission on Iraq believes it has accounted for all but two of Iraq's 819 Soviet origin SCUDs and all declared launch vehicles. However, owing to the indigenous production of components and uncertainties attending the verification of the destruction of complete missiles, it is possible that Iraq has concealed a small number of 650km range SCUD type missiles. It is also possible that components were removed from missiles that were unilaterally destroyed.

Turkey (Death Penalty)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations via the British Embassy in Ankara to the Turkish Government to request that the death penalty will not be used against the suspect accused of murdering Edgar Fernandes. [68169]

Mr. Fatchett: It is for the Maltese Government to make representations to the Turkish Government to request the death penalty is not used against the suspect. The UK, along with our EU partners, opposes the use of the death penalty, and calls upon all States to abolish it.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting between Baroness Symons and the Turkish Ambassador on 7 January 1999 in respect of the Edgar Fernandes case; what was the result of that meeting; and what action his Department has taken since then. [68170]

Mr. Fatchett: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State had a private meeting with the Turkish Ambassador on 7 January 1999 at which they discussed a variety of bilateral issues. Our staff in Ankara and Valletta remain in touch with the Turkish and Maltese Governments respectively about the extradition of Mr. Mohammed Abdul Monem Abbas Aly.

Entertainment Budgets

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the entertainment budgets for each of his Department's posts abroad in the last financial year. [68171]

Mr. Fatchett: Overseas posts' budgets, including entertainment budgets, are devolved to each post. No central record is kept of detailed budget allocations for each post, and they could only be provided at excessive cost. However, central records are kept of posts expenditure, and the figures for 1997–98 are set out below.

Missing Arms Consignment (South Africa)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the South African authorities concerning a cargo of military equipment flown from RAF Manston in May 1998 destined for South Africa which failed to arrive; and if he will make a statement. [68235]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Neither I nor others in the Foreign Office have had discussions with the South African authorities on this matter. Customs and Excise, who are responsible for investigating breaches of export control restrictions, are aware of these allegations.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when an official from the British High Commission last visited the town of Famagusta; and if he will make a statement; [68310]

(2) what recent discussions he has held and with whom, on the possibility of the return of the town of Famagusta to the Republic of Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [68309]

Ms Quin: We remain active in support of UN efforts in search of a political settlement in Cyprus. The details of any settlement would have to have the agreement of both communities. The question of Varosha/Famagusta would be included in that.

Members of the High Commission in Nicosia visit Famagusta from time to time as part of their contacts with the Turkish Cypriot Community.

East Timor

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide details of the end-use monitoring undertaken by his Department into the use of Alvis armoured vehicles in Indonesia and East Timor since 1988. [68789]

Mr. Fatchett: No formal mechanisms exist at present for monitoring the end use that has been made of British defence equipment once it has been exported.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the deployment of British Saladin and Saracen armoured vehicles in East Timor by the Indonesian security forces since 1988. [68788]

Mr. Fatchett: Saladin and Saracen armoured vehicles were exported to Indonesia in the 1960s. No formal mechanisms exist for monitoring the use of British defence equipment once it has been exported. We have made clear to the Indonesian authorities that British supplied equipment should not be used against civilians to prevent the exercise of their rights of free expression, assembly and association, or in violation of other international human rights standards.

NATO Enlargement

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what modifications to the Conventional Armed Forces in Europe Treaty will be required following the accession of new NATO member states. [68740]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: No amendments to the CFE Treaty are required before the accession of new members to NATO. But our aim is that the process of adapting the Treaty, under way since 1996, will result in an agreement which better reflects the realities of today's European security environment, by moving the Treaty from a structure based on the Cold War military alliances to one based on national limits.

Arms Exports

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to change the criteria for applications for licences for the export of conventional arms; and if he will make a statement, with specific reference to his procedure for consultation. [68928]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There are no plans to make any substantive changes to the criteria. The Government are considering, however, whether it would be necessary or desirable to consolidate the arms export licensing criteria announced on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29, and those in the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports.

Diplomatic Posts (Eastern Mediterranean)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many personnel currently employed at the British High Commission in Nicosia have previously worked at the British Embassy in (a) Ankara and (b) Athens; and if he will make a statement on the inter-change of staff between the High Commission in Nicosia and the embassy at (i) Ankara and (ii) Athens; [68959]

(2) if he will make a statement on proposed changes in personnel employed at the British High Commission in Cyprus; and to which embassies or high commissions the existing personnel are being transferred; [68961]

(3) how many persons are employed at the United Kingdom High Commission office in Nicosia; how many of these are (a) Greek Cypriots and (b) Turkish Cypriots; and if he will make a statement. [68960]

Ms Quin: There are 25 UK based staff at the British High Commission in Nicosia. Two speak fluent Greek, one speaks fluent Turkish. One has served previously in Athens; another has served in Ankara. Of those leaving this year most will return to London; one will transfer to Athens.

Including part-time employees, there are 39 locally-engaged staff (the majority Greek Cypriot) in the High Commission office in Nicosia and 12 staff (the majority Turkish Cypriot) at separate premises in north Nicosia.

International Terrorism

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries which his Department considers to sponsor terrorism. [68744]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We do not have a list of countries which sponsor terrorism. This Government condemn state sponsorship of terrorism and monitors closely any evidence of such activities. Where there is evidence, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office makes the governments in question aware of our concerns as and when they arise.

Salman Rushdie

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those organisations which have maintained their fatwa on Salman Rushdie. [68748]

Mr. Fatchett: The fatwa against Salman Rushdie was decreed by the late Ayatollah Khomenei, not by any organisation or group of organisations. Ayatollah Khomenei died in 1989. A number of groups, Iranian and non-Iranian, have made statements about the fatwa over the years; many of them are of obscure status. The Iranian government have made clear their position, that they have no intention of taking any action against Salman Rushdie, nor will they encourage or assist anybody else to do so. We welcome these assurances.

Middle East

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts he has made to ensure transparency in the use of EU aid to the Palestinian Authority. [68714]

Clare Short: I have been asked to reply.

We, other EU member states and the European Commission, continue to press the Palestinian Authority to consolidate its accounts and manage its finances in a transparent and accountable manner. We welcome the recent production of a five year Development Plan by the Palestinian Authority and the availability of more information on their budgetary process.

The EC only rarely provides direct financial assistance to the PA. Where it does so, special mechanisms are set up to ensure that the funds are properly spent.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of EU aid to the Palestinian Authority; and if he will place a copy of the reports on the effectiveness of the aid in the Library. [68713]

Clare Short: I have been asked to reply.

The European Union, including individual member states, has made a major contribution to supporting the Middle East Peace Process by providing 54 per cent. ($1.7 billion) of total development assistance to the Palestinians since 1993. This includes over 650 mecu provided directly by the European Commission to the Palestinian Authority.

To enable member states to assess the effectiveness and efficiency of EC aid, we have pressed for an evaluation of the EC's last five-year programme of assistance for the Palestinians, which ended in December 1998. We understand that this evaluation is soon to be finalised, and expect the findings to be formally presented by the Commission shortly. As soon as they are available, we will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of progress made by the Palestinian Authority in combating terrorism. [68711]

Mr. Fatchett: We commend Palestinian efforts to clamp down on terrorism and their compliance so far with the security commitments signed up to in the Wye River Memorandum. Measures taken by the Palestinian Authority include the arrest of terrorist suspects, collection of illegal weapons, anti-incitement laws and provision of security plans to the Israelis. Meetings of the bilateral and trilateral committees on security issues continue to take place. We are glad to be able to assist the Palestinians in their efforts through major EU programmes of counter-terrorism assistance and security assistance. But there is still room for improvement and we urge continued co-operation between the parties to implement Wye.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Iranian Government not to provide support to organisations whose objectives are to destabilise the Chairman of the Palestinian Authority. [68767]

Mr. Fatchett: During the EU/Iran talks of 18 December 1998 in Vienna, we and our EU partners discussed the Middle East peace process with the Iranian representatives. We urged them not to obstruct the peace process. The Iranians said that they were not against peace, but it must be a just and justifiable peace. Iran welcomed the continued EU involvement in the Middle East peace process. We and our EU partners will continue to raise this issue with our Iranian interlocutors.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the percentage of Palestinians in (a) the West Bank and (b) Gaza living under the governance of the Palestinian Authority. [68765]

Mr. Fatchett: We assess that approximately 97.5 per cent. of Palestinians in the West Bank, and 100 per cent. in Gaza, live under the governance of the Palestinian Authority.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of progress towards democracy in areas under the control of the Palestinian Authority. [68751]

Mr. Fatchett: Since its establishment in May 1994 the Palestinian Authority has taken its first steps towards democracy and in January 1996 held free elections. The elections led to the establishment of the Palestinian Legislative Council. We continue to support the process of institution-building in the Palestinian Authority both bilaterally and through EU programmes.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Syria. [68747]

Mr. Fatchett: Our relations with Syria are good. I visited Syria in December 1998 and met President Asad and Foreign Minister Shara'a, and my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have been glad to receive Mr. Shara'a here on his visit to London today.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the preconditions placed on the normalisation of relations with Syria following Lockerbie, indicating which preconditions have been met and which have yet to be met. [68768]

Mr. Fatchett: There has at no stage been any consideration of attaching such conditions on the positive development of our relations with Syria.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the Foreign Minister of Syria. [68746]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I will meet the Foreign Minister of Syria today during his visit to London.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the number of Syrian troops in Lebanon. [68749]

Mr. Fatchett: We believe that under the terms of the Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Co-ordination signed by the Lebanese and Syrian Governments in May 1991, there are approximately 22,000 Syrian troops in Lebanon.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the (a) financial, (b) military and (c) strategic assistance given by Iran to (i) Hamas and (ii) Hezbollah. [68742]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) on 1 December 1998, Official Report, column 158.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans (a) he and (b) ministers in his Department have to visit Israel. [68766]

Mr. Fatchett: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has any plans to visit Israel at the present time.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made to the Palestinian Authority about the early release of Sheikh Ahmad Yassin, leader of Hamas. [68712]

Mr. Fatchett: We have not made any representations to the Palestinian Authority about the release of Sheikh Ahmad Yassin, leader of Hamas.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about Iranian efforts to procure weapons of mass destruction. [68717]

Mr. Fatchett: We continue to encourage Iran to respect all the international treaties it has signed relating to nuclear, chemical and biological weapons, and to comply fully with its obligations under them.

With our European partners, we have urged Iran to negotiate an additional safeguards protocol with the IAEA which would significantly enhance the organisation's ability to detect activities not permitted under the NPT.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the acquisition of long-range ballistic missiles by Iran; and if he will make a statement concerning their effect on the stability of the Middle East. [68716]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We remain extremely concerned by Iran's flight test of its Shahab-3 ballistic missile in July of last year. The acquisition of this system, with an approximate range of 1300km, threatens the stability of the whole of the Middle East. We assess that though the Shahab-3 is at a relatively advanced stage of its development, Iran will not be able to deploy the system in the immediate future. Whilst we understand Iran's legitimate security concerns, we have repeatedly urged the Iranian authorities to refrain from developing ballistic missiles. It is in nobody's interest for an arms race to develop in this already volatile region.

The UK, as a founder member of the Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR), works with its partners to halt the proliferation of ballistic missile programmes of concern. The MTCR has done much to deny, among others, the Iranian ballistic missile programme, key technologies and equipment.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ascertain the whereabouts of Israeli airman Ron Arad. [68745]

Mr. Fatchett: I take every opportunity to raise the issue of Ron Arad with anyone who may be able to provide information on his whereabouts. We also raise the cases of other missing servicemen.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to monitor Palestinian compliance with the agreement entered into at the Wye River Plantation. [68710]

Mr. Fatchett: We are in close contact with both sides and also with the US which plays a key role in monitoring compliance with the Wye Memorandum. Our Missions in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem also carefully monitor the level of compliance on the ground. Both the US and the Israelis declared themselves satisfied with Palestinian compliance with their commitments under Wye prior to the first redeployment on 20 November. Since then we continue to believe the Palestinians have made good progress.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make Iranian recognition of Israel a precondition for the restoration of ambassadorial links with Iran. [68743]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and the Iranian Foreign Minister, as part of the New York agreement on 24 September 1998, agreed to exchange Ambassadors. We remain committed to all elements of that agreement.

Sudan (Religious Freedom)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Government of Sudan regarding the rights of Christians to religious freedom, over the last 18 months. [68639]

Mr. Fatchett: FCO officials have regularly raised these important issues with the Government of Sudan and will continue to do so.

Pakistan (Christian Community)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Government of Pakistan regarding the application of Sharia Law and its impact upon the Christian minority. [68640]

Mr. Fatchett: We continue to ensure that the Pakistan authorities remain aware of our concerns on human rights and religious minorities. We are following closely the progress of the Shariah Bill which has yet to pass Pakistan's Senate. We are aware of the concerns expressed by minorities and human rights groups about the possible effects of the Bill.

Kosovo

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what independent international investigation was conducted into the killings in Kosovo at Gornje Obrinje and what were the results; and if an investigation into killings at Racak has been commenced. [68804]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: An EU forensic team from Finland was admitted to Kosovo in December last year to conduct examinations of Gornje Obrinje and other massacre sites. They have not yet been able to complete their work at Gornje Obrinje but hope to do so in the spring. The same team have been conducting autopsies on those killed at Racak and will report to the FRY authorities, the OSCE and the EU when their examinations are complete.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has encouraged the Chief Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) in her continuing efforts to investigate these and other incidents and to bring those responsible to justice.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the legal basis for the possible use of military force in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [68759]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The legal basis for any military action against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia would need to be considered in the light of the circumstances at the time. Any military action by British forces would have to be lawful under international law.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Slaughterhouse Inspections (Assaults)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of his (a) Department's and (b) Agencies officials have been assaulted in the course of slaughterhouse inspections in each of the last five years; how many prosecutions followed the assaults; and what action his Department is taking to minimise the number of assaults. [63379]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 15 January 1999]: The number of Departmental, mainly State Veterinary Service officials who have been subjected to intimidation at slaughterhouses is as follows:

1993–94: 0
1994–95: 7
1995–96: 0
1996–97: 1
1997–98: 0.

No prosecutions followed these incidents.

The Meat Hygiene Service (MHS), which was established on 1 April 1995, does not have information available on a year by year basis.

However, in response to evidence that MHS operational staff were being subjected to violence and/or intimidation, a survey was sent out to all 1,540 MHS operational staff in January 1998. It sought information on all incidents which inspectors had been involved with throughout their entire careers, not just since the launch of the MHS.

759 responses were received. 1 in 4 operational staff indicated that they had been subject to some form of violence and/or intimidation at some point. However, the most common instances related to verbal abuse/threats and not physical assault or obstruction. 17 MHS staff had been subjected to physical assault at some point.

Reported cases of physical assault are investigated with a view to prosecution under the Criminal Justice Act 1988. Obstruction of MHS staff in the performance of their duties is an offence under the Food Safety Act 1990. All reported cases are thoroughly investigated by MAFF Investigations Officers and prosecutions taken where it can be shown that MHS staff have been hampered from carrying out their meat inspection duties.

To date, 5 successful prosecutions have been taken.

British Retail Consortium

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the British Retail Consortium; and if he will make a statement. [67773]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The Minister last met with the British Retail Consortium on 3 November 1998. At this meeting, the major retailers gave important assurances about the pigmeat they sell, not least that all their own label fresh pork, ham sausages and pork pies will come from stall and tether and MBM free production systems. They also gave an undertaking not to market as British, processed products produced from imported meat.

More generally, the retailers are making efforts to ensure that their sourcing practices meet or exceed consumer expectations in areas such as quality, traceability and local supply, and concern for animal welfare and the environment.

Mink Farming

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at how many mink factory farms the killing of mink was witnessed by Ministry officials over the past three months; how long officials were in attendance at each mink factory farm; and what methods were used to carry out the killing, broken down by county in each case. [68148]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 January 1999]: All licensed mink farms were inspected during the killing period. The actual killing operation was observed on six farms in Cornwall, Dorset, Hampshire, Northumberland, Lancashire and Yorkshire. The following killing methods were used: carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide and pentabarbitone injection.

Background Note

Welfare inspections of fur farms (in practice licensed mink farms) are made twice a year, once at the time of killing (November). Although the actual killing operation will not be observed in all cases, the veterinary officer carrying out the inspection is charged with ensuring that those responsible are aware of, and follow the requirements of, the welfare legislation. No central records are kept of the duration of visits but at a minimum they would take at least an hour.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many mink and fox fur factory farms there are by county in England and Wales. [68146]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 January 1999]: There are currently the following number of mink farms in England:

County	Number of licensed mink farms
Cornwall	1
Dorset	1
Hampshire	1
Isle of Wight	1
Lancashire	5
Northumberland	1
South Yorkshire	1
Staffordshire	1
West Yorkshire	1
Total	13

There are no licensed mink farms in Wales.

There is no requirement to register fox fur farms. However, I am not aware of any in England or Wales.

Non-modified Organisms

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will require food manufacturers who support the use of non-modified organisms to make public the systems they use to ensure that their commitments to non-modified organisms can be verified. [68620]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 1 February 1999]: EC Regulation 1139/98, which establishes the legal requirements for labelling foods containing GM soya and maize, and sets a precedent for the labelling of all GM foods, recognises that any food labelled as not containing GM soya or maize must be verifiable by scientific or other means. Enforcement of this requirement is a matter for Local Authorities.

Levy Scheme

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions were held with the major supermarkets about the principle of a flat rate levy for the Food Standards Agency before publication of the consultation paper, "Proposals for a Levy Scheme". [68973]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: No such discussions were held.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the total cost of the proposed levy to fund the Food Standards Agency on (a) the charitable, (b) the voluntary and (c) other not-for-profit sectors. [68974]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: The data are not available to make estimates of the number of food premises falling in these categories. The purpose of the public consultation exercise is to invite views on the proposals, including those from the sectors affected.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions (a) exist and (b) are planned to require companies producing animal feeds to label products as containing ingredients produced as a result of genetic modification. [68773]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: Current EU and UK legislation on animal feeding stuffs does not require the presence of genetically modified material to be labelled. It is anticipated that this issue will be addressed by a proposed regulation which the Commission is expected to submit formally to Council later this year.

Labelling of genetically modified (GM) animal feed

Background Note

Viable GM feed materials—ie., those capable of replication—are regulated under Council Directive 90/220 on the Deliberate Release of GMOs. Following a 1997 amendment to this Directive, any viable GM materials subsequently issued with a marketing consent are required to be labelled, although these provisions are non-specific. Because this amendment was not retrospective, the Monsanto soya and Ciba-Geigy (now Novartis) maize already authorised are not subject to these requirements for feed use. However, this is largely academic, as the vast majority of feed materials are processed by-products (ie., non-viable).

There is at present no product legislation regulating the authorisation of non-viable animal feed materials. These are likely to be covered in a forthcoming Commission proposal for a Council Regulation on Novel Feeds, which we expect to be formally submitted to Council later this year. This will to some extent parallel the existing Novel Foods Regulation, and regulate not only GM materials but also other novel feeds. We anticipate that the proposed labelling requirements will be consistent with the Commission's global approach (ie., does contain/does not contain).

In the absence of crop segregation and comprehensive legislative requirements, it is not possible to know the extent to which GM material is being used in animal feed in the UK. However, given the widespread use of materials derived from soya and maize, the probability is that some is present, although most likely in processed form (eg., maize gluten feed). Moreover, there could also be by-products from GM crops, such as cotton seed, which have been grown in the USA but for which marketing consent has not been sought in Europe under 90.220.

With regard to the effects of processing on GM material, it is known that this disrupts DNA. In the case of the Ciba-Geigy (now Novartis) maize, tests were conducted on maize gluten feed which indicated that the antibiotic resistance gene plus its replicator could not have survived processing. Further work on the effects of processing for a number of crops is being undertaken.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the results of the Government-commissioned toxicology tests carried out on Monsanto's genetically modified (a) cotton and (b) corn crops. [68775]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: The Government do not commission research into an individual company's crops but can require additional work to be undertaken by all companies themselves when this is considered to be necessary. All toxicology data submitted for safety evaluation is required to have been produced to Good Laboratory Practice (GLP) standards. Under GLP, all studies must follow written standard procedures and all laboratory records and samples must be archived. All UK GLP certified laboratories are subject to independent inspections by Department of Health inspectors in accordance with EC requirements. Laboratories in the USA are subject to GLP inspections by the US authorities.

All data considered by the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, except that considered to be commercially sensitive, are published on the DETR Public Register. In addition, the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes strongly encourages companies seeking food safety assessment to deposit a copy of their submissions with the British Library.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that consumers can purchase animal produce which does not originate from animals fed genetically modified feed. [68777]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: All genetically modified (GM) animal feed is rigorously assessed to ensure that the safety of consumers is not compromised by its use. However the Government recognise the desire of some consumers to be able to purchase products that have not been produced in this way. We therefore welcome the EC Commissions intention to draft a regulation on the labelling of GM Feed which will enable this wish to be satisfied. This is expected to be presented to the Council for agreement later this year. In the meantime, organic food producers and some others are already offering products which meet the needs of consumers who do not wish to purchase food produced using this feed.

CABINET OFFICE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Miller: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the progress that has been made towards equality of opportunity in the Civil Service. [69526]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I am publishing today a statistical report on equal opportunities in the Civil Service: "Equal Opportunities in the Civil Service Data Summary 1998". Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of the House and will be made available on the internet.

The report shows a continuing improvement in the proportion of people from those groups which are currently under-represented in most Civil Service management grades: women, ethnic minority staff and staff with disabilities. For example, the proportion of women at Higher Executive Officer level and above has risen to 26% in 1998 from 11% in 1984. In the Senior Civil Service, women now represent 18% of staff. The representation of ethnic minority staff at the first management level (Executive Officer) has increased to 5.1% from 2.9% in 1989. The overall proportion of staff with disabilities has increased to 4% from 3.8% in 1997.

Progress has been made but much remains to be done before the Service, at all levels, reflects society.

Later today, Sir Richard Wilson, the Head of the Home Civil Service and I plan to launch a Charter for action to redress the under-representation of ethnic minorities in the Senior Civil Service agreed with the Civil Service trades unions. The Charter has been endorsed by all Civil Service Heads of Department.

I am personally committed to a fair Civil Service in which diversity and equality of opportunity are valued. I aim to ensure that equal opportunities issues generally receive a high profile.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

UK Sports Institute

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many sports have formally undertaken to participate in the United Kingdom Sports Institute. [68113]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 January 1999]: The United Kingdom Sports Institute will offer a network of first class services and facilities to a range of Olympic and other non-commercial sports. Major spectator sports will also be able to tap into the top quality sports science, medicine, nutrition and coaching expertise available.

The Sports Councils and Phoenix Sports Limited (the company established by the Sheffield Consortium) have been obtaining the views of Athletics, Netball, Squash, Swimming, Table Tennis and Triathlon to confirm exactly what their requirements are at the site in Sheffield. In addition to this, my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport has written seeking confirmation that they are happy with current proposals.

In parallel, the Home Country Sports Councils have been developing the proposed network centres throughout the country. Proposals for Scotland have already been made public. In England, the English Sports Council has been consulting widely with the governing bodies of sport over the past six months. This has included discussion with the newly appointed Performance Directors who have brought their own views on the most appropriate high performance structure for their sport. They are best placed to tell us what their sport needs and it is only sensible that we listen to what they have to say. I plan to make a more comprehensive announcement soon.

Osborne House

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what are his plans for the King Edward VII Convalescent Home for Officers at Osborne House on the Isle of Wight. [69804]

Mr. Alan Howarth: After very careful consideration, my right hon. Friend has decided that it is no longer appropriate to run part of Osborne House as a convalescent and residential home for the benefit of members of the Armed Forces and Civil Service. My right hon. Friend will be seeking, therefore, Parliament's approval to repeal the provisions of the Osborne Estate Act 1902 which places this responsibility on him. In the meantime, the home will remain open. The demand for residential and convalescent facilities has declined. The current costs to the taxpayer of running the home are around £500,000 each year, net of income. English Heritage meets additional costs for the care of the fabric of the building.

Our immediate concern is the care of the current residents of the home. I am grateful to the Civil Service Benevolent Fund, who run the home on our behalf, for offering to work closely with my Department in finding new homes for current residents when the need arises. The convalescent home will remain open to convalescents, but not new residents, and will be run by the Civil Service Benevolent Fund until such time as Parliament approves its closure. This would be carried out in an orderly way, respecting the wishes and needs of the residents as far as possible.

The State Apartments at Osborne House will continue to be open to the public and managed by English Heritage who are currently making extensive plans to commemorate the centenary of Queen Victoria's death at Osborne in January 1901. I have also asked English Heritage to bring forward imaginative proposals for the use of the accommodation currently occupied by the convalescent home which will provide employment and help towards the costs of running the Osborne Estate.

Ulster Orchestra

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Ulster Orchestra over its future sponsorship arrangements. [69293]

Mr. Chris Smith: Matters affecting arts organisations in Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. I have had no discussions with the Ulster Orchestra, but I am aware of their concerns.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with arts organisations over the timing of legislation to ban tobacco sponsorship. [69294]

Mr. Chris Smith: Prior to the publication of the Government's White Paper "Smoking Kills" in December 1998, I received written representations from and on behalf of a small number of arts organisations and their sponsors. I also sought advice from the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts on the extent of arts sponsorship by tobacco companies.

Through negotiation, the Government ensured that the EU Tobacco Advertising Directive provided a reasonable time for arts and sports organisations to adapt and the White Paper explained that sports and arts organisations would be given the full five-year period allowed under the Directive to find alternative sponsors.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the present value to arts organisations of sponsorship by tobacco companies. [69295]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts has estimated that the total current financial value of tobacco arts sponsorship in the UK is between £1 million and £1.5 million per annum.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Exports

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what licences have been issued for the export of British Aerospace Gripen fighters and Hawk aircraft, and GKN Westland Maritime helicopters to South Africa. [64499]

Dr. Howells: I understand that none of these aircraft has previously been supplied to the South African Government by the UK. Some of the UK's leading defence companies have submitted bids against South African defence procurement requirements. No licences for the permanent export to South Africa of such aircraft have been issued by this Government. However, any subsequent applications for export licences will be considered against the criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29, and against the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the amounts of export credit guarantee covers provided to Alvis for the export of armoured vehicles to Indonesia and for the provision of upgrade components since 1988. [68780]

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Export Credits Guarantee Department cover was provided to Alvis for the export of armoured vehicles to Indonesia and the provision of upgrade components. [68705]

Mr. Wilson: From data readily available the value of ECGD cover provided for such business since 1988 is as follows:

1988	0
1989	0
1990	0
1991	£2 million
1992	0
1993	0

1995	US$105 million
1996	£65 million
1997	US$3.2 million
1998	0

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the total amount of funding available to (a) South Yorkshire, (b) Merseyside and (c) Cornwall from each of the EU Structural Funds in the last year for which figures are available. [68942]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 3 February 1999]: EU Structural Funds allocations (including Community Initiatives) for 1998 to the current Objective 1, 2 and 5b areas of Yorkshire and the Humber, Merseyside and South West England are shown in the table. It is not possible to identify specific allocations to South Yorkshire and Cornwall since under Objectives 2 and 5b the Community allocations are made to the whole of the Structural Funds' programme areas.

Electro-shock Batons

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what end use monitoring his Department has undertaken on the use of the electro-shock batons trans-shipped from the United States to Saudi Arabia via the United Kingdom under the trans-shipment licence granted by his Department in 1993. [68198]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to her by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), on 1 February 1999, Official Report, column 494.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Punishment Beatings and Shootings

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ending 16 January the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishment shootings which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many in each category were committed by (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican groups. [67562]

Mr. Ingram: The number of paramilitary style assaults and shootings which took place in Northern Ireland during the period 10 January to 16 January are shown:

	By Loyalist	By Republican
Assaults	0	3
Shootings	2	0
Total	2	3

Note:

Fair Employment

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to revoke the section 42 of the Fair Employment (NI) Act notice in respect of the Tinnelly Brothers case of Newry, Co Down. [67749]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is not yet in a position to make a decision on this matter. When she does, I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ending 16 January the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many involved (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican groups. [67561]

Mr. Ingram: The number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland during the period 10 January to 16 January are shown:

Paramilitary style attacks:

	By Loyalist	By Republican
Shootings	2	0
Assaults	0	3

Total shooting incidents: 3

Notes:
Total shooting incidents include those recorded as paramilitary style attacks (2).
Only the Paramilitary style attacks can as yet be attributed with certainty to Loyalist or Republican groups.
The figures are subject to minor adjustment.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for each month of (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998 the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many involved (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [67604]

Mr. Ingram: The following tables give the numbers of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland in 1996, 97 and 98, indicating how many involved Loyalist and Republican groups.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the RUC has any knowledge of the identity of the (a) persons and (b) organisations who have carried out punishment beatings and shootings during 1998. [67777]

Mr. Ingram: The Chief Constable has stated publicly that all paramilitary organisations have engaged in these activities. Organisations' involvement in paramilitary attacks was the subject of a debate on Wednesday 27 January 1999, Official Report, columns 347–97. I would add only that if the RUC had evidence as to the identity of persons involved in this activity they would have taken steps to have the suspects brought before a court. As for knowledge, the Government does not discuss intelligence matters.

Prisoners (Early Release)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish a table in the Official Report to show as for Monday 25 January 1999 the number of persons released early from prison under the early release legislation passed as a result of the Belfast Agreement indicating how many were (a) male, (b) female, (c) Loyalist and (d) Republican; how many of each recognised faction there are in each such category; and how many more in each category she expects to be released by the end of March 1999 or as much as such information as is readily available. [R] [67776]

Mr. Ingram: The information in respect of subsections (a), (b), (c) and (d) is shown in Table A as at 27 January 1999. Information is held in relation to the perceived paramilitary association of prisoners, where applicable, for management purposes. It should be noted, however, that with the exception of HMP Maze, where links are more clearly defined, this information is based on a combination of factors including the offence, sympathies and associates.

Security

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she has consulted the Chief Constable of the RUC and the General Officer Commanding the Army in Northern Ireland about the proposed strategy document on the normalisation of security in Northern Ireland as envisaged in the Belfast agreement. [68637]

Mr. Ingram: The Chief Constable, the GOC and their representatives have been fully consulted about the security strategy document which the Secretary of State intends to publish shortly.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) of 27 January

1999, Official Report, column 285, if he will make a statement on the outcome of his bilateral meeting with the Liberal Democrat spokesman on foreign affairs and defence. [68947]

Mr. Robin Cook: The meeting agreed to recommend discussion of Common and Security Policy issues within the framework of the Joint Consultative Committee.

Diplomatic Posts

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British nationals are employed in the British High Commission in Cyprus; and how many have a working knowledge of (a) Greek, (b) Turkish and (c) both languages. [69050]

Ms Quin: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave on 3 February 1999, Official Report, columns 683–84.

Fishing Rights (Spain)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Spanish fishermen crossing the boundary between Spanish and Gibraltarian territorial waters without authority and his related discussions with the Spanish Government. [69155]

Ms Quin: We do not know of any incident in which Spanish fishermen crossed the border between Spain and Gibraltar without authority. On 29 and 30 January, there were demonstrations by Spanish fishermen on the Spanish side of the border which led to the border crossing being closed. While we respect the right of the Spanish fishermen to demonstrate near the border if they wish to do so, there can be no justification for demonstrators obstructing and delaying innocent travellers. We have pursued the matter with the Spanish authorities and have urged them to make it possible for movement across the border to take place in conformity with EU obligations.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Spain in response to indications that border restrictions may be imposed on Gibraltar following the arrest of Spanish fishermen. [69095]

Ms Quin: We have made it clear to the Spanish authorities that there can be no justification for restrictions on movement across the border between Spain and Gibraltar. We look to the Spanish Government to allow movement across the border in conformity with EU obligations.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out details of discussions on the issue of fishing rights which took place with the Spanish Government in October and the terms of any agreement reached. [69096]

Ms Quin: In October 1998, there was a series of confrontations in the waters around Gibraltar. We discussed these with the Spanish Government. We agreed with the Spanish Government that we should seek to revert to the more harmonious situation that had prevailed between 1991 and 1997. We reached an understanding on what that situation had involved.

Zinoviev Letter

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he proposes to publish the memorandum on the Zinoviev letter which he commissioned from his Department's historians. [69659]

Mr. Robin Cook: The memorandum is being published today and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Hong Kong

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to publish his fourth report to Parliament on Hong Kong and the implementation of the Joint Declaration. [69660]

Mr. Fatchett: The fourth report in this series, covering the period July-December 1998, was published today and a copy of the report has been placed in the Libraries of the House. The report includes a foreword written by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary. I commend the report to the House.

Yemen

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the President of Yemen concerning Sheikh Abu Hamza al Misary. [68794]

Mr. Straw: I have been asked to reply.

No such representations have been received.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts (East Sussex)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the provision of magistrates courts in East Sussex. [67912]

Mr. Hoon: Magistrates courts are locally managed by magistrates courts committees under the provisions of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. Decisions concerning the future of magistrates courts in their area are for the relevant magistrates courts committee to determine. A local authority that contributes financially may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure. The procedure for such appeals is set out in section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. In the absence of an appeal, the Lord Chancellor plays no part in the process.

Following a period of consultation, the East and West Sussex Magistrates Courts Committees are currently considering whether to propose to the Lord Chancellor that a single magistrates courts committee should be formed. Any new Committee would still be subject to the provisions of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997.

Summary Trials (Delays)

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the average time elapsed between persons being charged and coming to summary trial in each of the past five years. [67826]

Mr. Hoon: The exact information requested is not available. The Lord Chancellor's Department Time Intervals Survey provides the nearest available information. This survey collects information on the duration of criminal cases proceeded against in magistrates courts three times a year. The Febr[illegible] June and October surveys cover indictable cases (i[illegible]ng triable either way); the June survey also collects d[illegible]on summary cases.

The date of coming to summary trial is not recorded by the Time Intervals Survey. The nearest alternative collected by the survey is the date of verdict which the survey defines as including the date of a guilty or not guilty verdict (where there is a full trial), and the date of the acceptance of a guilty plea (where a guilty plea is entered).

For the June 1998 sample week, the survey found that the average time from charge to verdict for defendants in summary proceedings was 62 days. This figures excludes defendants where proceedings were initiated by summons and defendants in proceedings that were withdrawn or discontinued. The figure of 62 days for June 1998 compares with 67 days in each of June 1997, June 1996 and June 1995, and 65 days in June 1994.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maples: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department which ministers in his Department made use of (a) RAF and (b) chartered aircraft between 1 October 1998 and 31 January 1999; and if he will list the dates, destinations and costs of such flights. [69075]

Mr. Hoon: Neither I nor the Lord Chancellor have made use of a RAF or a chartered flight between 1 October 1998 and 31 January 1999.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Adult and Community Education

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the co-ordination between Ofsted and the Further Education Funding Council on the inspection of adult and community education; and if he will make a statement. [68868]

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many inspections of local authority adult and community education services have been conducted by Ofsted in each of the last six years; and what proportion of Ofsted's total inspections this represents. [68870]

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the total number of inspections of local authority adult and community education services. [68871]

Mr. Mudie: As part of their current corporate planning process, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked Ofsted to increase the number of its inspections of Local Education Authority adult education services in 1999–2000. I have asked Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools to write to the hon. Member about planned and the number of past inspections carried out by Ofsted, and to place a copy of the letter in the Library. As set out in "The Learning Age", my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State believes there is scope for some collaborative working between Ofsted and the Further Education Funding Council Inspectorate in relation to adult and community education and he will consult the Chief Inspector and the Council about ways of achieving this.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list each further education college with a category C financial rating, together with the current deficit of each college. [68869]

Mr. Mudie: Regular assessments to the financial health of colleges are made by the Further Education Funding Council; the details of individual colleges are treated as commercial-in-confidence. At the beginning of this year, 84 of the 435 further education colleges in England were assessed as falling into financial health category C. This is an improvement on the position at the beginning of last year when 95 of the then 444 further education colleges fell into this category.

Every year the Council publishes extracts from each further education college's audited financial statements. The extracts include the operating surplus or deficit for the year. The most recent figures are for the year ending 31 July 1997 and were published in December 1998. A copy is available in the Library.

School Closure Procedures

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received over the new procedures for proposed closures of local authority schools; and if he will make a statement. [69255]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have received no representations concerned specifically with changes in procedures for the closure of schools. Under the provisions of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998, consultation in the local area and the publication of statutory proposals will continue to be necessary before a school may be closed, and anyone may object to such proposals. We are currently consulting on the detailed regulations concerning statutory proposals for changes to schools, and in formulating the final arrangements we shall be considering any points made by those responding to consultation.

Sikh Pupils

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice has been given to schools by his Department over requests from the Sikh community for a day's absence in April for their children in order the celebrate the 300th anniversary of the beginning of their religion. [69256]

Mr. Charles Clarke: None on this event as such. However, general advice on categorisation of absence was issued to schools in May 1994. This states that absence may be authorised where the pupil is absent on any day exclusively set aside for religious observance by the religious body to which the pupil's parents belong.

Highcliffe School

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his oral statement of 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 306, on Highcliffe School, what factors account for the difference between his estimated figure for the school's balance this year and that contained in the letter dated 20 January 1999 from the Funding Agency for Schools to Dorset County Council. [68989]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 2 February 1999]: The figure in the letter from Funding Agency for Schools to Dorset County Council was for the cumulative deficit of income over expenditure for 1998–99, calculated on an accruals basis. My right hon. Friend was referring to the estimated cash balance of the school at 31 March 1999, after an £83,000 overpayment of Annual Maintenance Grant has been deducted.

Nuclear Physics (University Staff)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the (a) number and (b) age distribution of university staff specialising in nuclear physics research. [68828]

Mr. Mudie: The data requested are not available centrally. The available data relate to academic staff in UK higher education institutions in 1996–97 whose primary academic discipline is physics. A breakdown by age and primary employment function is given for full time staff in the following table:

Employment function and age of full-time academic staff in UK HEIs whose primary academic discipline is physics, 1996–97

Problem Children

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment his Department has made of the current systems used by local education authorities to educate children with emotional, behavioural and psychiatric problems who do not have recognised learning difficulties. [68574]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Early identification of children's difficulties which are, or have the potential to become, barriers to learning, and measures to address these, are key elements of the government's education policy. Pilot schemes to develop work in this field are being supported in 1999–2000 through the Special Educational Needs Standards Fund Grant. Guidance in the Special Educational Needs Code of Practice, a revised version of which is expected to come into effect in 2000–01, enables Local Education Authorities to assess whether children's wider difficulties, including emotional, behavioural and psychiatric conditions, are likely to affect their learning to the extent that they need extra support.

The Department will take a keen interest in the results of the current survey being undertaken for the Department of Health, Scottish Office and Welsh Office by the Office for National Statistics Social Survey Division on the development and mental health of around 10,000 children.

Severe Hardship Payments (Scotland)

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many 16 and 17 year olds in Scotland applied for severe hardship payments in the latest year for which figures are available. [68770]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Malcolm Chisholm, dated 2 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply to your question regarding the number of 16 and 17 year olds in Scotland who applied for severe hardship payments. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

The latest figures available are for the calendar year 1998 and these show that 17,154 16 and 17 year olds applied for severe hardship payments in Scotland during this period.

I hope this is helpful.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68423]

Mr. Mudie: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68407]

Mr. Mudie: Leaving aside the changes in the Department's responsibilities as a result of legislation in the 1997–98 and 1998–99 Sessions, the following changes since 1998–99 have taken or will take place:

responsibility for the grant support in respect of projects to address educational disadvantage in ethnic minorities under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 transfers from the Home Office to DfEE from April 1999; responsibility for the regulation of day care under Part X of the Children Act 1989 transferred from the Department of Health to DfEE in April 1998; and from April 1999, the Department has a new responsibility, jointly with HM Treasury and the Department of Health, for the Sure Start initiative to provide integrated services for children aged 0–3 in deprived areas.

Surplus School Places

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the numbers and percentages of surplus places are in each local education authority in England; and if he will make a statement on his policy on surplus places in schools. [69657]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The supply of and demand for school places must be brought more closely into balance to maximise parental preference and ensure good quality education in the most cost-effective way. Empty school places represent a poor use of resources, especially where those schools with high levels of surplus are also performing poorly or where parental preference is not being met elsewhere in the authority. When planning school provision, authorities should initially focus on those schools with a quarter or more of their places unfilled, having particular regard to standards at those schools. The annual survey of surplus school places provides the Department with an opportunity to monitor action by each authority.

The tables set out the numbers of surplus places as at January 1998 for each local authority area, separately for primary and for secondary, together with the proportion that these represent of total capacity. They also include the numbers of schools which at that date had a surplus of 25% or more, and at least 30 surplus places, together with the proportion that these represent of the total number of schools. The data are drawn from the returns made during 1998 by local education authorities in respect of their schools and by the Funding Agency for Schools in respect of grant-maintained schools in stage 2 and 3 authority areas. Data on surplus places in grant-maintained schools in stage 1 authorities are not available. These returns indicate that there were 761,671 surplus school places in January 1998, representing 10% of the total capacity of 7.6 million places. This is an overall reduction of just over 12,000 places on 1997 figures. The number of schools with a surplus of 25% or more, and at least 30 surplus places, also fell by 167 to 2,529 which represents 12% of the total number of schools.

The returns also provide the Department with details of what action authorities propose to take on schools with a 25% or more surplus. The returns indicate that in many cases action is being taken. Where there is no indication of action to reduce the surplus and no substantial reasons given, the Department will write to those authorities.

Ofsted Inspections

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many section 10 Ofsted inspections occurred in the last four school terms; [69001]

(2) how many inspectors are currently employed by Ofsted (a) in total and (b) in the IQMD division. [69002]

Ms Estelle Morris: These are matters for HM Chief Inspector of Schools and I have therefore asked Chris Woodhead to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

New Deal (Basingstoke and Deane)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have entered the New Deal Gateway in the Unit of Delivery covering the Basingstoke and Deane Borough Council area since its inception; and how many took up each New Deal option. [66369]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to provide separate figures for individual towns or council areas. The latest Government Statistical Service figures for the Mid Hampshire Unit of Delivery, which covers Basingstoke and Deane, show that to the end of November 1998 (a) 267 young people had entered the Gateway and 66 have secured unsubsidised employment; and (b) 26 had joined one of the four options: two on the Employment option; three on the Voluntary Sector option; and 21 on the Full-Time Education and Training option. 113 young people were on the Gateway, 13 had left New Deal to claim other benefits, nine had gone to other known destinations and 40 had gone to as yet unknown destinations.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Maritime and Coastguard Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the Derwent report on the re-organisation of the Coastguard Service and the Marine Surveyors the incorporation into the Maritime and Coastguard Agency. [68055]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The study referred to was carried out by officials and looked into the synergies between the Coastguard Agency, the Marine Safety Agency and their policy and financial sponsorship divisions in the parent Department. The output from the study was policy advice to Ministers in a previous Administration. In line with the normal convention such advice is not released.

Automatic Ticket Barriers (Undergound)

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the percentage increase in revenue occurring to London Underground arising from the installation of automatic ticket barriers at stations operated by passenger train operating companies. [68518]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As part of London Transport's Prestige PFI project, automatic ticket barriers are being installed at the vast majority of London Underground Stations. These include stations managed by London Underground that are shared with Train Operating Companies (TOCs). LT expects that this will lead to a reduction in ticketless travel and an increase in revenue. LT is discussing with Train Operating Companies (TOCs) extending gating to join stations that are managed by TOCs.

Taking a scenario in which none of the joint stations managed by TOCs on the Underground has automatic ticket barriers and comparing that with a scenario in which all of these stations had ticket barriers installed, LT estimate that the additional revenue to London Underground would be about 0.08 per cent. of total revenue or about £750,000 in one year. The calculation is based on current revenue and fares levels. There would also be revenue benefits to the TOCs, but no estimates are available.

Driving Standards Agency

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress the Driving Standards Agency has made in locating a new test centre in Stafford. [68594]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The provision of driving test centres in Stafford and surrounding localities is being kept under review. I am glad to say that the Agency has identified a suitable property in Stafford and are in negotiations with the owner. Subject to satisfactory completion of those negotiations, a new test centre could open by the Summer.

Sellafield

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made with the reduction of discharges of radioactive waste from the BNFL base at Sellafield to near zero by the year 2020; and how this target will be achieved. [68853]

Mr. Meale: The Government are fully committed to the agreement reached at the OSPAR Ministerial Meeting in Sintra, Portugal last year, on the reduction of radioactive discharges from all sources, including reprocessing plants. Nuclear operators, in discussion with the relevant Government departments and regulatory bodies, will produce 20-year discharge strategies, to assess the options for reducing discharges to levels consistent with the OSPAR strategy. We intend this to be fully transparent process.

Polegate Bypass

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the total amount of (a) compensation paid to date and (b) agreed to be paid to contractors in respect of the Polegate Bypass. [68568]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The overall levels of compensation are still being discussed with those tenders who submitted tenders for the cancelled Weald and Downland DBFO Project, which include the Polegate Bypass scheme. Interim on-account payments totalling £3.4 million have been made.

Council Tax Benefit Subsidy

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each local authority the reduction in council tax benefit subsidy, expressed (a) in cash and (b) as a proportion of the yield from the standard council tax, that will occur in the event that each authority's budgeted expenditure in 1999–2000 exceeds by an amount equal to 1 per cent. of its standard spending assessment the point at which benefit subsidy begins to be withdrawn; and if he will make the information available to local authorities in machine-readable form. [68927]

Ms Armstrong: The information is not available.

An authority's guideline increase and its council tax increase will depend on factors such as collection fund surpluses and deficits, information on which is not currently available to my Department.

Aer Lingus Crash

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent communications (a) he and (b) other ministers have had with their counterparts in the Irish Government with regard to the crash of the Aer Lingus aircraft in 1968; and if he will make a statement. [68833]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Although my colleague, the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the regions has not been in contact with the Irish Government over this issue, I met Mary O'Rourke, the Minister for Public Enterprise, to discuss this, and other issues on 25 January 1999.

It was agreed at the meeting that UK officials (including British Air Accident Investigators) would meet with their Irish counterparts in order to review all the known evidence recorded about the crash. A meeting was held on 27 January 1999.

The Officials will work together to try and narrow the possible options for the cause of the crash.

Driving Tests (Impersonation)

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many and what percentage of candidates taking the (a) practical and (b) written driving test were arrested and charged for impersonation of the real candidate between (i) July 1996 and July 1997 and (ii) July 1997 and July 1998. [69009]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Between 1 July 1996 and 30 June 1997, 17 practical test candidates were arrested and charged with impersonation, one other candidate admitted the offence and was convicted of the offence, and two other candidates were arrested and cautioned. Sixteen cases of suspected candidate impersonation were reported to the police at the theory test stage, which resulted in two convictions. During that period, the Driving Standards Agency conducted 1.7 million practical driving tests and 1.4 million theory tests.

In the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, seven practical test candidates and six theory test candidates were arrested and charged from a total of 1.2 million practical and 1.1 million theory tests.

These figures show that the percentage of tests where impersonations were suspected is well below 0.001 per cent. in all cases.

Car Parking (Millennium Village)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many car parking spaces will be created for developments associated with the Millennium Eco-Village at Greenwich; and how many daily vehicle movements will be generated as a consequence. [69307]

Mr. Meale: The Greenwich Millennium Village will have 1,833 car parking spaces comprising 1,721 for residents, 80 for retail use and 32 for the school and health centre. 670 peak time vehicle movements are expected for the morning and 615 in the evening.

Wild Animal Imports

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what provisions are in place to prevent the import of animals subject to the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 to Great Britain via Northern Ireland; [69284]

(2) what measures are in place to prevent exotic animals being obtained from British zoos for sale outside the United Kingdom as pets; [69286]

(3) what (a) measures are in place and (b) steps he is taking to prevent the importation of wild animals as pets. [69287]

Mr. Meale: The movement of animals between Great Britain and Northern Ireland or by zoos is not restricted, although the trade in species protected by the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) is strictly regulated. Those species most endangered by trade, such as tigers, elephants, chimps, etc., are subject to sale control and the owner of any CITES specimen must be able to show that it was imported or acquired lawfully. There are no plans to prevent the importation of wild animals as pets, although the import of some species has been prohibited on conservation grounds. The sustainability of the current trade is kept under continuous review.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the genetically modified trial crops currently being grown in Devon, indicating in each instance (a) the specific location, (b) the crop involved, (c) the reason for the crop being grown and (d) which company is growing them. [69338]

Mr. Meacher: There are no genetically modified crops currently being grown in Devon.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Stinchcombe), of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 40, concerning GMOs, if he will list the research studies which have indicated potential interference with ecological systems for genetically modified crops, indicating in each case (a) the date of the study, (b) the crop concerned, (c) the potential interference identified and (d) the degree of permanence in respect of potential interference. [69336]

Mr. Meacher: I am not aware of any research studies with genetically modified crops that have shown any more damaging interference with ecological systems than would be expected from the non GM crop in similar circumstances.

My previous answer referred to research studies which indicate the potential to interfere with ecosystems if the results were to be translated to the wider environment. For example, the laboratory based study by Hilbeck et al., (1998) Environmental Entomology 27 p480–487 which showed increased mortality of immature lacewing insects fed on moth caterpillars that had in turn fed on genetically modified maize expressing insecticidal Bt toxin. There is no evidence that this non-target effect on lacewings can be detected in the field when the GM maize is grown, but there may be potential for interference and the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment have advised due vigilance. Similarly, the report by Bergelson et al., (1998) Nature 395 p25 indicates that GM Arabidopsis thaliana, a model plant used by scientists, might hybridise with neighbouring plants at a higher frequency than non GM Arabidopsis. If this were generally true for GM crops, and there is no evidence that it is, then hybridisation with wild relatives may be more prevalent than expected.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many test sites involving genetically modified crops were found to be breaking regulations in 1997; and if he will list in each case the (a) location, (b) crop type, (c) company involved and (d) infringement. [69279]

Mr. Meacher: Further to my answer on 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 630, in the opinion of the HSE inspector there were three such instances in 1997.

Location	Crop	Consent holder	Alleged infringement
Holton-le-Moor, Lincolnshire	Oilseed rape	Nickersons Biochem	Isolation distance of 400m not maintained, as GM oilseed rape trial planted close to non GM oilseed rape
Invergowrie, Dundee (at two sites)	Potatoes	Scottish Crop Research Institute	Field beans grown instead of barley as the follow-on crop after the trial of GM potatoes

Park and Ride (Millennium Dome)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many vehicles per day are expected to use the satellite park and ride sites at (a) Luton, (b) St. Albans and (c) Walton-on-Thames for access to the Millennium Dome; and how many park and ride buses are expected to carry visitors from each of the sites to the Dome each day; [69339]

(2) if Woolwich football ground is to be used for a park and ride site for the Millennium Dome. [69340]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None of the quoted sites is included on a short-list of six formal park and ride sites recently compiled by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC). A car park at Woolwich Arsenal, but not the football ground, is included in NMEC's short-list.

The NMEC is planning to control park and ride sites in each quadrant within the M25 into which Millennium Experience visitors will be able to book their cars before completing their journey to the Dome on convenient public transport or shuttle bus links. It is estimated that 4,000 spaces will be required on a peak day at the Dome.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much of the money allocated by Railtrack for the West Coast Main Line is classified by his Department as relating to (a) repair and maintenance and (b) upgrading. [69278]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Railtrack has confirmed that money allocated for the West Coast Main Line stands at:

(a) £1.34 billion for repair and maintenance;

(b) £0.8 billion for upgrading.

Primate Imports (Research)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of each species of primate was imported from which countries to the United Kingdom for research purposes during 1998. [69280]

Mr. Meale: The number and species of primates imported in 1998 for research purposes were as follows:

Species	Common name	Country of Origin	Number
Macaca fascicularis	Crab-eating macaque	Mauritius	1,972
		Philippines	144
		Israel	80
Macaca Mulatta	Rhesus macaque	China	160
Saimiri bolivensis	Squirrel monkey	USA	6
Total			2,362

Ecological Tax Reform

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what input he had into the position of Her Majesty's Government at the ECOFIN meeting on 26 January in respect of the discussion on ecological tax reform. [69248]

Mr. Meale: The meeting held on 26 January was a technical working group discussion on the draft Directive on Taxation of Energy Products. Treasury officials lead for the UK at this group, but their approach is agreed across departments.

Railtrack

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the breakdown of the moneys spent by Railtrack by classification into (a) moneys spent on repairs and renewal of existing infrastructure and (b) investment into infrastructure enhancements. [69247]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. Railtrack is responsible for the repair, renewal and enhancement of the network and sets out its future investment plans in its annual Network Management Statement (NMS). The current NMS gives details of the forecast expenditure on maintenance and renewals and also gives details of forecast expenditure on enhancements. The form of the NMS has to be approved by the Rail Regulator who monitors Railtrack's investment and has powers to take appropriate action to ensure that the network is maintained, renewed and developed in a way which meets the reasonable requirements of the railway industry.

UPVC Window and Door Units

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the latest guidance issued to local authorities on the use of UPVC window and door units. [69181]

Mr. Meale: There are no restrictions on the use of UPVC windows and doors in the UK and we have not issued specific guidance to local authorities on its use.

Master Mariners

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what financial assistance is available to existing master mariners who wish to meet the new international requirements coming into force on 1 February 2002. [68994]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the Government's Support for Maritime Training Scheme (SMarT), financial assistance of £25 a day (to increase to £26 a day from 1 April 1999) is paid to eligible SMarT Training Providers in respect of officers (including master mariners) already holding certificates of competency or service issued under STCW 78, who undertake approved shore-based training programmes in order to meet any extra requirements necessary for the issue of an equivalent certificate under STCW 95. Officers who are unemployed may apply for this assistance through Oceanair, a company operated by the officer's trade union, NUMAST.

Marine Guidance Note MGN 53(M), (to be revised in April as MGN 103 (M)) gives full details of the scheme and how to apply. Copies of the Marine Guidance Notes are available in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of master mariner certificates which will become unrecognised on 1 February 2002, when the new validation requirements come into force. [68995]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The international Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping Convention 1978, as revised in 1995 (STCW 95) came into force on 1 February 1997, and the UK, as a party to the Convention, was given 5 years (until 1 February 2002) to comply with the new certification requirements.

Since certificates of competency are only valid for 5 years at a time, all current holders have been given the option of either revalidating them until 31 January 2002 under the old requirements, or for a full 5 years under STCW 95 provided they meet with the new requirements.

All valid certificates will therefore be recognised on 1 February 2002 but it is not possible at this stage to estimate how many certificated master mariners will decide not to revalidate under STCW 95.

Countryside Agency

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he expects to announce the chairperson of the Countryside Agency; [69333]

(2) if he will make a statement on the qualities required of a person appointed to chair the Countryside Agency. [69334]

Mr. Meacher: The Department is looking for a candidate who:

> can demonstrate an excellent knowledge of, and commitment to, countryside and rural issues;
>
> has excellent communication and interpersonal skills, and who is at ease in dealings with the media, Ministers and a wide range of partners in the public and private sectors;
> has experience of managing a large organisation, has the ability to lead and motivate members and staff to ensure that the two existing agencies are successfully integrated into one Agency that is well equipped to take forward its exciting new mandate.

It has taken longer than we would have wished to find the right person for this challenging role, but we expect to make an announcement shortly.

Small Public Service Vehicles

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he proposes to take to regulate further who may drive small public service vehicles. [69801]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am concerned that public service vehicles with fewer than 9 passenger seats which may be driven by the holder of an ordinary car driving licence (category B), are being used in the same way as private hire vehicles but without the checks on drivers' criminal records and medical fitness that a local authority would usually make for the issue of a private hire vehicle drivers' licence.

I therefore propose to introduce regulations providing for criminal conviction and medical fitness checks for those driving small public service vehicles on a category B licence. The regulations would enable Traffic Commissioners to require such checks as a condition of a public service vehicle operator's licence. I will consult interested parties on this proposal.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

John Davies (European Commission Grant)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will pursue with the European Commission their decision to pay a grant of £140,000 to the convicted criminal John Davies in respect of a service to help prostitutes in Hungary; and if she will make a statement. [69195]

Clare Short: We have contacted the European Commission on this matter. We are informed that the Commission is undertaking a fraud inquiry into the payment of the funds and their alleged misuse.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of her Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68424]

Clare Short: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

Colombia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid (a) has been given and (b) is planned to be given to assist people affected by the earthquake in Colombia; and what discussions she has had with representatives of the Colombian Government regarding the earthquake. [69012]

Clare Short: In total so far, my Department has contributed US$1 million through humanitarian agencies. In addition, the European Community's Humanitarian Office is providing $1.25 million of relief, of which the UK's share is around $187,500.

Our funds are supporting the Pan American Health Organisation to deploy epidemiology specialists, conduct damage assessment to health facilities, water and sewerage infrastructure and purchase medical supplies; the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement to bring life-saving assistance to 100,000 people; Oxfam for a programme to provide drinking water for 80,000 people, as well as emergency shelter and household utensils, concentrating particularly on the poorer districts of the city of Armenia and outlying towns; and United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) to cover the immediate needs of children including those orphaned or separated from their families. Funds were also allocated to the British Embassy, Bogota for the local purchase of urgently needed medicines and chemical toilets.

We have been in contact with the Colombian authorities managing the relief operation through our Embassy in Bogota. We continue to monitor the situation and remain in close contact with the humanitarian agencies involved in the relief effort. My Department is willing to consider further requests to assist vulnerable groups where specific unmet needs are identified.

TREASURY

GDP Calculation

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned on methodologies for the calculation of gross domestic product which take account of social and environmental costs of economic and industrial activities. [67676]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 28 January 1999]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 4 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the calculation of gross domestic product (GDP).

The calculation of an adjusted GDP to take account of social and environmental costs would involve the choice of weights for a wide range of possible factors such as health, education, unemployment, air and water pollution, depletion of oil and gas reserves, loss of natural habitats and biodiversity, and then the assignment of monetary values to each of these components. The ONS does not believe that it is feasible to produce such a measure.

The Government Statistical Service is trying to take account of the social and environmental effects of economic activities by other methods. The ONS is working on extending and improving the environmental accounts, which link some of the major environmental impacts of economic and industrial activities, such as air pollution, to the standard National Accounts; while statisticians in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions have produced a set of Sustainable Development Indicators covering a range of economic, environmental and social factors to monitor progress in the Government's strategy for Sustainable Development.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of his Department's systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [68932]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 2 February 1999]: In common with other Government departments, the Treasury makes quarterly returns to the Cabinet Office on its progress in tackling the millennium bug. This information is placed in the Libraries of the House following the President of the Council's regular Quarterly Statement and published on the internet. The last review was published 2 December 1998.

Tax Credits

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish a draft regulatory impact assessment of the costs arising from provisions in the Tax Credits Bill and the accompanying regulations in relation to the new working families tax credit and disabled person's tax credit. [69146]

Dawn Primarolo: I have today placed in the Vote Office and in the Library of the House copies of a draft Regulatory Impact Assessment of the costs and benefits arising from the introduction of these two tax credits.

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish a draft of the regulations relating to employer payment of the working families tax credit and disabled person's tax credit. [69147]

Dawn Primarolo: I have today placed in the Vote Office and the Library of the House copies of a draft of the Tax Credits Schemes (Payment by Employers) Regulations which contain the main provisions relating to payment by employers of the new tax credits.

Budget Summary Leaflets

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of preparing, printing and distributing budget summary leaflets to United Kingdom households; and how many he plans to issue. [69276]

Dawn Primarolo: No definite plans have yet been made to issue a Budget leaflet.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total cost of the United Kingdom's contribution in Bosnia and Herzegovina since 1996; and if he will list the costs borne by each department. [68251]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The figures for 1996–97 and 1997–98 are listed as follows:

Total cost of the United Kingdom's contribution in Bosnia and Herzegovina since 1996 by department

£ million

	1996–97	1997–98
FCO	6.479	10.171
MOD	224.000	181.000
DFID[1] bilateral aid	42.00	22.00
Total	272.479	213.171

[1] DFID figure excludes EC attributed aid

Figures for 1998–1999 are not yet available.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to include promoting sustainable development among the objectives of the Financial Services Authority. [68597]

Mrs. Roche: The proposed objectives of the FSA are market confidence, public awareness, the protection of consumers and the reduction of financial crime.

ISAs

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason the Inland Revenue order line cannot respond to requests for copies of leaflet IR165 on individual savings accounts. [68231]

Mrs. Roche: Copies of leaflet IR165 are now available from the Inland Revenue Orderline and I am sorry if my hon. Friend or a constituent should have been told otherwise.

Pensions Mis-selling

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many appeals have been made against compensation for pensions mis-selling; and with what results. [68805]

Mrs. Roche: At 31 December 1998, 1,461 appeals against offers of compensation had been referred to the PIA ombudsman, 736 of these have been resolved. In approximately 50 per cent. of cases the ombudsman found the firms' offers to be inadequate.

Euro

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will prepare and publish an index of the relativities between the pound and the basket of currencies which constitute the euro so that the valuation of the pound in regard to the euro after 4 January can be compared with historical values. [68582]

Mrs. Roche: A proxy measure for the euro's exchange rate prior to 1999 can be derived by using the European currency unit's (ECU) exchange rate or using the Deutschmark and its euro conversion rate. Data on these are available in table 7.1A of the ONS publication "Financial Statistics".

Sterling-Deutschmark Exchange Rate

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the exchange rate of the pound against the Deutschmark in each quarter since January 1997. [68428]

Mrs. Roche: The exchange rate of the pound against the Deutschmark since January 1997 is available in table 7.1A of the ONS publication "Financial Statistics".

Asset Sales

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will account for the difference between the forecast of total receipts from asset sales in paragraph 2.31 of the 1998 Comprehensive Spending Review and Table 4.4 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy report. [68392]

Mr. Milburn: There is an error in paragraph 2.31 of the July 1998 Comprehensive Spending Review White Paper. The table in the EFSR is accurate. The error was corrected by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his evidence of 15 July 1998 to the Treasury Select Committee and his correction was published in its report "The New Fiscal Framework and the Comprehensive Spending Review" released on 27 July.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his latest estimates of the support costs for asylum seekers charged to each of (a) the Home Office, (b) the Department for Social Security and (c) the Department of Health for each of (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000, (iv) 2000–01 and (v) 2001–02. [68388]

Mr. Milburn: Asylum support costs are currently divided between the Department of Social Security and the Department of Health. In 1997–98, asylum support cost £374.6 million, of which £305 million was borne by the Department of Social Security. Figures for 1998–99 are not yet available on a comparable basis.

From April 1999, the costs of support for adults and families will be funded from the new asylum seeker support budget managed by the Home Office. The sums of £350 million, £300 million and £250 million were allocated to this in the Comprehensive Spending Review on the basis of estimated costs for the period 1999–2002. Actual spend will depend on a number of factors, such as the number of asylum claims and the speed with which these can be handled. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary may revise these cost estimates in due course.

Environmental Working Group

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times the interdepartmental working group on the environmental aspects of whole life costing has met; what progress has been made by the working group; when the working group will next meet; and what are the working group's future plans. [68107]

Mr. Milburn: The working group has met once, at which broad agreement was reached on the approach to be taken on the environmental aspects of whole life costing.

My officials are arranging for the working group to meet again shortly, as which its future plans will be discussed.

DEFENCE

Defence Secondary Care Agency Hospitals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the main Defence Secondary Care Agency hospital sites with the number of clinical, professional and other whole time equivalent staff at each site, indicating in each case what decisions over the future of the site (a) have been taken and (b) are still under review; and if he will make a statement. [66468]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The details requested are as follows:

	Royal Hospital Haslar
Service
Clinical	424
Professional medical	68
Others	45
Civilian
Clinical	89
Professional medical	75
Others	367

As part of his recent announcement of a strategy for the future of the Defence Medical Services, the Secretary of State for Defence has declared that this hospital will ultimately close. This is unlikely to be before 2002 and will not be until acceptable alternative health care arrangements are in place. These figures update those provided to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 146.

	Duchess of Kent's Hospital, Catterick
Service
Clinical	110
Professional medical	13
Others	39
Civilian
Clinical	55
Professional medical	13
Others	87

These Details include personnel in the Defence Psychiatric Service units.

A review by the DSCA of facilities provided by this hospital resulted in a decision to close acute in-patient services. Following a tendering exercise, a contract has been awarded to the Northallerton NHS Trust for the establishment of a Ministry of Defence Hospital Unit (MDHU) at the Trust's Friarage Hospital. It is planned to commence the major transfer of work by 1 July 1999.

The Strategic Defence Review included provision for the enhancement of the Community Psychiatric Services. As a result, the DSCA are now in the early stages of a comprehensive review. An announcement will be made in due course.

	Defence Services Medical Rehabilitation Centre
Service
Clinical	22
Professional medical	8
Others	82
Civilian
Clinical	11
Professional medical	3
Others	44

Within the new DMS strategy, the DSMRC has a strong future and the DSCA will continue examining new areas in which to maximise use of the excellent facilities at the unit.

	Royal Naval Hospital, Gibraltar
Service
Clinical	20
Professional medical	5
Others	10
Civilian
Clinical	2
Professional medical	6
Others	28

We have withdrawn from full collaborative arrangements with the Government of Gibraltar for the provision of secondary health care. Regrettably, it was not possible to agree mutually satisfactory arrangements. As a result, the RNH in Gibraltar has reopened. Plans are progressing to develop a combined facility that will provide primary care, dental care and essential secondary care to replace the RNH early in the millennium.

	Princess Mary's Hospital, Akrotiri
Service
Clinical	44
Professional medical	9
Others	27
Civilian
Clinical	6
Professional medical	22
Others	16

There are, at present, no plans to re-examine the role of this hospital. Its continuing presence forms an integral part of the new DMS strategy.

	MDHU Frimely Park	MDHU Peterborough	MDHU Derriford

Professional medical	8	7	3
Others	22	9	11
Civilian
Clinical	3	0	1
Professional medical	0	0	1
Others	5	9	7

The MDHUs are working well, providing an excellent clinical environment and representing good value for money. To emphasise our commitment to this concept, the DSCA are setting new contracts in place with the NHS Trusts.

Armed Forces Pension Scheme

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if representations from the public can be made to the review of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme; [67125]

(2) when he expects to announce the conclusions of the review of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme; and what opportunities there will be for public consultation before final recommendations are implemented; [67126]

(3) what representations he has sought from (a) members of the armed forces and (b) the public on the review of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme. [67124]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Review of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme, announced in September 1998, is under way and is expected to take about a year.

The Armed Forces are fully involved in the current Review of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme. During the course of the Review, the MOD will be seeking the views of a wide range of groups including the ex-Service organisations and those responsible for other pension schemes in the public and private sectors. I wrote to a number of interested organisations and individuals when announcing the Review. In due course we shall invite comments from the public in the extensive consultation exercise, but the MOD will, of course, take account of views put forward by the public at any stage.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68402]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Strategic Defence Review, which was a policy-led, fundamental reassessment of Britain's security interests and defence needs, considered the roles, missions and capabilities of our Armed Forces in the light of the changed strategic situation. The Review also constituted the Ministry of Defence's contribution to the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR).

The overall responsibilities of the MoD remain unchanged. Accordingly, under current planning assumptions, for the period 1998–99 to 2001–02 no responsibilities held by the Ministry of Defence before the CSR will be discontinued by this department or transferred to another department. Nor is it planned that any new responsibilities will be added to those held by the Department over this period.

A number of responsibilities will, as announced in the Strategic Defence Review, be transferred to new agencies. These are as follows: the Defence Aviation and Repair Agency will take on the aviation repair activities currently performed by the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation and the RAF Maintenance Group. Both these old agencies will then cease to exist.

Responsibility for the storage, processing and distribution of non explosives will be taken up by the Defence Storage and Distribution Agency. On launching this agency, the Army Bases Storage and Distribution Agency will cease to exist. All explosives storage and distribution will be handled by the Naval Bases and Supply Agency.

The Defence Transport and Movements Agency will be an amalgamation of the Defence Transport and Movements Executive, the Air Movements Executive and the Joint Transport and Movements Staff and will take on the current responsibilities of these organisations. The Procurement Executive is due to become the Defence Procurement Agency and will also subsume the activities of the Specialist Procurement Services Agency.

Also as part of the development of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency's relationship to the private sector, the Defence Diversification Agency began operating in December 1998. This agency aims to encourage the transfer of technology to and from industry.

Although not part of the Strategic Defence Review, the Defence Housing Executive is due to launch as an agency on 1 April 1999.

Posthumous Pardons

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those serving soldiers who were executed in the First World War in respect of whom posthumous pardons have been sought who were born or resident on the Wirral and (b) the (i) names, (ii) regiments and (iii) offences of serving soldiers executed in the First World War who were in the (1) Cheshire Regiment and (2) Liverpool Regiment. [69243]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The place of birth and home address of accused soldiers were not routinely included in the record of their Court Martial. This information would normally be available in the individual soldier's service records, but the destruction of the majority of First World War soldiers' documents due to enemy action in 1940 means that we have no complete authoritative source for this information.

The following soldiers serving with the Cheshire Regiment and the King's Liverpool Regiment were executed in the First World War:

Cheshire Regiment

Pte. E. Bolton (10263), 1st Bn.
CM for Desertion.
Executed on 14/4/16.

Pte. E. Bryant (20101), 10th Bn.
CM for 2 x Desertion
Executed on 27/10/17.

Pte. J. Cuthbert (28719), 9th Bn.
CM for Disobedience.
Executed on 6/5/16.

L/Cpl. (Pte.) J. Holland (13857), 10th Bn.
CM for Cowardice and Leaving Post.
Executed on 30/5/16.

Pte. (L/Cpl.) W. A. Moon (17790), 11th Bn.
CM for Desertion.
Executed 21/11/16.

Cpl. G. H. Povey (10459), 1st Bn.
CM for Leaving Post.
Executed on 10/2/15.

King's Liverpool Regiment

Pte. J. Anderson (20062), 12th Bn.
CM for Cowardice.
Executed on 12/9/16.

Pte. J. Brennan (4567), 1/8th Bn.
CM for Desertion.
Executed on 16/7/16.

Pte. J. McFarlane (265427), 4th Bn.
CM for Desertion x 3 (Guilty 1 x Desertion and 2 x AWOL).
Executed on 22/5/18.

Pte. B. McGeehan (2974), 1/8th Bn.
CM for Desertion.
Executed on 2/11/16.

Pte. J. C. Smith (52929), 17th Bn.
CM for Desertion and Disobedience.
Executed on 5/9/17.

Pte. J. Tongue (11850), 1st Bn.
CM for Desertion.
Executed on 8/1/17.

Electro-shock Batons

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions his Department procured electro-shock batons between 1970 and 1986 for deployment in Northern Ireland. [68227]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No records have been found relating to the procurement of electro-shock batons by the MOD.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68418]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

Aircraft Flying Hours

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the average flying hours in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998 for Jaguar aircraft in service with the RAF. [69006]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In both 1997 and 1998, Jaguar aircraft have each flown an average of 20.5 hours per month.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the average flying hours in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998 for Tornado GR aircraft in service with the RAF. [69063]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Tornado GR aircraft each flew an average of 22 hours per month in 1997 and 21 hours in 1998.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure in his Department since May 1997 on (a) public opinion research, (b) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (c) direct mail. [63925]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Between May 1997 and December 1998, my Department's expenditure on these items was as follows:

(a) Public Opinion Research: £0.050m

Note:

This figure includes only centrally sponsored research.

(b) Recruitment Advertising: £28.256m

Note:

Advertising undertaken by my Department is principally in support of recruitment of Service personnel and civilians. The figure given may also include some other small recruitment related costs, but may omit the costs of some recruitment advertising organised locally.

Sales Promotions Costs: £0.928m

Note:

A significant element, but not all, of these costs are for advertising.

(c) My Department has no central record of any direct mail campaign having been undertaken in the period.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of departmental personnel treated at NHS hospitals; how many operations were carried out on them; and what was the cost to his Department in each of the last five years. [65780]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In the case of Service personnel treated in MDHUs, the MOD pays the host NHS Trust for their treatment. The Department pays on the basis of the anticipated throughput of patients. These costs are adjusted at the end of each year in the light of the actual throughput. The number of patients treated in MDHUs and the cost of their treatment to date for each year since the first MDHU was opened is shown in the table. The available information does not differentiate between those patients admitted for surgical operations and those admitted for other treatments.

Year	Inpatients	Daycases	Outpatients	Total throughput	Cost £ million
1995–96	813	878	5,189	6,880	1.934
1996–97	4,246	2,197	22,887	29,330	12.050
1997–98	4,457	2,571	28,558	35,586	8.622
1998–99	4,457	2,884	27,146	34,112	9.976

Service Personnel may also be treated in any other NHS hospital as an NHS patient. The DSCA does not have visibility or control over such referrals, which would be mostly for emergency or specialist treatment. The cost of such treatment is in general met by the Department of Health, as for all other NHS patients.

Royal Hospital, Haslar

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cash limit placed on work by his Department at the RN Hospital Haslar in each of the last five years. [65783]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Defence Secondary Care Agency took over responsibility for Haslar in April 1996. Since then, the cash limits placed on the hospital's expenditure have been as follows:

1996–97: £41.345m

1997–98: £40.314m

1998–99: £48.999m.

These are at the price base appropriate to the respective year.

Details for FYs 1994–95 and 1995–96 are the responsibility of another part of my Department. They are unable to provide the information in the timescale. I have, therefore, asked the DSCA Chief Executive to write to you separately when the information becomes available.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) doctors and (b) nurses have been employed and by which Government department at the RN Hospital, Haslar in each of the last five years. [65784]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The number of MOD civilian doctors and nurses employed at the Royal Hospital Haslar over the last five years are as follows:

Year	Doctors	Nurses
1997–98	24	57
1996–97	13	16
1995–96	8	3
1994–95	10	4
1993–94	5	5

Until the last year, robust manpower recording systems were not in place to ensure the provision of accurate information. The details above are, therefore, the best that can be provided from central computer records.

For military personnel, the information requested will take a little while longer to identify. I have, therefore, asked the CE DSCA to write to you separately when the information becomes available.

No other Government Department has provided doctors or nurses for work at the Hospital.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost for non-departmental work at the RN Hospital Haslar and how many operations were performed on non-MOD personnel in each of the last five years. [65781]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Since the Defence Secondary Care Agency (DSCA) took over responsibility for the RH Haslar in April 1996 its total expenditure in each year since then has or is projected to be:

1996–97: £43.081m

1997–98: £41.287m

1998–99: £48.999m.

Figures for the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96 are not held by the DSCA. These are being obtained and the Chief Executive of the DSCA will write to the hon. Member when this information is available.

It is not possible accurately to divide this expenditure between the costs of treating Service personnel and NHS patients (including MOD civilians) admitted as inpatients or for day case surgery. However, these broadly divide between the number of patients treated, which were:

Year	Service personnel	NHS patients
1994–95	2,630	10,092
1995–96	3,524	10,592
1996–97	5,054	10,554
1997–98	5,174	11,335
1998–99	3,982	8,901

The available information does not differentiate between those patients admitted for surgical operations and for other treatments.

Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to public funds of the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987 in each of the years since its enactment. [68306]

Mr. Spellar: The following amounts in compensation were paid in each of the financial years shown to Service and ex-Service personnel following the enactment of the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act in May 1987:

Financial Year	Amount
1987 to 1988	5,000
1988 to 1989	710,000
1989 to 1990	1,627,000
1990 to 1991	2,020,000
1991 to 1992	3,413,000
1992 to 1993	6,998,000
1993 to 1994	8,960,000
1994 to 1995	14,338,426
1995 to 1996	12,184,000
1996 to 1997	14,678,000
1997 to 1998	25,807,329
1998 to 31 December 1998	21,220,346

ACEATM

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Aimed Controlled Effect Anti-Tank Mine; and if he will list the project milestones. [68507]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The Aimed Control Effect Anti-Tank Mine, ACEATM, is a collaborative programme with France and Germany. The development phase is expected to finish late this year, when France will withdraw from the programme. Subject to national approvals, the production phase would, therefore, proceed bilaterally with Germany.

On current plans, we expect to sign a Memorandum of Understanding with Germany for the production phase later this year. The first production deliveries are expected around 2,003 with UK taking delivery towards the end of the production phase leading to an in-service date no later than 2008.

ACEATM will be fully compliant with our commitments under the amended Protocol II of the United Nations Weapon Convention and the Ottawa Convention.

FOAS

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Future Offensive Air System; and if he will list the project milestones. [68509]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The Future Offensive Air System will replace the capability currently provided by the Tornado GR fleet in the offensive support role in about twenty years' time. As confirmed in the Strategic Defence Review White Paper (Cmd 3999), a wide range of options to fulfil the FOAS requirement will continue to be examined, including manned aircraft, remotely piloted/unmanned air vehicles and cruise missiles. Feasibility studies into the various options are under way and continue to progress well.

Proposals for a technology acquisition programme are currently under consideration, leading to a project Assessment Phase commencing in 2001. To realise the benefits from advances in technology, and in line with Smart Procurement principles, decisions on the concepts to be taken forward as potential solutions to the FOAS requirements are unlikely to be taken for around ten years.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has held with NATO nations on the impact of the Year 2000 problem on interchange of defence-related electronic information and on equipment that is in common service; if interconnections between NATO nations are Year 2000 compliant; and if Year 2000 tests are included in multinational military exercises conducted with (a) NATO and (b) other nations. [68255]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The need for close examination of the inter-connections between NATO nations was highlighted at the Allied Year 2000 Steering Group, hosted by the MOD in November 1998. The question of the Y2K compliance of inter-connections between NATO nations is currently being examined by the NATO Command, Control and Communications board.

The UK is planning its exercise programme to enable Y2K validation to be tested in many areas. Action is also in hand to include Y2K elements in combined exercises with US forces. Discussions with our Allies on other international exercises are continuing.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his Department's critical systems will be Year 2000 compliant by 1 April. [68261]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: Current progress indicates that around 75 per cent. of MOD's critical systems will be Year 2000 compliant by 1 April 1999.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department is collaborating with the Russian Ministry for Defence on assessing and rectifying systems affected by the Year 2000 computer problem. [68256]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: We recognise the benefit of co-operation with Russia on the Year 2000 problem and we have taken every opportunity to brief visiting delegations. MOD officials have recently taken part in discussions with Russia on the problem under the auspices of the NATO-Russia Permanent Joint Council. The issue will continue to be discussed as a priority agenda item within that forum throughout the year.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the testing of all Year 2000 modified systems for which he is responsible was completed by 31 January. [68258]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The latest figures show that 60 per cent. of those MOD systems critical to providing defence capability, and which needed modification to make them Year 2000 compliant, had been modified and tested by the end of December 1998. Current prospects are that work on all such systems will be complete in good time to ensure that UK defence capability is maintained across the Millennium period and thereafter. Dealing with the Year 2000 problem is the MOD's highest priority, other than urgent operational needs.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has developed to support the civil community in case of emergencies associated with Year 2000. [68259]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: Long-standing arrangements exist under which civil authorities can request military assistance in the event of a civil emergency. The extent to which military assistance may be required as a result of Year 2000 problems depends on any identified shortfalls in the ability of the civil authorities to respond to emergencies.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if systems for (a) service members' pay and (b) service members' medical records are Year 2000 compliant; and if he will make a statement. [68257]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: A comprehensive programme of work is in place to ensure that all MOD systems, including those delivering a pay for Service and civilian personnel are Year 2000 compliant, and is on target for completion this year. This year Service pay records are archived to microfiche, for which Year 2000 compliance is not applicable.

As medical records of Service personnel are paper based, Year 2000 compliance is not applicable.

Journalists

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the expenditure by his Department on paying journalists (a) as an asset, (b) as an assistant, (c) as on side, and (d) on a keep your eyes open basis, over the period from June 1997 to June 1998. [65465]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 14 January 1999]: From time to time my Department employs journalists, for example to train personnel in media skills. Detailed information on such employment is not held centrally. No journalist paid for work by my Department is, however, appointed directly in the terms of the categories set out by my hon. Friend.

Organophosphate Lubricants

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what organophosphate lubricants are used in the engines of military (a) fixed winged aircraft and (b) helicopters; and if he will make a statement on possible health hazards for air crews. [66599]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 19 January 1999]: The organic phosphate compound, tricresylphosphate, is present in all lubricants used regularly in military aircraft engines, to enable the lubricant to withstand the load placed on it and to prevent engine seizure. No viable alternative material is available at present.

The inhalation of mist (containing tricresylphosphate), which can be produced by high pressure systems, or direct contact with the skin, would be hazardous. We therefore have in place a number of preventative measures to prevent air and ground crews from being exposed to these hazards and also regularly review the risks to health.

Military Training (Indonesian Personnel)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Indonesian military personnel have received training in the UK since 1 May 1997. [67601]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Since 1 May 1997, a total of 22 Indonesian military personnel have attended, or are currently attending, courses at UK military training establishments. Indonesian military personnel attending courses at non-military UK educational establishments are not the responsibility of my Department. However, based on the information available to us, we understand that a further 29 Indonesian military personnel attended, or are currently attending, courses at non-military educational establishments in the UK.

RN Base Faslane

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, column 460, if he will make it his policy to carry out radiation surveys at the entrance to reactor compartments every 12 hours to coincide with shift patterns during work on nuclear submarines at RN Base Faslane. [67955]

Mr. Spellar: I wish to assure the hon. Member that the radiation surveys carried out both within and outside the Reactor Compartments of submarines meet fully our Statutory requirements. In addition to regular surveys, we also conduct continuous monitoring of the air in the Reactor Compartment for any trace of radioactive contaminants. Routine work in this area at Faslane is not based on a 12 hour shift pattern, the normal pattern being one 8 hour shift per day. Radiation surveys are carried out daily. It is not considered necessary therefore to change the frequency of the surveys.

MOD Land (Halton)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place in the Library a copy of the terms and conditions of the original transfer from the Rothschild family to the Government of land at Halton, Buckinghamshire. [67950]

Mr. Spellar: The Rothschild Foundation has agreed to public release of the Conveyance dated 31 March 1919, a copy of which will be placed in the House of Commons Library shortly.

Disposal Sales Agency

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of the Disposal Sales Agency in exporting surplus Saladin and Saracen vehicles to other countries since 1988. [68790]

Mr. Spellar: Records show that neither the Disposal Sales Agency nor its predecessor within the Defence Export Services Organisation has had any role in exporting Saladin or Saracen vehicles from the United Kingdom to other countries since 1988. A total of 37 such vehicles have been disposed of since 1988, all of which were sold commercially either within the United Kingdom or in Hong Kong. If subsequently exported, that would have been a matter solely for the purchaser to arrange, including the necessary export licences.

Clyde Nuclear Base

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the risk of (a) staff and (b) public exposure to fragments of irradiated nuclear fuel in and around the Clyde nuclear base. [68075]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 February 1999]: HM Naval Base Clyde conducts only maintenance and repair on nuclear powered submarines, during which irradiated nuclear fuel neither leaves the reactor nor is conveyed to or from the Naval Base. It is legislative requirement under the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992 that all nuclear operators undertake an assessment of the probability of the release of radioactive material from their operations that could lead to the exposure of the public. On the basis of such assessments there is no risk to staff or public from exposure to fragments of irradiated nuclear fuel.

Territorial Army

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which decisions on the future of the TA have been reviewed or altered by his Department since his announcement on 17 November 1998. [68480]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 February 1999]: No recommendations have been made to review the decisions announced on 17 November.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations were made to his Department by (a) right hon. and hon. Members and (b) other individuals and bodies on the future of the TA between 4 November and 17 November 1998. [68479]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 1 February 1999]: Between 4 and 17 November, my Department received 261 representations on the future of the Territorial Army. Of these, 95 were letters from hon. Members and noble Lords, and 166 were letters from other individuals and bodies. In addition to these representations, 14 Parliamentary Questions on the future of the Territorial Army were tabled between 4 and 17 November.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations have been made to him on the future of the TA arising from the announcement of his decision on its restructuring on 17 November 1998. [68481]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 1 February 1999]: Since the announcement of the restructuring of the Territorial Army on 17 November 1998, Official Report, columns 749–71, my Department has received 361 representations on the matter, as of 29 January 1999. Of these, 140 were letters from hon. Members and noble Lords, and 221 were letters from other individuals. In addition to these representations, 81 Parliamentary Questions on the future of the Territorial Army have been tabled since 17 November.

Multi-role Armoured Vehicle

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Multi-role Armoured Vehicle; and if he will list the project milestones. [68508]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The Multi-role Armoured Vehicle programme will provide a family of armoured utility vehicles to replace the FV430 series, Saxon and CVR(T) vehicles. The Memorandum of Understanding for the development and initial production phase has been signed and we are working with our French and German partners, and with industry, to place a contract shortly. Firm milestones will be identified during the development phase.

FASH

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future amphibious support helicopter; and if he will list the project milestones. [68500]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The Future Amphibious Support Helicopter, FASH, is intended to replace the Westland Sea King Mk 4 helicopter in around ten years' time in the role of support of amphibious operations. We are currently assessing a number of different solutions to meet the FASH requirement. Current planning would lead to the issue of an Invitation To Tender in 2001.

Air-launched Anti-armour Weapon

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the air-launched anti-armour weapon; and if he will list the project milestones. [68503]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The air-launched anti-armour weapon is designed to reduce the fighting power of enemy armoured forces as early and as far forward as possible by defeating modern and future Main Battle Tanks, Armoured Personnel Carriers and Self Propelled Guns. It is intended to be fitted on Tornado GR4, Harrier GR7 and Eurofighter. Following international competition a development and production contract was awarded to GEC Marconi Radar and Defence Systems for their BRIMSTONE weapon system on 6 November 1996.

The first flight of the missile on a Tornado took place in December 1998. Forthcoming milestones for the project are:

the completion of launcher development in April 1999, air firing trials starting in June 1999; and flight trials and the demonstration of seeker performance in August 1999.

Lightweight Mobile Artillery Weapon System

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress on the Lightweight Mobile Artillery Weapon System; and if he will list the project milestones. [68512]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The Lightweight Mobile Artillery Weapon System programme is still at an early stage, but is currently expected to involve a mix of systems, including a lightweight 155mm howitzer. Other elements of the programme are less well defined at present. The UK entered into co-operation with the US on their Lightweight 155mm Howitzer development programme in 1998, to allow us to benefit from information generated by the US programme, before making a decision on the way forward. On current plans, we expect the howitzer to enter UK service in 2007.

Bowman Project

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Bowman project; and if he will list the project milestones. [68510]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: Project Bowman will provide the Armed Forces with a new tactical combat radio communications system to replace the Clansman system, with a planned In Service Date of March 2002. The Prime contractor is Archer Communications Systems Ltd., who are currently completing system definition, including initiating key development work with sub contractors, commencing system integration, and demonstrating technical progress. On current plans, MOD intend to commit to the production and supply of the system towards the end of this year. The Bowman Project will be included in the first wave of Integrated Project Teams from 1 April 1999.

Terrier Project

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Terrier project; and if he will list the project milestones. [68757]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: Terrier will replace the in-service Combat Engineer Tractor and will provide battlefield mobility/counter mobility by performing Engineer tasks. Tenders for the Project Definition phase have been received recently from three companies, Alvis, Marconi Marine and Vickers Defence Systems and are currently being assessed. It is planned to place two competitive Project Definition contracts later this year, leading to the selection of a contractor for Full Development and Production. The vehicle is currently expected to enter service in 2008.

ASTOR

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the airborne stand-off radar project; and if he will list the project milestones. [68501]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The Airborne Stand-Off Radar, ASTOR, project is a long range theatre surveillance and target acquisition system required to operate in all weathers by day and night. The airborne component of the system will be fitted in a commercial business jet, which offers the best balance of payload, survivability, height capability and endurance.

The MOD is currently in the process of evaluating bids for the Full Development and Production phase of the project, and it would, therefore, not be appropriate to make specific comments on any aspect of the bids at this time. On current plans we aim to announce a decision on the project in the spring, and award a contract later this year. The In-Service Date will be dependent on the selected bid.

Skynet

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Skynet 5 UK Military Satellite Communications System; and if he will list the project milestones. [68505]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The requirement for UK military satellite communications is currently met by the Skynet 4 Stage 1 system, which is being replaced by three new Skynet 4 Stage 2 satellites, the first of which entered service in May 1998. These, in turn will require replacement in the middle of the next decade. The programme to provide this future capability is known as Skynet 5. The preferred option is for the requirement to be met by a PFI service based solution.

The MOD is currently in the process of evaluating proposals from industry for the Design Phase of the programme and it would, therefore, not be appropriate to make specific comments on any aspect of the bids at this time. The contracts for this phase are due to be placed in February 1999. The Implementation phase is planned to commence in 2002, with initial communication services commencing in 2006.

Future Carrier-borne Aircraft

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Future Carrier-Borne Aircraft; and if he will list the project milestones. [68513]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: As announced in the Strategic Defence Review a Future Carrier Borne Aircraft will replace the Harrier. A decision on the aircraft type is expected to be taken in late 2000. The In-Service Date remains at 2012.

COBRA

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the counter-battery radar (COBRA) project; and if he will list the project milestones. [68755]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: COBRA is a collaborative project between the UK, France and Germany to develop and produce a Counter Battery Radar with a capability to locate hostile rocket, gun, mortar batteries at long range. The COBRA project entered the Industrialisation and Production phase with the prime contractor, EURO-ART, in March 1998. On current plans we expect delivery of the first UK Radar System Vehicle in late 2001, with the system expected formally to enter service about a year later.

Kosovo

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the number of British troops which could be deployed indefinitely to Kosovo without causing the assumptions underlying the Strategic Defence Review to be revised. [69189]

Mr. George Robertson: The assumptions underlying the Strategic Defence Review were intended to guide force structure planning rather than decisions about individual deployments. A deployment to Kosovo would not invalidate these assumptions.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Allied Rapid Reaction Corps have been named for duty in Kosovo. [69190]

Mr. George Robertson: The Headquarters of the Allied Rapid Reaction Corps has been involved in Nato planning in relation to Kosovo, but no decision has been taken to proceed with any operation.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what British military forces the Nato Secretary General has authority to order into action following the response of both parties to the Contact Group's proposals on Kosovo. [69188]

Mr. George Robertson: The North Atlantic Council on 30 January agreed that the Nato Secretary General may authorise air strikes against targets on FRY territory. He will take his decision in the light of both parties' compliance with international commitments and requirements, including in particular assessment by the Contact Group of the response to its demands.

The RAF assets dedicated to these air operations consist of eight Harriers and two tankers in Italy. Furthermore, HMS Iron Duke, a Type 23 frigate, which is part of the Nato Standing Force Mediterranean, is now situated in the Adriatic.

Taiwan (Exports)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the restrictions placed on the United Kingdom defence industry in respect of exports of equipment and technology to Taiwan. [69008]

Mr. Fatchett: I have been asked to reply.

Applications for export licences to supply defence-related equipment and technology to Taiwan are considered case-by-case. All decisions are made in the light of the criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29. In scrutinising applications for Taiwan, we give particular weight to the implications for regional security.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mortgage Applications (Fraud)

34. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases involving fraud on mortgage applications have been prosecuted by the CPS in each of the last five years. [67832]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service holds no central records in respect of the number of cases involving fraud on mortgage applications which have been prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service in each of the last five years. The information is held on individual case files and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Nolle Prosequi

36. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions he has exercised the procedure of Nolle Prosequi since May 1997. [67834]

The Attorney-General: Statistics are not maintained of how many nolle prosequi are granted. However, a search of files held by my office has identified five occasions since May 1997 when a nolle prosequi has been granted.

Al Shifa Factory (Khartoum)

37. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on his communications with the Attorney-General of the United States in relation to the legality of the US military strike against the Al Shifa factory in Khartoum. [67835]

The Attorney-General: The legality of the US action against the Al Shifa action factory in Khartoum is a matter for the United States. I had no communications with Attorney-General Reno on the matter.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to review aims and objectives of the Crown Prosecution Service. [67833]

The Solicitor-General: The overall aim of the Crown Prosecution Service is to contribute to the reduction both of crime and the fear of crime and to increased public confidence in the criminal justice system by fair and independent review of cases and by firm, fair and effective prosecution to court. The aim is consistent with, and supports, the wider aims which this Government have established for the first time for the criminal justice system as a whole.

The objectives of the CPS have been revised to take account of the Glidewell recommendation that they should focus more on the CPS core business of prosecution.

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Maples: To ask the Attorney-General which ministers in his Department made use of (a) RAF and (b) chartered aircraft between 1 October 1998 and 31 January 1999; and if he will list the dates, destinations and costs of such flights. [69079]

The Attorney-General: None.

It may be helpful to the right hon. Gentleman to note that the Cabinet Office publication 'Public Bodies 1998' explains the categories of public bodies as follows:

Executive NDPBs: These bodies carry out a wide variety of administrative, regulatory and commercial functions. They generally operate under statutory provisions, employ their own staff and have responsibility for their own budgets.

Advisory NDPBs: These are generally set up administratively by Ministers to advise them and their departments on matters within their sphere of interest. Some Royal Commissions are classified as Advisory NDPBs. Generally, advisory NDPBs are supported by staff from the sponsor department, and do not incur expenditure on their own account.

Tribunal NDPBs: This category covers bodies with jurisdiction in a specialised field of law. In general, tribunals are serviced by staff from the sponsor department.

Other bodies: These tend to be bodies which operate at a local level and include local authority planning bodies; CHCs and University Courts and Councils.

Health and Education Spending Plans

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his public spending plans for health and education in the next three years. [68359]

Mr. Michael: The Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) provided an extra £1.030 billion for the NHS in Wales—£175 million next financial year, £345 million in 2000–01 and £510 million in 2001–02. I am now considering in detail my spending priorities in view of the range of pressures and will make a further announcement in due course.

For education I am making available an additional £117 million next financial year, £262 million in 2000–01 and £399 million in 2001–02. I will be announcing further details very soon.

In future these decisions will be a responsibility of the National Assembly.

Primary Health Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the role of primary health care provision in North Wales. [68362]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The North Wales Health Authority is responsible for assessing, monitoring and arranging for the provision of health services in its area in order to meet clinical needs. This responsibility extends over both the primary and secondary sectors.

The Welsh Office maintains oversight of health authorities in Wales; in the exercise of these functions officials meet representatives of each authority on a regular basis to review and report on progress.

The Government's White Paper "Putting Patients First" set out our proposals for restoring and modernising the NHS. The aim is to ensure that services are developed in partnership and driven by a concern for quality, effectiveness and efficiency. Primary health care provision has a key role to play in that process and Local Health Groups will be established on 1 April. These groups will harness the skills and experience of primary care professionals and will work with partners such as local authorities and the voluntary sector, to ensure that the services provided are responsive to the needs and circumstances of local people.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Health Care Provision

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to improve the provision of health care for children. [68364]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Our aim to improve the health and well-being of children in Wales is set out in the Green Paper "Better Health, Better Wales" (Cm 3922). Work is in hand to develop a children's strategy which will set clear objectives and principles to govern the development and delivery of children's services in Wales. A set of targets for children's health has been developed to measure improvements in children's health over the next five years.

"The Health of Children in Wales" report sets out the statutory and policy requirements for high quality services for children and has been issued to all health authorities, health trusts and local authority social services departments in Wales. Progress in implementation of the report is being monitored.

We have announced additional funding to establish a paediatric intensive care unit at the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff (UHW). This unit will ensure that seriously ill children receive high quality specialised intensive care.

We have set aside £25 million to establish a "Sure Start" programme in Wales over the next three years. The programme will aim to improve the health, welfare and social development of very young children particularly in areas of greatest disadvantage.

Local authorities in Wales will have an extra £5 million of earmarked resources in 1999–2000 to begin making improvements to the quality and outcomes of services they provide for children. They will have to take into account the Government's response to the Children's Safeguards Review (Cm 4105), which includes range of proposals to improve the health of looked after children by local authorities and other public agencies. The response to the Review also sets out the new arrangements for monitoring and safeguarding the welfare of children in hospitals, nursing homes and hospices.

We have published an action programme for improved planning of special education needs (SEN) provision for children with disabilities and will be funding pilot projects in Wales in 1999–2000.

The recent White Paper "Smoking Kills" (Cm 4177) announced a comprehensive package of measures designed to discourage children from taking up smoking and to adopt healthier life styles.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Theatres and Orchestras

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the funding of regional (a) theatres and (b) orchestras. [68360]

Mr. Michael: Welsh Office support for the arts is channelled through the Arts Council of Wales (ACW), which takes decisions on the detailed financial allocation to individual arts organisations. The ACW is in the process of consulting the public on its future strategy. I have helped that process by providing the ACW with the first real terms increase in its budget for a number of years. I have also announced a new programme on the next three years to develop and support orchestral and ensemble music involving children and young people.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68396]

Mr. Michael: No responsibilities will be discontinued. The great majority of functions administered by my Department, and some responsibilities which currently fall to other departments, will be transferred to the National Assembly for Wales later this year. These will be as set out in the Transfer of Functions Order which I published for consultation last November, and which I hope to lay before Parliament shortly. In addition, responsibility for section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966, as it applies to Wales, will be transferred to my Department by the Home Office from April 1999.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68412]

Mr. Michael: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

National Assembly

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to receive the report of the commissioners appointed to prepare draft standing orders for the National Assembly for Wales. [69805]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioners' chair, Mr. Gareth Wardell, wrote to me on 22 January, enclosing a comprehensive set of draft standing orders. I am very grateful to the Commissioners for the work they have undertaken on this extremely important task.

I am arranging for copies of the Commissioners' report to be placed in the libraries of the House. I am also writing to the right hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) and the hon. Members for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey) and for Woodspring (Dr. Fox), inviting their parties' views on the Commissioners' work. I expect to make the standing orders in their final form in March.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what educational publicity campaign he plans to undertake, at what estimated cost, to inform electors of the new proportional voting system to be used in the election for the Welsh Assembly. [69187]

Mr. Michael: Information about the voting system will be given as part of the overall information campaign to increase public awareness of the Assembly and its powers together with the greater accountability for decisions in Wales once the Assembly is in place. I have now allocated some £2 million for the National Assembly Information Campaign.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on waiting lists in Wales. [69542]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I am pleased to announce that, as a result of the £20 million invested in the NHS by the Government and the hard work of the NHS staff, the inpatient waiting list fell over the three months to November 1998 to stand at 71,264—the lowest figure since February 1998. The numbers waiting over 12 months and 18 months fell by 329 and 323 respectively in November.

Outpatient lists have increased by 11 in November while the number waiting over 6 months for an appointment rose by 232, an increase of 1.3 per cent.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Secretary of State (Responsibilities)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his responsibilities following the establishment of the National Assembly for Wales. [68552]

Mr. Michael: Immediately after the election of the National Assembly for Wales I will retain all my current functions. A few weeks later I will transfer most of these functions to the Assembly in accordance with the Transfer of Functions Order. The Assembly will then become the centre of democracy within Wales. After that, the Secretary of State for Wales will continue as a member of the UK Cabinet and will have responsibility for primary legislation where it is proposed that powers be given to the Assembly, for Parliamentary procedures relating to those subordinate legislative instruments made by the Assembly which are still subject to such procedures, for securing and giving the Assembly its annual budget, for consulting the Assembly on the Government's legislative programme, for Welsh matters connected with the Palace and for minority languages.

Some of the powers under the Government of Wales Act 1998 which the Secretary of State will exercise as part of the transfer of functions are not time limited so that he or she may apply the Act to changed circumstances; for example, he or she may add to the powers of the Auditor General for Wales if a new function is transferred to the Assembly which involves the preparation of accounts and make provisions about the accounts of any new public body that may be created with functions that relate only to Wales.

Arts Council

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the level of funding for the Arts Council of Wales for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [68812]

Mr. Michael: I have received no representations in response to my announcement that the Arts Council's grant in aid for 1999–2000 will increase by 3.1 per cent. to £14.8 million. This is the first increase given to the Arts Council since 1995–96.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68420]

Mr. Straw: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

My Department's spending allocation following the Comprehensive Spending Review does, however, take account of the Bill announced in the Queen's Speech on 24 November 1998 to modernise the law on immigration and asylum, including reform of the appeals system and new support arrangements for asylum seekers.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68404]

Mr. Straw: From April 1999, my Department is transferring to the Department for Education and Employment and to the Welsh Office responsibility for funding grants under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for educational projects to help members of ethnic minorities to overcome disadvantage due to differences of language or culture. This represents 97 per cent. of the total value of grants paid under section 11. My Department is currently considering what arrangements might best be made for funding such work in areas other than education.

My Department took on responsibility for freedom of information from the Cabinet Office on 31 July 1998.

From April 1999, my Department will manage the new asylum seekers' budget which will meet the costs of support for adults and families seeking asylum. These costs are currently met from budgets managed by the Department of Social Security and the Department of Health.

Burglars (Sentencing)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has evaluated into the expected financial costs and savings which will occur due to implementation of the proposed mandatory sentence for repeat burglars; if he will indicate the assumptions underlying such research; and if he will make a statement. [68948]

Mr. Boateng: We estimate that the implementation of section 4 of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 will add between 4,000 and 4,400 to the prison population over 10 years. These estimates are based on a sample of offenders convicted in four weeks in 1997 and include an allowance of 1,000 prison places for the indirect effects on convictions for similar offences, such as a second conviction for burglary. The range of figures reflects different assumptions about the deterrent effect of implementation: the higher figure assumes no reduction in the requirement for prison places as a result of deterrence.

The latest long-term projections for the prison population are lower than had previously been the case. The Prison Service can now expect to cope with the extra prison places within existing provision at least for the next three years.

Police Stations (Disabled Access)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of police stations in each police force are accessible to disabled people; and if he will make a statement. [68957]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not collected centrally in the manner requested. The Audit Commission published details, in January 1999, of the number of police authority buildings open to the public and those which have access to and are usable by the disabled. These are set out in the table.

Figures published by the Audit Commission: January 1999

HMP Coldingley

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the results of the internal audit into the letting of the workshop contract at HMP Coldingley to Wackenhut UK. [68945]

Mr. George Howarth: The report by Prison Service Internal Audit on this matter is an internal management document, concerning actions which are the subject of a disciplinary inquiry as well as issues which are subject to discussion with the contractor. It is not intended to publish it.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sums are owed by Wackenhut UK to the prison service in lieu of the workshop contract at HMP Coldingley; what steps are being taken by his Department in relation to this contract; and if he will make a statement. [68944]

Mr. George Howarth: The contract for the management of the industries at Coldingley Prison ended on 31 January 1999 following the receipt of notice of termination from the contractor, Wackenhut (UK) Limited.

At 29 January, invoices totalling £170,531.18 payable under the terms of the contract had been presented to Wackenhut, but not yet paid; however, none were beyond the 30-day payment period. Additionally, Wackenhut are liable to make a final payment of £26,250 in February to complete repayment of a loan.

The Prison Service is in the process of establishing other sums due, in relation to operation of the contract during January, handover of assets at the end of the contract and other matters. Further invoices will be issued in due course.

The Prison Service has also started a disciplinary inquiry relating to concerns raised by an internal audit report on the operation of the contract.

Public Safety Radiocommunications Project

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces implemented all necessary measures under the new Public Safety

Radiocommunications project; what is the expected date of implementation in each police force; what is the total capital cost to each police force of implementing the system; what is the expected annual running cost of the system for each police force; and if he will make a statement. [68951]

Mr. Boateng: All forces in England and Wales have been actively involved in Public Safety Radiocommunications project through establishment of dedicated teams, participation in regional user groups, direct consultations with the Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO), which is managing the project, and a programme of force visits by the prospective service provider, BT.

PITO have provided the provisional implementation dates for each force which are shown in the table.

Budgeting for the take up of the service will be based on the agreed roll-out programme and is the responsibility of each Police Authority. Definitive costs are not available at this stage and are the subject of on-going negotiation.

Police Efficiency

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list Her Majesty's National Inspectorate of Constabulary and Audit Commission proposals for improving police efficiency which are being implemented by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [68956]

Mr. Boateng: On 4 November 1998, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary wrote to all police authorities and forces, with guidance on making efficiency plans to deliver the 2 per cent. reinvestment from efficiency gains which my right hon. Friend required for 1999–2000.

This guidance drew heavily on areas for improved efficiency, suggested by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) in its 1998 thematic report on value for money and efficiency, "What Price Policing?". The Audit Commission also report on police performance, as required under the Local Government Act 1992. They compare force date in different police authority areas, and work closely with the Inspectorate to advise and support the Secretary of State. Both HMIC and the Audit Commission have identified that better use of assets and procurement practice, reviewing specialist units and administrative arrangements, reducing sickness and improved management of medical retirements can contribute to improved management of medical retirements can contribute to improved police performance. Copies of all the relevant reports are in the Library.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department has issued to police forces in respect of obtaining the 2 per cent. efficiency gains demanded by his Department in each of the next three years; what is his policy towards police forces reducing police officer numbers to achieve these gains; and if he will make a statement. [68949]

Mr. Boateng: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary wrote to all police forces and authorities on 4 November 1998 with guidance to meet the 2 per cent. year-on-year efficiency target set by Government's Comprehensive Spending Review. A copy of the letter was placed in the Library. The guidance, which was prepared in consultation with Her Majesty's Treasury, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC), the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Association of Police Authorities and the Audit Commission, sets out the information required in the efficiency plan and a pro forma for completion. It also lists areas identified by HMIC and the Audit Commission where there may well be scope of significant efficiency improvements, and which forces are encouraged to consider in preparing their plans.

Police forces can keep the resources released by achieving efficiency gains. The Government expect them to reinvest these resources to help improve delivery of frontline national and local policing priorities. The guidance makes clear that we will not consider cuts in officer numbers as an efficiency gain, except where forces can demonstrate that, in doing so, they have maintained or improved the existing level of service.

Criminal Record Checks

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the full cost to the Criminal Records Bureau of each criminal conviction certificate issued on an individual; what is the standard fee to be paid by individuals requesting a check; how many certificates he estimates will be requested per year (a) from people wishing to work in the voluntary sector, (b) from unemployed people, (c) from disabled people, (d) from all other individuals and (e) in total; and if he will make a statement. [68953]

Mr. Boateng: Once established, the Criminal Records Bureau will be self-financing through charging for each certificate to be issued as provided for under the Police Act 1997. The fee set for each certificate type will reflect the full cost to the Bureau of providing the service. We estimate that certificates will cost between five and around ten pounds depending on the level of certificate sought.

It is impossible to predict accurately likely demand for certificates once the Bureau is in full operation. We estimate however that there will be annual demand for around 5 to 6 million Criminal Conviction Certificates (CCCs), 2 to 3 million Criminal Record Certificates (CRCs) and 2 to 3 million Enhanced Criminal Record Certificates (ECRCs). Demand for certificates from any particular sector is ever more difficult to predict, but up to half the CRCs and ECRCs issued could go to those wishing to work, in a paid or unpaid capacity, in the voluntary sector. Based on figures prepared in 1996, we estimate there could be around 1 million applications a year for CCCs from the unemployed. No estimate has been made of the number of applications from disabled people.

Prisons (Charter Marks)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons in England and Wales have been awarded a Charter Mark; if he will list them by date awarded; and if he will make a statement. [68954]

Mr. George Howarth: Ten Prison Service establishments in England and Wales currently hold the Charter Mark for part or all of the establishment. They are:

1996

Morton Hall prison

Holme House prison—Education Department

Exeter prison—Physical Education (PE) Department

1997

Erlestoke prison—Library

Kirkham prison

Wayland prison—PE Department

1998

Holme House prison—PE Department

Haverigg prison—PE Department and Library

Northallerton Young Offender Institution—Education Department

Doncaster prison—Premier Prison Services Ltd.

Garth prison.

Sergeant Gurpal Virdi

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the (a) cause and (b) length of suspension of Sergeant Gurpal Virdi. [68739]

Kate Hoey: This is an operational matter for the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. He tells me that Police Sergeant Virdi was arrested on 15 April 1998 and has been suspended from duty. As the case remains under investigation, I cannot comment further.

Racist Attack (Hanwell)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report about events following a racist attack in Hanwell in March 1998; and if he will make a statement. [68738]

Kate Hoey: The investigation of a particular crime is an operational matter for the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. He tells me that five racist incidents of which two were attacks were recorded in Hanwell in March 1998. If the hon. Member would like to let me have identifying details of the attack he has in mind, I will ask the Commissioner for the relevant information, and will write to the hon. Member accordingly.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has, under interim funding arrangements for asylum seekers, to assist local authorities in respect of families who declared their intention to seek asylum at the port of entry and are eligible for benefits. [68579]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: At present, asylum seekers with families who declare their intention to seek asylum at the port of entry may, if they qualify, be eligible for income support, housing benefit and assistance under the homelessness legislation. Local authority costs for such services are covered by the local government finance settlement in the normal way.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers arrived in this country without any documentation during 1998; what countries they claimed to come from; and if he will make a statement. [69302]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that information on the number of asylum seekers who arrived in this country without any documentation could only be obtained by examination of individual case records and is, therefore, only available at disproportionate cost.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applicants for political asylum arrived as passengers at each (a) port and (b) airport in England and Wales, during the last quarter of (i) 1997 and (ii) 1998; and if he will make a statement; [69305]

(2) how many applicants for political asylum arrived as passengers at each (a) port and (b) airport in England and Wales, during (a) 1997 and (b) 1998; and if he will make a statement. [69304]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

There was a temporary drop in asylum claims after the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 but the figures have since increased. We inherited the current asylum legislation and will seek to amend it in a new Bill shortly.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers made applications in the last quarter of (a) 1997 and (b) 1998; and if he will make a statement. [69303]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The number of asylum applications made in the last quarter of 1997 was 8,455. In the last quarter of 1998 the figure was 14,400. After the then record year for asylum claims in 1991, the previous Administration introduced legislation to control abuse of the asylum system. It temporarily reduced the numbers applying after the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993, but those figures started to rise to similar levels after a time.

After 1996, new legislation produced another temporary reduction in claims, but since then the figures have risen again. The asylum legislation currently in place is that of previous Administrations. The present Administration will introduce a Bill to amend it shortly.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of dependants accompanying those who made applications for political asylum in each of the last two years. [69301]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is estimated that in 1997, 8,980 dependants accompanied applicants for asylum in the United Kingdom. The estimate for 1998 is 11,970. This information relates to dependants applying with the principal applicant or arriving subsequently, before the principal application was decided. It excludes dependants who arrive after the principal decision.

Special Advisers

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the functions of his special advisers, together with their terms of contract, indicating (a) pay, (b) pension provision and (c) other benefits. [69337]

Mr. Straw: Justin Russell advises me on policy matters and Ed Owen is my adviser on media and political matters. They are employed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers, a copy of which had been placed in the Library.

For information on salaries, I refer the right hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King) on 16 November 1998, Official Report, columns 354–55.

In line with the practice of successive Administrations, information on the salaries and the paybill costs for individual Special Advisers is not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

Prison Radio Stations

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison radio stations are operated by inmates in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [68830]

Mr. George Howarth: Feltham young offender institution has the only radio station operated by inmates in establishments in England and Wales.

The radio station is funded by a charity called Friends of Feltham. The inmates involved are paid by the establishment in the same way as all inmates involved in purposeful activity.

Prisoners (Incarceration)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average number of hours per day during 1998 that prisoners in prisons were locked in their cells. [68857]

Mr. George Howarth: During the calendar year 1998, prisoners were locked in their cells for an average of 15.4 hours on weekdays and for an average of 16.3 hours at weekends.

Prisons (Pre-release Programme)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons in England and Wales operate a pre-release programme; and if he will make a statement. [68832]

Mr. George Howarth: There are no central records of the number of prisoners operating pre-release programmes. Preparing prisoners for release is extremely important and the Prison Service provides assistance in a variety of ways. These include the delivery, by specially trained prison and probation staff and specialists from a range of voluntary organisations, of a range of advice and information on, for example, accommodation, employment, parenting skills and substance abuses.

Prisoner Complaints

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average period of time taken by his Department to respond to complaints made to them by an inmate serving a prison sentence in England and Wales was in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [68831]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not recorded centrally and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. However, the prisoner requests complaints procedure provides that prisoners should receive a reply within six weeks, and if that is not possible, they should receive an interim reply explaining the delay. There have been some delays in dealing with requests and complaints in Prison Service headquarters, and improved procedures are currently being put in place to keep prisoners informed of progress.

Hillsborough Disaster

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place those in Liverpool City Library those documents held by his Department relating to the Hillsborough disaster. [68854]

Mr. Boateng: As much of the evidence as possible considered by Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's scrutiny of the Hillsborough disaster has already been placed in the Library and it is open to Members to arrange for their constituents to view it there. We have no plans to place copies of the material in Liverpool City Library and I am sorry that my reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 3, gave that impression. I subsequently wrote to my right hon. Friend on 7 December setting out the position and placed a copy of that letter in the Library.

South Yorkshire Police

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he has received from (a) the South Yorkshire Police Authority and (b) South Yorkshire Police, on the costs to the South Yorkshire Police Authority of funding the defence of David Godfrey Duckenfield and Bernard Dean Murray in the cases of Adlington v Murray and Adlington v Duckenfield; and on what dates he received those reports. [68844]

Mr. Boateng: We have received no reports on the costs to the South Yorkshire Police Authority other than the information contained in my reply I gave on 1 February 1999, Official Report, column 428. This information was obtained from the South Yorkshire Police on 28 January and confirmed by the Police Authority on 1 February.

Mercenaries

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those cases of criminal prosecution relating to the activities of mercenaries and private military companies which (a) have been brought and (b) have been brought successfully since 1987. [68694]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not held on the Home Office Court Proceedings Database.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of convictions expressed as a proportion of the total number of recorded crimes in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [68608]

Mr. Boateng: The available information is given in the table:

Offenders convicted for indictable offences[1] as a proportion of the total number of notifiable offences recorded by the police[2], England and Wales, 1993–97

Year	Percentages
1993	5.8
1994	6.2
1995	6.2
1996	6.2
1997	7.2

[1] Indictable offences including those triable-either-way.
[2] Excluding other criminal damage of value £20 and under. Includes estimates for criminal damage over £20 for Merseyside and Metropolitan Police.

Circus Animals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in respect of the treatment of circus animals; and what plans he has to review the regulations governing their use. [69015]

Mr. George Howarth: Representations have been received from the all party parliamentary group for animal welfare, Members of Parliament, animal defenders and members of the public.

The legislation—the Protection of Animals Act 1911 and the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925—make it a criminal offence to cause any unnecessary suffering to any domestic or captive wild animal. Trainers and exhibitors of circus animals are required to be registered with the local authority. Officers of local authorities have the power of entry to premises in which performing animals are being kept for training or exhibition and powers to inspect those animals.

The Home Office is planning to issue guidance to local authorities about these powers. The Department will also be seeking information about the welfare of circus animals which are kept in winter quarters. Once this information has been obtained, we will consider the matter further. In the meantime, we expect local authorities to be robust in their enforcement of existing legislation governing the use of animals in circuses.

Drug Suppliers

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the outcome has been of the consultation exercise that has been undertaken on the proposal to introduce a Drug Supply Offender Protection Order; and if he will make a statement. [69802]

Mr. George Howarth: An undertaking was given during the passage of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 to consult on the proposal to introduce a Drug Supply Offender Protection Order. A consultation paper was issued on 23 June, copies of which were placed in the Library together with a list of the organisations to whom it was sent.

The proposal would enable magistrates, on application, to impose an Order requiring anyone convicted or cautioned of a drug supply offence in this country or overseas to refrain from any act, if that was considered necessary to protect the public from the supply of drugs.

The consultation exercise has revealed little support for such an Order. The overwhelming view expressed is that the present legislation is adequate and that the Order would have little impact on the present levels of misuse.

This response to the exercise has confirmed our view that there would be no advantage in introducing such an Order at present.

Wild-caught Primates

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions permission was given for the use of wild-caught primates for research purposes during 1998; and what was (a) the species of primate used, (b) the source country, (c) the number of primates used and (d) the research for which permission was given. [69282]

Mr. George Howarth: During 1998, one project licence authorising the use of wild-caught non-human primates was granted. Under this licence, four wild-caught baboons, obtained from Kenya, were used in heart xenotransplantation research during 1998. Two further wild-caught rhesus macaques were used in neuroscience research under the authority of a licence granted before 1998. These were obtained before 1996. It was not possible to check their country of origin in the time available.

Primates (Xenotransplantation Research)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions inspectors of scientific procedures involving animals have asked for primates used in xenotransplantation research to be destroyed to prevent unacceptable levels of pain or distress in each of the last three years. [69290]

Mr. George Howarth: I will write to the hon. Member.

Transgenic Pigs (Medical Research)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many transgenic pigs have been released under the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 for export from the United Kingdom for use in medical research and experimentation in each month since May 1997. [69291]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is as follows:

Month	Number of Pigs	Destination
June 1997	[1]5	USA
August 1997	[1]7	Japan
November 1997	4	Netherlands
April 1998	[1]12	Canada
April 1998	10	Spain
April 1998	[1]21	Spain
May 1998	2	Netherlands
June 1998	[1]21	Italy
June 1998	5	Spain
September 1998	[1]8	Canada

[1] These animals were exported for use in breeding programmes rather than for use in scientific procedures

Imported Primates (Journey Times)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the (i) longest and (ii) average recorded journey time of primates imported to the United Kingdom for research purposes during 1998 from (a) China, (b) Mauritius, (c) Indonesia and (d) the Philippines. [69281]

Mr. George Howarth: In accordance with the measures introduced in 1996, the Home Office only requires that an estimated total journey time be provided prior to each acquisition and that, after each acquisitions, confirmation be provided that the importation was in accordance with what had been authorised.

The information requested is as follows:

Country/journey details	Average journey time
China
Longest—58 hours	52 hours
Mauritius
Longest—38 hours	28 hours
Indonesia
No importations during 1998	—
Philippines
Longest—48 hours	[1]Estimated 30 hours

[1] It has not been possible to give an average journey time for acquisitions from the Philippines as the necessary information is still being collated

As a result of pressure on airlines from animal protection groups, it is now impossible to fly primates directly to the United Kingdom. Instead, they are usually flown into mainland Europe and then transported to the United Kingdom by road and ferry, increasing the journey times and the associated stress for the animals.

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of the prisoners released on 28 January, subject to home detention curfew, had (a) one previous conviction and (b) more than one previous conviction for offences to which Part I of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 applies; [69191]

(2) how many of the prisoners released on 28 January, subject to home detention curfew were serving a sentence of imprisonment for an offence of violence and had (a) one previous conviction for violence and (b) more than one previous conviction for violence. [69192]

Mr. George Howarth: Five of the 38 prisoners placed on home detention curfew on 28 January were serving sentences for offences of violence. Offenders required to register under the Sex Offenders Act 1997 will only be placed on home detention curfew in exceptional circumstances. No offender who was serving a sentence for an offence covered by Part 1 of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 was placed on home detention curfew on 28 January. The data on previous convictions are not immediately available and I will write to the hon. Member when this has been collated.

Appeal Court

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the median time taken for the Criminal Cases Review Commission to reach a decision on reference to the Appeal Court. [67830]

Mr. Boateng: I understand that since April 1997, the median time taken, from receipt of the application, to reach a decision on cases (other than those which the Commission has determined do not meet the eligibility criteria laid down by the Criminal Appeal Act 1995) was 212 working days.

Prison Service (Dogs)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many dogs are currently employed by Her Majesty's Prison Service in England and Wales. [69094]

Mr. George Howarth: The total number of dogs in the Prison Service at the end of January 1999 were 752. These are broken down as:

462: German shepherd dogs of which 18 are dual purpose dogs.

178: Active drug dogs.

34: Passive drug dogs.

78: Arms and explosive search dogs.

Prisons (Illegal Drugs)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what public funds have been spent in each of the last three years on mandatory drug tests in prisons. [68996]

Mr. George Howarth: There is a central budget covering expenditure on laboratory analysis, a courier service, collection kits and stationery. Expenditure from that budget in the last three years has been as follows:

Year	£
1996–97	1,076,381
1997–98	1,599,137
April 1998 to January 1999	1,100,000

These figures do not include the cost of staff who collect the samples and provide administrative support. Responsibility for meeting these costs is devolved to each prison governor. Information on this element of expenditure is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amount of illegal drugs discovered in each of Her Majesty's prisons in each of the last three years. [68997]

Mr. George Howarth: The table lists for each of Her Majesty's prisons in England and Wales for the last three years, the number of finds of illegal drugs discovered. No central record of the aggregate amount of the drug is kept.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Industry (Marketing)

15. Mr. Olner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures his Department is taking to improve marketing in the food industry. [67810]

Mr. Nick Brown: We pursue a range of activities to help the agri-food industry improve competitive performance, including marketing. We also work with industry initiatives in this area.

Battery Hens

16. Ms Ryan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has taken to improve the welfare of battery hens. [67811]

Mr. Morley: We are continuing to work with our EU partners to develop improved welfare standards for laying hens in battery cages and to set, for the first time, Community wide standards for non-cage systems. We have made it clear in these negotiations that our long term aim is to phase out cages altogether.

Genetically Modified Foods

17. Mr. Colman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the food industry in relation to genetically modified foods. [67812]

Mr. Rooker: The issue of genetically modified foods has featured on the agenda of various on-going meetings which I have had with the food industry.

Meat Hygiene Inspectors

18. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about contingency plans in the event of a strike by meat hygiene inspectors. [67813]

Mr. Rooker: Contingency Plans were drawn up to minimise the effect of industrial action by some Meat Hygiene Service staff. Food safety, public health and animal welfare were fully protected.

The MHS strictly enforced meat hygiene, specified risk material and animal welfare Regulations in all licensed plants whether or not they were able to operate on the day of strike action. The Contingency Plans were successful in achieving their objectives for the GB meat industry as a whole.

24. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for studies of the work of meat inspectors. [67820]

Mr. Rooker: There are no proposals for studies of the work of meat inspectors with respect to the relationship between the inspectors and plant operators.

The Meat Hygiene Service is an enforcement Agency carrying out a difficult but crucial job of protecting public health and animal welfare occasionally in a hostile environment. The MHS seeks to work in co-operation with plant management rather than confrontation. A balance must be struck between effective enforcement and unnecessary over-regulation and I believe that the MHS is getting it right.

Non-European Union Imports

19. Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about food safety standards for imports from outside the EU. [67814]

Mr. Nick Brown: Protecting the public by ensuring that food is produced to high standards of safety is a priority for the Government. Imports from outside the EU are required to have been produced to the same, or equivalent, standards as domestic produce.

Food and Animal Welfare Standards

20. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the cost to British farmers of compliance with food and animal welfare standards. [67815]

Mr. Morley: The cost of compliance with statutory food and animal welfare standards is considered as part of the full regulatory impact assessment we now provide on any proposed changes to legislation. It is, of course, also necessary to consider the cost and other implications of non-compliance in these important areas.

British Beef

21. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department has taken to persuade local authorities in England not to place an arbitrary restriction on the purchase of British beef and beef products. [67816]

Mr. Rooker: The Ministry is not well placed nor resourced to lobby local authorities, which are obliged to look for best value for money in their procurement decisions. However, we continue to support the work of the Meat and Livestock Commission in its efforts to re-instate beef on school menus.

Small Farm Sector

22. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to encourage innovation and diversification in the small farm sector. [67818]

Mr. Morley: Funding is available to the small farm sector to encourage a wide range of agricultural activities, including innovation and farm diversification, in the six areas designated to receive assistance under the English Objective 5b Structural Fund Programmes. No grant aid for farm diversification is currently available outside these areas but MAFF is consulting on options in the Agenda 2000 CAP reform rural development proposals. MAFF is working with the NFU to encourage collaboration among farmers. It is also organising seminars on farmers' markets and the speciality food sector.

Hill Farmers

23. Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current incomes of hill farmers in the United Kingdom. [67819]

Mr. Morley: The 1998 Autumn Review of Economic Conditions in the Hills and Uplands showed that, in the UK as a whole, net farm income on full-time cattle and sheep farms in the Less Favoured Areas was forecast to fall by 67 per cent. in 1998/99. The statistical tables containing this, and other data, were laid before the House on 26 November 1998. This forecast did not include the payments to hill livestock farmers in the £120 million aid package announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 16 November 1998, Official Report, columns 624–40.

On 28 January 1999, my Department published provisional estimates of UK farm incomes and output in 1998. These estimates, which include the extra payments under the aid package, forecast a fall of 38 per cent. in net farm incomes on cattle and sheep farms in the Less Favoured Areas in 1998–99.

Common Agricultural Policy

25. Mr. Andy King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to press for reform of the common agricultural policy; and if he will make a statement. [67821]

Mr. Morley: We are continuing to press for comprehensive reform of the Common Agricultural Policy at meetings of the EU Agriculture Council in Brussels, with a view to bringing productions closer to the market.

We are seeking the gradual reduction and eventual phasing out of price and production-related agricultural support. We are also pushing for part of the savings from such a reduction in production support to be directed to measures which will protect and enhance the environment and help the rural economy adjust, particularly in more fragile rural areas.

28. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received regarding reform of environmental measures under the CAP. [67824]

Mr. Morley: Representations on CAP reform, including reform of environmental measures, were most recently sought as part of a consultation process launched on 5 January. Responses have yet to be received or fully assessed.

Foodstuffs Importation Ban

26. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his Department's powers to ban importation of foodstuffs whose production standards are illegal in this country. [67822]

Mr. Rooker: Member States have powers to take protective measures under various pieces of EU legislation where there is a risk to public health.

Sustainable Rural Development

27. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to promote sustainable rural development. [67823]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Ms Russell) on 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 1083.

Meat and Bone Meal

29. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to dispose of meat and bone meal; and if he will make a statement. [67825]

Mr. Rooker: The Intervention Board has awarded the first large scale contract for incineration with energy recovery of meat and bone-meal (MBM) derived from the OTMS and is considering proposals from other potential service providers. The majority of MBM from animals slaughtered for human consumption is being safely landfilled in appropriately licensed sites.

Pesticides

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proposals he has to ensure that a pesticide tax does not disadvantage British growers relative to their European competitors; [68237]

(2) what study he has made of the relative advantages of a pesticides tax as opposed to other measures adopted by other EU states to reduce pesticide usage. [68229]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Economic Secretary to the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) on 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 218.

Date Based Export Scheme

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in implementing the Date Based Export Scheme. [67817]

Mr. Rooker: We are currently considering the responses to the consultation on the Date Based Export Scheme (DBES) and making the necessary arrangements for the scheme to operate. I expect to lay the legislation necessary to implement the DBES later this month. However, the EC Commission need to carry out an inspection, report and set a date on which exports may resume.

Welsh and English Lamb

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to seek protection for (a) Welsh and (b) English lamb under European Union law relating to food labelling requirements. [68595]

Mr. Rooker: EC legislation on the protection of food names enables products from particular regions, with a specific quality or characteristic attributable to that region, to be protected against imitators. An application to protect "Welsh lamb" has been submitted to the European Commission for approval. Cases are being developed to protect lamb from a number of specific regions of England.

As I have already announced to the House, we will shortly be implementing the recommendation of the Review of the Organic Aid Scheme that rates of aid for farmers converting to organic farming should be substantially increased.

Organic Farming

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what conversion payments have been made by region in each of the last five financial years to encourage farmers to switch to organic production; and if he will make a statement about the Organic Aid Scheme. [67711]

Mr. Morley: The Organic Aid Scheme was not in operation during the financial year 1993–94. Expenditure under the scheme in subsequent financial years, by region, is as follows:

Region	Total amount paid 1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99 [1]

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68400]

Mr. Morley: In answer to parts (a) and (d) of the question, I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Ms Keeble) on 27 October 1998, Official Report, columns 156–58. With the exception of work on food safety and standards, which will transfer to the proposed Food Standards Agency, MAFF is not proposing to transfer any responsibilities to another Department or to an executive agency.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ewen Cameron

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions since May 1997 he has met Mr. Ewen Cameron, and if he will make a statement on the matters discussed. [69341]

The Prime Minister: As under previous administrations, it is not the normal practice to provide details of private meetings with specific individuals or organisations.

HEALTH

Head Lice

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 242, on head lice, what help is available to parents on low incomes for the purchase of head lice treatments. [68926]

Ms Jowell: All medication, which includes treatment for head lice, is available free of charge, on prescription to children aged 0–16 and to those aged 16–18 who are in full-time education.

Prescribed medication is available free through the extensive charge exemption and remission arrangements which include those on low incomes. Details are in leaflet Health Circular 11, "Are you entitled to help with health costs", copies of which are available in the Library.

Aricept

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which area health authorities in England and Wales fund the prescription of the drug Aricept to treat Alzheimer's Disease. [68919]

Mr. Denham: Donepezil Hydrochloride (Aricept) was prescribed on the National Health Service in all health authorities in England over the period October 1997 to September 1998. Questions relating to Wales are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Health Authority Wages

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 324–26, on average wages, if he will list the source data used. [68963]

Mr. Denham: The table gives average wages for the 78 New Earnings Survey areas. In my answer of 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 324–26, the figures for Brent and Harrow and Bedfordshire should have read £388.73 and £364.66 respectively.

Afro-Caribbean Women (Health Needs)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of mortality rates of Afro-Caribbean women; and what plans he has for health programmes to address these womens' health needs. [68741]

Ms Jowell: Mortality rates are available not by ethnic origin but by country of birth. Compared to the national average for women aged 20–69 years, mortality from all causes in 1989–1992 in England and Wales was higher by more than 25 per cent. for those born in West Africa and lower by nearly 10 per cent. for those born in the Caribbean, but not significantly different for those born in East Africa.

Last year's Green Paper "Our Healthier Nation" set out the two over-arching aims for our health strategy: to improve health and to tackle health inequality, both of which are relevant to black and minority ethnic health. In addition, the Green Paper indicated that the strategy will focus on some key national targets—all of which are themselves relevant to different ethnic communities, supported by a range of locally-set targets based on local needs. This is particularly important for ethnic health since needs are not spread uniformly across the country. Each area needs to consider and tailor its responses to local circumstances. It is here where the local Health Improvement Programmes will be crucial to both assess and target specific health needs, such as those of Afro-Caribbean women.

Autism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) local health authorities provide placements for people with autism in communities in their area and (b) such placements there are, broken down by local health authority; and if he will make a statement. [68550]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available. It is for the local statutory authorities to determine the needs of people with autism in their area and provide appropriate placements.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with representatives of health authorities about the provisions for treatment of (a) children with (i) Kannens autism and (ii) autism spectrum disorder and (b) young persons and adults with autism spectrum disorder; and if he will make a statement. [68553]

Mr. Hutton: We have not had any discussions with representatives of health authorities. It is for the local statutory authorities to determine the needs of children with autism in their area and work together effectively to ensure that these needs are met.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what timetable he has set for the production of reports by the Working Group on CFS/ME and its sub-groups; [68563]

(2) by whom in his Department the reports produced by the CFS/ME Working Group and sub-groups will be considered; and what plans he has to publish them; [68562]

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the terms of reference of (a) the CFS/ME Working Group and (b) its children's sub-group whose membership was announced on 4 November 1998. [68561]

Ms Jowell: The terms of reference for the chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis (CFS/ME) working group are; to review management and practice in the field of CFS/ME with the aim of providing best practice guidance for professionals, patients and carers to improve the quality of care and treatment for people with CFS/ME. The children's sub-group has the same terms of reference although its primary focus will be issues specifically relating to children.

The work of the groups should be completed by the summer of 2000 and the final report published later that year. The report will be considered by the Chief Medical Officer, Professor Liam Donaldson. The Working Group was established by the previous CMO, Sir Kenneth Calman and its work has been taken forward by his successor, Professor Donaldson. The final report will be made freely available.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from mobile phone communications companies on the health aspects of the use of mobile phones. [69017]

Ms Jowell: Three mobile phone communications companies have made representations to the Department to discuss areas of common interest. In addition, Departmental officials have had discussions with the industry about possible research initiatives.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines his Department has issued on the potential health effects of the use of mobile phones; and what plans he has to commission further research in this area. [69016]

Ms Jowell: The Government obtain advice from the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) on the risks to health from exposure to electromagnetic fields, including those emitted by mobile phones. The NRPB's advice is that mobile phones currently used in the United Kingdom comply with their exposure guidelines (Restrictions on human exposure to static and time varying electromagnetic fields and radiation. Documents of the NRPB, 4, No 5,7–63 (1993)). Copies are available in the Library. These guidelines are intended to prevent acute adverse responses to increased heat load and elevated body temperature. The basis of these guidelines is the same as those of the International Commission on Non-Ionizing Radiation Protection. Both organisations agree that the alleged (or potential) non-thermal effects which have occasionally been reported should not form the basis of exposure restrictions.

Research into potential effects of microwaves such as those emitted by mobile phones is being undertaken on a worldwide basis. The Department is contributing to these international initiatives and is also supporting its own research programme. Research is also carried out at the NRPB.

Beta-interferon

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if a waiting list for beta-interferon treatment has been drawn up by the West Sussex Health Authority. [69182]

Mr. Denham: No.

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which ministers in his Department made use of (a) RAF and (b) chartered aircraft between 1 October 1998 and 31 January 1999; and if he will list the dates, destinations and costs of such flights. [69076]

Ms Jowell: There have been no occasions where a Department of Health Minister has used a Royal Air Force or privately chartered aircraft between 1 October 1998 and 31 January 1999.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from whom the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority has received applications for permission to conduct clinical trials of xenotransplantation; on what date each application was received; and for what types of procedure permission is being sought. [69292]

Mr. Hutton: To date, the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority (UKXIRA) has received one application which complies with the requirements set out in

"Guidance on making proposals to conduct xenotransplantation on human subjects".

In addition, one applicant has been advised to re-submit an application in accordance with the requirements described in the Guidance.

Information submitted to the UKXIRA is supplied in confidence. An announcement will be made if an application is approved.

GP Fundholding

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements he is making to abolish GP fundholding. [69658]

Mr. Denham: Further to the oral answer I gave on 2 February 1999, Official Report, column 711, the position is as follows. The current general practitioner fundholding schemes will be brought to an end on 31 March 1999 through secondary legislation. The Health Bill makes provision for the abolition of GP fundholding. A residual fundholding scheme, to be made by regulations under current legislation, will operate from 1 April until the first practicable date after the Health Bill receives Royal Assent.

SCOTLAND

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has provided to chairmen of local enterprise companies in Scotland on making public statements on political issues; and if he will make a statement. [67395]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 26 January 1999]: None. Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise delegate extensively the exercise of their powers and functions to local enterprise companies. Their activities are governed by the terms of their contractual relationships with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. LEC Board members are also expected to comply with the Code of Best Practice for Local Enterprise Companies Corporate Governance, which focuses on integrity, accountability and openness. From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Student Fees

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the income to be raised by fees paid by students resident in England, Wales and Northern Ireland for their attendance at the fourth year or subsequent years of first degree courses at Scottish universities or colleges in the current year and each of the next five years. [67500]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 January 1999]: Students subject to the requirement to make a contribution to fees will not be in the fourth year of a course at a Scottish university or college until academic year 2001–02. The income to be raised in respect of fourth year fees from English, Welsh and Northern Ireland students for academic years 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2000–01 is therefore zero. At current prices it has been estimated that contributions which will be paid by students domiciled in England, Wales and Northern Ireland will be approximately £2 million in academic year 2001–02 and thereafter. From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

McMillan Conversion Course

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, in relation to the McMillan two year open learning conversion course for second-level registered nurses (a) the level of funding provided, (b) the planned increase in funding and (c) the estimated number who will qualify each year; and if he will issue guidance to trusts on the selection of students for this course and on leave for attending. [67678]

Mr. Galbraith: The McMillan two-year open learning course is one of several different courses in Scotland for the conversion of second level to first level nurses. The Scottish Office funds some places on such courses through its contracts with Universities and Colleges for pre-registration nursing and midwifery education. However, education institutions have flexibility to decide, in the light of local demand, how many places to allocate to conversion courses and how many to other courses covered by their contracts. It is also for them to determine the nature of their second to first level conversion courses. Many do so through open learning, and some use the course published by McMillan.

The number of places taken up in 1998–99 and 1999–2000 will depend on the demand for second level conversion courses. During 1996–97, 274 second level nurses in Scotland completed conversion courses. In 1997–98, the number was 310. These figures include nurses funded by their employer or privately as well as those funded by The Scottish Office.

The only criteria required for entry to a second-level conversion course is that the candidate is a second level registered nurse. The nature of open learning is that students do not require leave to attend the course. They do, however, require to undertake a period of clinical experience. Most of this can be done in the area in which the second level nurse normally works.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional legislation, not currently before Parliament, was assumed in the production of his Department's spending allocation for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [68414]

Mr. Timms: There is a long-standing convention that legislative proposals for each year are not announced before the Queen's Speech at the start of the relevant Session.

Pensions Review

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations were received on the Pensions Review; and how many recommended an increase in the (a) level and (b) scope of the basic state pension. [68704]

Mr. Timms: A total of 2,228 responses were received by the Pensions Review. The information on the content of the responses is not available in the form requested. 661 of the responses raised the issue of the uprating of the basic state pension; and 1,002 raised other issues relating to the basic state pension.

Single Room Rent Provision

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of the single room rent provision for those aged under 25 years on (i) rent arrears and (ii) homelessness, on that age group. [68702]

Angela Eagle: Together with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Department has commissioned the London Research Centre to investigate Housing Benefit and the private rented sector. The study includes interviews with young people who have had their Housing Benefit restricted under the single room rent (SRR) rules, as well as with other tenants, landlords, Housing Benefit Officers and Rent Officers. The study has been conducted in six case study areas and will provide evidence on the effects of the SRR and on rent arrears, though not directly on homelessness, which is difficult to establish. The report is expected to be published in the Spring.

The Department has received a number of reports from outside organisations which present findings of studies into the impact of the single room rent provision. These reports are localised and they vary in their scope and quality. All these reports, together with the findings of a study funded by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation, are being considered by the Department.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals have been subject to the single room rent provision for those aged under 25 years in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [68699]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

As at 31 May 1997, 29,000 individuals aged under 25 years were subject to the single room rent provision, and of these 16,000 had their rent restricted. The May 1998 data will be published at the end of this month.

Housing Benefit Management Information System annual 1 per cent. sample taken at the end of May 1997.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received on the single room rent provision for those aged under 25 years; [68706]

(2) what plans he has to review the single room rent provision for those aged under 25 years; and if he will make a statement; [68700]

(3) what plans he has to meet with welfare and voluntary sector organisations to discuss the single room rent provision for under 25 year olds. [68826]

Angela Eagle: Representations about the single room rent (SRR) provision for under 25 year olds have been received from hon. Members, members of the public and a variety of voluntary and charitable organisations. We are reviewing with the Local Authority Associations the Housing Benefit rules with a view to simplifying and improving the scheme. The SRR rules form part of that review. We have already met with a number of these organisations to invite their views.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of the single room rent provision for those aged under 25 years on the take-up of employment by that group; [68703]

(2) what assessment he has made of the level of housing benefit fraud linked to the single room rent provision for those aged under 25 years; [68701]

(3) what assessment has been made of the number of persons who have changed accommodation as a result of the single room rent provision for those aged under 25 years. [68707]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available.

Pension Payments (Computer Difficulties)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many payments to private pension schemes have been delayed due to computer difficulties; how many payments have been delayed (a) up to three, (b) three to six, (c) six to nine, (d) nine to 12 and (e) over 12 months, indicating the size of the compensation payments for each of these groups; and if payments will take account of changes in the equity market. [68823]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

The calculation of the National Insurance Rebates contains an assumption that they are paid in the October following the end of the tax year for which they are due. Normally around 90 per cent. of payments have been made by that date, and a further 95 per cent. by December. This year by October, 14 per cent. had been paid, and by December, 46 per cent. Currently, 67 per cent. has been paid.

We recognise the need to pay compensation for payments that have been delayed after October and arrangements are in place to pay 0.5 per cent. per month for each month of delay. The November payments therefore included compensation at the rate of 0.5 per cent., the December payment at 1 per cent., the January payment 1.5 per cent. and the February payment 2 per cent. Approximately £15.3 million in compensation has been paid to occupational and personal pension schemes in respect of individual scheme members up to February 1999.

The level of compensation was discussed with the Government Actuary's Department who agreed that 0.5 per cent. per month represented a reasonable level of compensation given the prevailing market conditions in September 1998, and on the assumption that the arrangements put in place at that time were designed to cover a few months delay. This continues to be their view, and we have no plans to review this rate.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reform the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement. [68856]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Kidney) on 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 237.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff in the Benefits Agency have been employed for less than (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) one year and (d) two years. [68941]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 3 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many staff in the Benefits Agency have been employed for less than (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) one year and (d) two years.

The information you have asked for is included in the attached table.

As at 31 December 1998 the Agency employed 66,638 members of staff who had been employed for two years or more.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency permanent and fixed term appointment staff by length of service as at 31 December 1998

Length of service	Permanent and fixed-term contract	Casual staff
Less than 3 months	1,478	1,258
3 to 6 months	1,429	1,251
6 months to 1 year	2,342	1,093
1 to 2 years	1,718	291
Total	6,967	3,893

Note:

Figures are provisional and subject to change

Benefits System

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on implementing the policy in the Green Paper, "A New Contract for Welfare", on making the cost of the benefits system more transparent, indicating what further measures are planned in the current year. [69097]

Mr. Timms: The Green Paper proposed "greater transparency about entitlement and costs" as one of the measures of success in tackling fraud and error in Social Security. We are committed to making the public more aware of the cost of fraud and error. We will be publishing our strategy on combating fraud and error shortly.

Deprived Neighbourhoods

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on implementing the policy in the Green Paper, "A New Contract for Welfare", on introducing a better model for tackling effectively the linked problems of the most deprived neighbourhoods. [69099]

Angela Eagle: The Social Exclusion Unit's report "Bringing People Together: a national strategy for neighbourhood renewal" was published on 15 September and provided a detailed picture of the concentration of problems in poor neighbourhoods. The report proposed 18 Policy Action Teams to focus on specific areas, and their findings, the last of which is expected at the end of this year, will form the basis of a national strategy for neighbourhood renewal.

Ministers Flights

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which ministers in his Department made use of (a) RAF and (b) chartered aircraft between 1 October 1998 and 31 January 1999; and if he will list the dates, destinations and costs. [69078]

Mr. Timms: None.

NIRS2

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of how many pensioners whose income has been affected by delays in the implementation of the NIRS2 system will have died before they receive (a) repayment and (b) compensation where it is due; and in how many of these cases the estate will revert to the Treasury. [69297]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if widows who have had to choose between receiving widows' pension, or receiving retirement pension without access to their and their husband's full national insurance contribution records, as a result of delays to the implementation of NIRS2, will be allowed to change their decision once the system is fully operational. [69296]

Mr. Timms: Where a widow has had to make the choice between remaining in receipt of Widow's Benefit, transferring to Retirement Pension or deferring her pension to accrue increments based on incomplete information because of the NIRS2 problems, and her choice is shown to be disadvantageous to her when full details are known, she will be able to review her decision and revise her choice from the original date if she so wishes.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the indicator period set for each contributions-based benefit which the delay in payment of benefit due to the failure of the NIRS2 computer system must exceed in order for the possibility of compensation to be considered. [69298]

Mr. Timms: On Monday 1 February, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced a scheme to pay flat rate compensation of £10 to all Retirement Pensioners, Widows Benefit beneficiaries and Incapacity Benefit recipients who have suffered an unreasonable delay as a result of the problems with NIRS2.

Within the normal Departmental Compensation Scheme, the indicator period which has to be exceeded before payment of compensation is considered is as follows:

	Period
Retirement Pension	8 months
Widows Benefit	4 months
Incapacity Benefit	4 months
Jobseeker's Allowance	3 months

Information on the indicator periods for all benefits is contained in leaflet GL22 "Tell us your comments and complaints", which is available from Benefit Agency offices.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps the Contributions Agency plans to take to recover the cost of compensating benefit recipients who have lost out as a result of delays in the implementation of the NIRS2 system, from Andersen Consulting. [69300]

Mr. Timms: We are considering all appropriate steps within the terms of the NIRS2 agreement.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost to the Contributions Agency of compensating all benefit recipients who have lost out as a result of delays in the implementation of the NIRS2 system. [69299]

Mr. Timms: Full details of the additional compensation scheme announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security on Monday 1 February have not yet been finalised. Our best estimate is that the costs will be between £3 million and £4 million. Estimates of administration costs and additional amounts payable through the existing Departmental arrangements will be made when details of the scheme are finalised.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 324

SESSION 1998–99

25th January—4th February 1999

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index to the daily parts and weekly Hansard is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Contributions by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Significant rulings and statements are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements'.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, res = resolution, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
